A 35-7 victory last year was Villanova's largest margin of victory in 1979. In that game the Cats sent in 11 running backs to pile up 315 yards rushing. Willie Sydnor, who caught six passes for 98 yards, led a passing attack which netted 169 yards. Sydnor also returned a kickoff 64 yards for a touchdown and gathered 215 total yards.

NOTES: Despite six lost fumbles and two interceptions, the Wildcats drummed up 366 yards in total offense against Richmond . . . Dan Greene had his best game at QB, completing six-of-nine passes for 101 yards and one interception . . . LB Anthony Griggs made four solo tackles and 19 assisted tackles for a game high . . . It was VU's first home-opener loss since 1977 (Youngstown State, 13-10, ending a six-game unbeaten streak) . . . The Wildcats have lost nine fumbles in two games; they lost 14 all last year . . . O'Brien has 3,591 yards in career total offense. He is within striking distance of third place in career rushing. He has 1,505 yards, behind Gene Filipski's 1,596 and Pete D'Alonzo's 1,560 distance record, held by Gus Fernandez in the Dayton game in 1976 . . . WR Willie Sydnor, who was 9th in the NCAA in punt returns . . . PK Chuck Buskbeck's missed field goal attempt which bounced off the crossbar from 46 yards would have tied the modern long last week, is sure to move up having increased his average from 10.0 to 13.8 after the Richmond game.

"We've improved from the Maryland game. You don't gain 400 yards and not get any better."

Women's Cross Country

By KERRY LYNCH

In their season opener last Saturday, the Villanova women's track team was forced to battle three of nature's toughest elements: heat, humidity and hills. Although the team lost to West Chester State, the meet was not altogether disappointing.

Coach Thompson and newly-appointed Assistant Coach Val Alford cited the freshmen performances as promising. Finishing seventh overall on the 5,000-meter course in 20:49 was freshman Donna Beers. Beverly Reilly and Carol Gilsinger took ninth and tenth places, respectively, finishing second and third for Villanova. Reilly and Gilsinger are returning varsity cross country runners from last year's Eastern Championship team. Closing in rapidly were freshmen Eva Marie Berardi and Jan Wiher who placed 11 and 12, finishing within one second of each other.

West Chester won the dual meet with the least number of points. The final score stood West Chester 15, Villanova 49. Completing the course first in a time of 19:30 was Julie Blanchet, with teammate Lisa Young only 10 seconds behind.

With the fine performance turned in by the freshmen and returning lettermen to stabilize the squad, Coach Thompson is "looking forward to a successful season."

Freshmen Spark Track Future

Editor's Note: In order to present a cohesive story line in this article, we have only interviewed three freshmen recruits from outside the United States. Next week we will feature the two local freshmen recruited for Villanova's track team.

By KERRY LYNCH

Villanova's men's track team is known all over the country and around the world. It is written about in a variety of publications. What more can be said of this championship team? Perhaps something has been found in the freshmen recruits from outside the states.

The track team roster now lists seven runners who are not United States citizens. Three of these are freshmen. This is indicative of the trend in American universities to recruit athletes from anywhere as long as they can help the team. The international element here at Villanova is, however, unique. The foreign athletes here become full-time members of the student body. In the words of easy-going freshman Marcus O'Sullivan, "running for Villanova is every young athlete's ambition." Marcus is an eighteen-year-old from County Cork, Ireland. His track talents range from 800 to 5,000 meters. He was a member of the Irish team at the World Championship Cross Country Meet. Stressing the high level of competition in the states, O'Sullivan said "It will be harder to make the Villanova team than it was to make the Irish National Team."

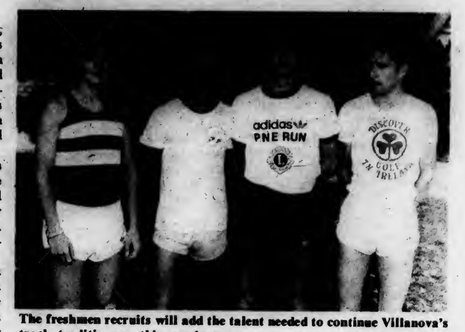
Brian O'Keefe comes from Dublin, Ireland, bringing with him such glories as two-time member of the Irish Team at the World Cross-Country Championships and National High School Champion in the 5,000 meters. Although this is his first time in the United States, he is familiar with Villanova through his cousin, Eamonn Coughlan, a highly rated runner here several years ago.

Serious and sincere, O'Keefe is surprising with his comments on life in America, which he finds "routine." He observes Villanova students are friendly and outgoing yet "competitive in their fields of study."

For self-assured Ken Lucks, who has "been in the States tons of times," Villanova is not such a different experience. An 800- and 1500- meter runner from Vancouver, British Columbia, he says "Canada and the U.S. are so much alike, only Canada's second language and size separate us."

What is it about Villanova's mythical track team? Is it made up of compulsive runners who tell time by a stop watch and wear Nikes to a formal? Certainly not. And these freshmen are no exception.

Although O'Keefe admits that it is hard to settle in to this "fast moving world and big motor ways," he is anxious to do just that. O'Sullivan, who is already sporting a Villanova T-shirt, is also looking forward to making friends and running indoor track. Lucks anticipates a year of meeting new friends and being able to "see and do different things." Each runner likes the people he has met, especially their roommates.



The freshmen recruits will add the talent needed to continue Villanova's track tradition on this year's team. Dave Coskey Photo

Villanova has a different angle on things. Although as O'Keefe admits, "Athletes thrive on scholarships to the states," at Villanova they cannot thrive on muscle alone. Brian, Ken and Marcus are here to run, to learn and to have a good time. They are aware of the Villanova track tradition and are proud that they will become a part of it. They are glad of their opportunity to be educated in the United States and they want to be Villanovans in the true sense of the word.

Steinbrenner's Antics Spark Antagonism

By DEAN RIZZO

In recent years, professional sports have been riddled with eccentric personalities, not the least of whom is New York Yankee owner George Steinbrenner.

Editorial

The latest of George's antics involved a controversial call in a game between the Yankees and Orioles this past August 8 with the score tied 2-2 and Baltimore's designated hitter Benny Ayala at first base and no one out, Doug DeCinces lofted a fly ball to left field which Yank Bobby Murcer appeared to catch. Third base umpire Durwood Merrill ruled no catch as this eventually produced two more Oriole runs and ultimately led to a 5-2 Baltimore victory.

Steinbrenner, who was in Tampa, Fla. at the time, protested vehemently to the American League office and issued a statement as follows: "Baseball men who saw the game told me that the ball was clearly caught." In other words, as umpire Merrill hustled toward the play in left field, Steinbrenner was questioning the call, 1400 miles away.

His other notable tantrum took place after an eleven-day stretch which saw his Yankees drop six of eight games to the hated Orioles and enabled Baltimore to pull within 2-1/2 games of first place in the American League East pennant race. This time George decided to pick on his own manager, Dick Howser, for making "several mistakes" in the final game of the eight-game stretch.

First of all, Dick Howser may have made some mistakes in that last game. However, it seems unfair to make public mistakes by a rookie manager, especially when he has in fact led his team to the best record in the majors.

Right now, the Yankees are almost a cinch to finish first in their division, which will probably keep George happy for the time being. It is a shame that a team as tradition-rich as the Yankees has an owner who treads through mine fields of controversy with such reckless abandon. True, few have the shrewdness needed to put together a team as awesome as the Yankees. These are the Bronx Bombers, so let's all rise and give George a Bronx cheer.

CATS SUCCUMB TO GLASSBORO STATE

By JERRY VENTRESCA

Villanova's soccer team opened their 1980 season at Glassboro State Saturday, losing 5-1 with sophomore Brian Barr tallying the only V.U. score. The Wildcats, coming off an 8-7-1 record last year, trailed 1-0 to the 1979 Division III runner-ups after the first half but were outscored four goals to one in the second 45 minutes.

Barr, a left wing, scored after Glassboro State had accumulated a 4-0 advantage with under 15 minutes remaining in the contest.

Pete Jirak, who started and played the entire game for the Wildcats, is unlikely to start Wednesday when Villanova displays the renovated stadium to Textile in a 3:00 p.m. game. Last week Textile, a traditionally tough opponent and ranked 17 in the country, defeated twelth ranked Hartwick, 2-0.

Spiders Ruin Opener

Turnovers Mark Initial Defeat on New Astroturf Field

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcats committed eight turnovers Saturday to help the University of Richmond Spiders to a 21-7 victory in recently renovated Villanova Stadium. The loss dropped the Cats record to 0-2, while Richmond improved to 2-0 with their first road victory in their last twenty tries.

"Turnovers were the whole story," explained Villanova Head Coach Dick Bedesem. "When you have eight turnovers, you can't beat the Little Sisters of the Poor." The Cats lost six of ten fumbles and had two passes intercepted.

The Cats came out roaring with a score on a 40-yard touchdown strike from senior quarterback Pat O'Brien to wide receiver Willie Sydnor with only 1:50 gone in the game. That turned out to be the only tally of the game for Villaova however, as the offense soon began its long string of mistakes. The Spiders couldn't get on the board for the rest of the first half either, as the determined Wildcat defense staged a goal line stand at the Nova one-yard line, and then ended the half with defensive tackle Howie Long's block of a 21-yard field goal attempt.

The second half proved to be the Cats' downfall as their costly turnovers began to register on the scoreboard. Richmond scored three touchdowns during eleven-minute span behind ju quarterback Steve Krainock snatch the victory from Villan Krainock, a brilliant passer led the nation's junior colleg passing last year before tr ferring to Richmond, threw tou down passes of five and 25 ya

The last Spider score registered on a one-yard burst junior Barry Redden.

First year Head Coach Sehaly of Richmond was ple with his team's effort: "We c out in the second half and pl more consistently, and in fourth quarter we dominated game."

As for the Wildcats, they regroup and be ready for a t Massachusetts squad tomor Coach Bedesem summed it up when he said, "Right now going to have to get off our b and build some momentun. W going to be winners and I hone believe it."

The kickoff receiving duo of Willie Sydnor (21) and Dave Martin (49) have returned the ball 83 yards in only 2 games this season.

Intramural Football Redesigned

By ROY MITA

The coins have been flipped, the sides have been picked and the ball is on the tee for the kick off of the 1980 intramural football league.

This year's league consists of fifty teams divided into four divisions. The top four teams from each division will be invited to the play-offs, to be held on the astroturf in the stadium.

Steve Cole, director of men's intramural athletics and Pete Daley, co-football commissioner, both feel that last year's returning champion DTD, along with Joint Effort, Wally's Gators, SPE and Kings Court are the teams to look for throughout the season.

The ball clubs will be composed of a twenty-man squad from which nine players will participate on the field at a time. The style of football played is flag, which simply means four flags are attached to a belt worn by the players. To stop the forward advancement of the ball carrier a flag must be torn from his belt. Upon the snap of the ball, there is an automatic rush with a five man blocking line.

For the first time this year, a women's flag football league has been created. Several teams have already handed in their rosters and others have till September 22 to do so. Each team will be composed of twelve members, six of which will be on the grid at a time. The actual rules of the league haven't yet been finalized.

Football Commissioner Pete Daley commented, "This year's league is the most organized and competitive since I've been here."

The Delts climbed through the highly-competitive intramural football playoffs to be named last year's champs.

Cats Continue Commitment

By PATRICK FLYNN

It takes a lot of deep thought and imagination to show optimism about Villanova sports this particular week. The memory of the Wildcat gridders' loss to Richmond last Saturday lingers like a bad tailgate hangover on a Sunday afternoon. On the scale of emotions, this one ranked as disappointing-to-frustrating, bordering on humiliating.

Ten fumbles . . . A quarterback shuttle that never seemed to get a hold of things . . . A loss to a team that went 0-for-1979 and quite seriously considered dropping football altogether . . . Bungling the home opener in front of the class of '84.

But didn't the turf look nice?

Therein lies the optimism. A new playground, equipped with a brand new track and just waiting to be surrounded by lights, is a symptom of Villanova's feverish desire to remain a major university in the realm of collegiate athletics.

While many schools find themselves de-emphasizing sports, Villanova seems to be working to keep up a healthy program without disrupting the limits of money and resources. While Catholic schools in particular may be having trouble keeping pace, Villanova has made the commitment not to give up.

And, as for the short-term concerns, that football team has plenty of talent and hopefully has all of that sloppiness out of the way now. It should bounce back tomorrow.

Getting back to the point, that gorgeous red track is also a clue as to where VU might be heading. Observers have often worried about the future of Villanova track, one of this school's greatest traditions and sources of pride and publicity. Jumbo Elliott isn't going to be here forever, and many had feared that tradition wouldn't be enough to sustain the track program in years to come when better facilities would drive would-be Wildcats to other schools. The new Rubaturf surface is a step in the right direction.

And then there's the Big East. With the opening of the 1980-81 basketball season, Villanova will find itself right in the middle of the most exciting new developments in college basketball in many a year. It's a super league, with traditional powerhouses and the potential for the support that can surpass all others.

So don't get bogged down by last week's torture. The future can only be brighter.

Wildcats Wind Up for Minutemen

Today the Wildcats travel to Amherst, Massachusetts, in preperation for tomorrow's matchup against the Minutemen. Massachusetts has been strong in the Division IAA level the two years Head Coach Bob Pickett has been there. Pickett is 15-8, coming off a 6-4 season last year.

Starting fullback Tom Mirray had 59 yards rushing last year and starting tailback Garry Pearson had 169. The offensive line is inexperienced but typically large — an average of almost 240 pounds. In addition, Pearson was the leading Division IAA kick returner with a 29.0 average. Safety Bob Manning added an 11.0 yard average on punt returns.

Defensively, a veteran team with four of its top five tacklers return. The Minutemen's top unit held Dartmouth scoreless for a half in a controlled scrimmage last Saturday before the Big Green proved their reserves were better to win, 20-0.

"I think we've improved all the way from the Maryland game. You don't gain 400 yards and not get any better."

"All I know about Massachusetts is that they run out of the I. It's a new team , so we'll have to go in and try to be open on our thinking. We'll try to be balanced defensively and keep the ability to adjust as the game goes on."

The Wildcats have won the last three games against the Minutemen and hold a 4-2 series edge.

Cardinal Krol Dedicates Center

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

John Cardinal Krol, of the Archdiocese on Philadelphia, presided at the Blessing and Dedication Ceremony of the Villanova University Connelly Center.

Dave Coskey Photo

"In dedicating the Connelly Center, we can show the deep gratitude the archdiocese, Augustinian fathers, dedicators, and students have for the self-sacrifice and service given to the future of the Connelly Center," stated Cardinal Krol.

"As a Catholic University, Villanova now possesses a realistic sense of a special character of faith and culture," stressed Cardinal Krol.

"Three distinct ingredients develop this identity. The academic and religious aspects have been established. The new Connelly Center is the final ingredient serving as a social and cultural center," added Cardinal Krol.

John Cardinal Krol, with his clergy, blessed the Connelly Center cornerstone and the special cross designed by Brother Richard Cannulli, of the Villanova art department.

The cross, hanging in the main lobby, received a "blessing of virtue and glory to remain for all times," said Father President Driscoll. Driscoll felt this significant blessing also "imposes a blessing upon all who enter and are associated with the Connelly Center."

The Ceremony included a liturgy as a public recognition. "Josephine and John Connelly not only helped in the building of the center, but endowed an inspiration and a witness to be followed," said Cardinal Krol. "The Connelly's are able to bear witness to their faith through their generous gift."

"The Connelly Center is an answer to a prayer. It was desperately needed," expressed Father Joseph Duffey. "It is beautifully suited to its purpose." The Connelly Center draws the student activities and surrounding halls together, creating a kind of plaza. "It is a beautifully situated, and I love the way all of the students gather around," said Father Edward Hamel, O.S.A.

Henry Amoroso, student body president, presented a gift of appreciation to Cardinal Krol. He graciously accepted the visor and apron, with the Connelly Center inscription.

Those who attended the Blessing and Dedication Ceremony included the Connelly Family, Villanova deans, dedicators, and students. The Crowd enjoyed a "truly joyous occasion," as Father Driscoll stated.

The Villanova Men Singers and the Villanova Orchestra performed throughout the Ceremony. The Fraternity LXA and the sorority DKN were available to usher, seat, and assist any guests.

A reception in the Villanova Center followed Cardinal Krol's final blessing of the Connelly Center.

Following the death of a Villanova freshman student who was attempting to cross the railroad tracks last October 1, Amtrak renovated the tunnel passageway by enlarging the catch basins and drains below it to prevent flooding. At the time of the accident the tunnel was impassable due to flooding.

At an October 11 meeting, representatives from Villanova, Amtrak, PennDot and Radnor Township met and discussed several proposals to improve pedestrian safety. Suggestions included an elevated footbridge over the train track and an in-

Officials Split On Drinking Age

MARY ANNE GRANGER

Nineteen would probably be a d age," commented State resentative John Alden, a 1966 nova graduate, discussing the nsylvania drinking age law, e State Representative Steven nd, also a Villanova graduate, d, "I oppose lowering the king age, and will always be nst it."

n Alden, state representative.

epresentatives Alden and nd agree that the legal king age in Pennsylvania, ch is 21, will not change in the seeable future," but disagree he dangers of drinking at age

Nineteen I would not be op- d to," said Alden, and ex- ned, "At 18, you start getting high school age. Nineteen dn't be as bad because you're in high school."

"Twenty-one has always been the age of majority, so 21 was the age picked," said Alden. "Eighteen has now become the age of majority, but it is just too easy, with peer pressure, for 18 year-olds to provide it to their peers."

"I would hope most 19 year-olds can handle the situation," commented Alden. "I could be wrong and I would be willing to be proved wrong."

Alden feels studies concerning the dangers of drinking at age 19 are not always reliable, although, he noted, "I think they can show a trend sometimes."

Discussing the problem of college students going off campus to drink when they cannot drink on campus, Alden said he is not in favor of exempting colleges from liquor laws. "You will still have the problem of students leaving the campus," he said.

Alden sees "no change at all and probably not for a long time," in the present drinking age; "There is no movement to change it and anytime you deal with alcohol, the legislature is unwilling to make changes."

"Alcohol is looked upon as a very tough issue — always scrutinized very thoroughly and that is why a bill would run into trouble in the legislature," continued Alden.

Asked what action people interested in seeing the drinking age lowered can take, Alden said, "Write to your representatives, make arguments, provide statistics. That's always helpful. But no matter what you and I argue about, you still have the problem of getting it through the legislature. You're talking about alcohol. It's a drug subject to abuse and being subject to abuse, there is more willingness on people's part to try to protect others."

Alcohol is looked upon as a very tough issue — always scrutinized very thoroughly, and that is why a bill would run into trouble in the legislature.

John Alden, State Representative

"I feel at this point that age 19 is acceptable, but before I would vote for a change, I would want to see the bill in its final form. I don't commit myself to any bill until I see it," concluded Alden.

"I think that what we are doing to a certain extent is preventing younger people and innocent motorists from traffic-related fatalities," said Representative Steven Freind, explaining his opposition to lowering the Pennsylvania drinking age.

Friend is also against exempting colleges from state drinking age laws. "Just because people are going to violate laws does not mean it should be permitted," he explained. "If there is something you think is wrong, just because it would be more convenient to do something else does not mean you should." But, said Freind, "I don't have a problem with on-campus drinking if you are 21."

Freind feels the legal drinking age will remain at 21 for at least the next 10 years. "Pennsylvania is basically a rural state. People don't realize that it is very bible-beltish and that is reflected in the votes of the legislators," observed Freind.

Asked about the current lack of any bill to change the drinking age, Freind said, "We've had them before. They always go on and die in committee. Until bills are acted on by the committees they aren't noticed. I can guarantee you that in this term, which ends November 30, there will be no change in the drinking age.

Freind does not believe his constituents are in favor of lowering the drinking age, and he noted, "I sent out questionnaires and 87 percent of my constituents answering the questionnaires votes against it."

Freind also feels college students have exhibited little interest in seeing the law changed. "Two years ago, I had a forum on it. I sent out notices to all high schools and college student body presidents and not one showed up. That's got to show me that it's a dead issue," Freind commented.

"If I was in that age group and was concerned about the issue, I would have made damn sure I came to that forum. It's the people who care strongly enough who make their views known to the legislature."

Liddy Lecture Planned

By JOHN COUZENS

he Villanova Union has signed Gordon Liddy, the mastermind the Watergate break-in, to k at the field house on Thurs- November sixth at 8:00 p.m. hris Cherry, chairperson for ures, is responsible for bring- Liddy to Villanova. Cherry "Liddy's controversial back- nd will be intensified because s ability to speak freely about ergate now that the statute of tations has expired for the ergate hearings."

. Justin Green, a professor of ical science at Villanova, "controversial figures like y are good for Villanova." n further states, "it is good ollege students to be exposed l types of controversy; it helps to form their own judge- s in life."

iddy's background is very un- l. For example, he ate a rat to come his fear of rats, and urned himself in order to become more of a man," said Lucy Gorski, program director for the Union.

Convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy will speak here in November.

Liddy was a special agent for the F.B.I. He also served in the special investigative unit "ODESSA," later to become known as the "Plumbers." He then became General Counsel to the Committee to Re-elect the President, from which he directed the Watergate break-in.

Gorski said, "Liddy's lecture will also be interesting because he will speak of Watergate from a viewpoint that is very different from that of the American public."

Liddy's refusal to betray his associates during the Watergate hearings resulted in his subsequent imprisonment for four and a half years, including 106 days of solitary confinement.

Senate Convenes For First Meeting

By ANNE MARIE URBINATO

Election of Henry Amoroso, student body president, as senate treasurer and matters of correspondence by Father President Driscoll concerning senate legislation were among the developments of the first University Senate meeting held last Friday at 4:00 p.m. in the Connelly Center.

Amoroso was nominated by Father Burnell, vice-president for Financial Affairs and seconded by Dean of Commerce and Finance Alvin A. Clay. Amoroso, however, was unable to accept the nomination at the time since he arrived at the meeting at 4:25 p.m. He apologized for his tardiness and explained that he was picking up a clock to be donated by the Student Government at the dedication ceremony for the Connelly family.

Letters of correspondence by Father President Driscoll were also on the agenda. Among these concerned the barbed-wire resolution initiated last year by former Student President P.J. Winterhalter. Driscoll said he was "willing to explore alternatives" presented by the Senate.

Other correspondence dealt with the Campus Safety Resolution in which Driscoll said he would "look for considerations and recommendations for a proposed policy statement concerned with the particular traffic and parking on campus."

Before the meeting was adjourned, Byron Peebles, the university college senator posed the matter of the lighting situation on campus. Father Deegan responded by explaining that the new lighting improvements were in effect and have already been installed between the Connelly Center and Sheehan Hall.

Father Deegan's view of the five-year plan has been to make the Student Life Office effectively co-curricular.

Professor Analyzes Debate

By BILL COPPERTHWAITE

In the race for the Presidency, Republican Ronald Reagan and Independent John Anderson faced off in a television debate. Dr. Harry Strack, an associate professor of political science, analyzed the debate.

Strack believes that Carter not showing up will hurt him because it will not give the people information to make them decide to vote for him.

Many people wondered if Governor Reagan was wise in debating Representative Anderson without President Carter, but Strack disagreed. Reagan had trouble with slips and in the debate with Anderson, a formidable opponent, "Reagan did two things." Strack said, "First, he reassured people and second, he helped make Anderson a strong candidate which hurt Carter."

"Reagan's style is Presidental, laid back, and relaxed," Strack said." No images of a bomb crazy or shooting from the hip candidate. It makes it difficult for Carter to paint such a picture of Reagan."

Anderson needed to prove that he was a viable candidate, and according to Strack, "Anderson improved his chances from 1,000 -1 to 900-1," Strack said that Anderson has no endorsements of labor groups, big business or any other special interest, except the New York Liberal Party.

"Forensically speaking, Anderson used the techniques of debating better," Strack pointed out. "Reagan paused during answers but was more personable. Anderson, using statistics, came across like a Villanova Professor and Reagan, telling stories, was like your next door neighbor."

Both candidates handled the disappearance of President Carter "effectively. They told the people that something was wrong in America, but they did not gang up on him since he was not there to defend himself."

Strack's biggest surprise from the debates was the talk on issues. "There were no personalized attacks," he commented.

"How the debates effect the election is unknown since there are so many outside factors, like the economy and Iran," Starck said.

On the problem of other debates in 1980, Strack is unsure. He said that future debates this year or any other year will only be held if the candidates think they will be of benefit.

Connelly Center Position Opens

The Connelly Center Board of Directors announces the opening of a student position on the Board.

The Connelly Center Board of Directors is composed of 13 members, 4 of whom are students. All Faculty, Staff, and Student members of the Board are members by petition. The Villanova students on the Board represent the largest single contigency on the Board.

The four student positions on the Board include one Commuter and one Resident as well as two from the student body at large. Student positions include two two-year terms and two one-year terms.

The purposes and responsibilities of the Connelly Center Board of Directors are designed to develop policy for and act as the guiding force for certain aspects of the Connelly Center. Its purposes and responsibilities include developing policies and recommending procedure for the use of the facility, conducting programs, and aiding in the evaulation of the Centers Food Service Program.

The Connelly Center Board of Directors Standing Committee on Nominations shall nominate candidates through a petitioning process. The criteria used through the petition process are those found in the ByLaws of the CCBD. These criteria include that students achieve a "C+" (2.5) average in all College and University level work prior to and throughout their term on the Board. Students must also be registered in 12 or more credits of course work per semester except that graduate students, University College students, and students in special programs and Seniors in their last undergraduate year shall be exempt from 12 credit requirements. Students must also be in good disciplinary standing with the University.

The Nominations Committee and the Connelly Center Board of Directors also require that students exhibit leadership abilities through past and present University related achievement or through past high School related achievements or that they exhibit the potential for related leadership abilities. It also follows the criteria set by the CCBD that petitioning students be interested in the goals of the Connelly Center as well as the goals of the University at large.

The Board of Directors is interested in filing a one year position from the student body at large (On Campus Resident, Off Campus Resident, Commuter) with a person interested in spending 7-10 hours a month on CCB business serving as a Board member. Students contemplating petitioning for this position hopefully plan to approach the position as a learning experience.

Students planning to petition the Board regarding the pos may find applications and cri concerning the position at Connelly Center Information or at the Office of the Vice-P dent for Student Life (Dough Hall). All petitions must be by Wednesday October 8th a Connelly Center Administra Offices.

Jukes To Jam On Campus

By BILL McKERNAN

The Villanova Union signed Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes to appear on campus on October 17.

The Union hopes that this concert event will have a greater turnout than its previous concerts.

Lucy Gorski, program director of the Union, cited lack of adequate planning and limited publicity as the main reasons for the failures in the past. Cost was another factor in the determination of a loss or a success. She estimated that the total cost range of this production was between 17 and 19 thousand dollars.

The event will start at 8 p.m. in the Field House. The price of tickets is $5.50 and $6.50 for Villanova and Rosemont students and $6.50 and $7.50 for the general public. All seating is reserved.

The number of available seats is 3300. In order for the Union to break even, 75 per cent of the seats must be sold.

"We don't expect to sell 3300 seats," stated Gorski. "I think this one will probably go over what the other concerts were like."

When asked about future concerts, Gorski replied that there were no definite plans at this time, but she would like to have at least one more concert this semester. She also added that all interested people should come to the Union office with any suggestions for future concerts.

Bridge

vestigation of traffic patterns as well as the crosswalk.

Villanova filed the request to the PUC in Harrisburg, which in turn served a copy of the proposal to each of the respondents involved: Amtrak, Conrail, Septa, PennDOT, Radnor Township and Delaware County. Each of the parties involved claim that the present crossing facilities are adequate, hence the need for a hearing to decide the issue.

According to Dave Murdoch, a Septa official, "It'll probably take months to conjure a solution." Concerning Septa's involvement Murdoch explained, "Amtrak owns the line train system, Conrail operates the commuter services and we pay Conrail to run through Amtrak.

"As I understand it, no one took title of the present bridge crossing and this is what may be creating the problem of who is responsible for what."

A representative from Conrail claims that it has "minimal responsibility" in the safe operation of the system. "It's a lot of legal procedures; the PUC will have to decide."

Last spring, the PUC held a field hearing to determine the area to be discussed in the formal hearing. Fr. Deegan said the main job of the PUC is "to look at the area, determine what can be done and who will pay.

"Villanova does not own any of the property over there. The university would like to see a safe passageway. It would not just be for the students; however, it is true that the students do a great deal of traveling on the trains."

News Reacts to Students Parties

MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Management at the Sugartown apartment complex may reduce the number of buildings available to students to one or two of the three it currently sets aside.

Most of the apartments in the different buildings are rented by Villanova students.

"The decision depends on how it goes this year," said Mrs. Jones, manager of the complex. "It depends on whether the students accept the responsibility of living an apartment."

Jones states that there have been problems with the student tenants, particularly with their parties.

"We've received complaints not only from other tenants and from private homes," Jones said. "They complain about the noise, the overcrowded parking situation, a lack of responsibility and vandalism."

Jones believes students are the cause of the vandalism. "It's within the college building," she said.

"Uninvited guests who just show up at parties do the most damage," said one Villanova senior who lives at Sugartown. "The vandalism is done mostly by people who don't live here."

According to the senior, management has sent a letter to all student tenants banning large scale parties and requiring that all gatherings be kept to a reasonable size. Any tenant breaking these regulations will be subject to eviction.

The regulations for parties and the possible reduction of student buildings are part of an overall policy being instituted by the management, which is new this year.

New Meal Cards Adopted

By KATHI IANNACONE

Realizing that the previous system was both antiquated and flawed, the food service department has installed a new, computerized method for checking meal cards.

The entire network is based in the main food service office located in Dougherty Hall. Each cafeteria's card-reading box is connected to the main complex.

Every resident's name is stored within a computer. This computer is programmed in such a way that when cards are read, it records the number of meals eaten in each separate cafeteria as well as the total number of meals eaten on campus. Each time a card is pushed into the reading box, the number of the card is stored in the computer's memory. This guarantees that each person eats only one meal.

The new meal card system is now in effect.

The card itself looks similar to those used in the past. Each person's picture, meal number, and cafeteria specification color will appear on the card. The meal number is magnetically coded on the back of each card. Any contact with magnetic barriers will decode the card and it will not pass through the computer.

Food service employees took part in a simple training program during Orientation week. A representative from Ardi products instructed the checkers on the proper way of inserting the card into the machine, resetting the counters, reading the pass and invalid lights on the machine, and dealing with any problems that might arise.

Due to the installation of new equipment and the training program, this year's cost was substatial. Members of the food service department insist, however, that in the long run they will be saving money.

Each person will be issued one card per year. In the case of a lost card, a $10.00 fee will be charged, a new picture taken, and a new card ordered. Only one card per year is made; this number is sufficiently less than the four held on reserve in the past years.

One advantage of the system occurs when someone loses his card. The person's number is programmed into the computer as invalid. Should anyone try to use the card, the machine would immediately register a no pass sign and the card would be retrieved. This method of invalidation will also help higher authorities track down any student for any reason.

Beginner or advanced. By studying Spanish only, four hours a day, four days a week, for fourteen weeks, you will earn sixteen semester hours of college Spanish credit. (That's four semesters worth of college Spanish credit!) The cost is about the same as one semester in a U.S. college, $2,589.

Whether you are a beginner or an advanced student, your Spanish studies will be greatly enhanced by opportunities not available in a conventional classroom. Standardized test scores of our students show that their Spanish language skills are better overall than those obtained by American students who completed standard two year Spanish programs in United States colleges and universities.

This is a rigorous academic program lasting from Feb. 1 to June 1, 1981. The cost of $2,589 includes round trip jet fare to Seville, Spain, from Toronto, Canada, as well as room, board, and tuition. Government grants and loans apply for eligible students.

You will live with a Spanish family.

FULLY ACCREDITED.

Style, No Substance or Ideas

The Language of Politics

The question and answer format has suffered greatly since the time of Plato's dialogues. Now, as it was illustrated Sunday night, it is possible to debate with practically no exchange of ideas at all.

The first question asked in the Presidential debates Sunday should have been a cupcake for John Anderson, had he answered it. "What unpopular measures would you take to help the economy?" Isn't John Anderson the man who became popular by taking unpopular stands? But Anderson hurled into his oft-repeated campaign speech on the economy. His conclusion: he would support fiscal restraint. If fiscal restraint isn't popular, it's because to the people, fiscal restraint is a vague and meaningless term.

Answering the same question, Ronald Reagan cleverly twisted the meaning of the word "popular." "The only unpopular measures would be unpopular with the government," he said, before launching into his oft-repeated campaign speech. Comparing the two candidates' performances, it was more disappointing for the Anderson supporter who cares to analyze it. It isn't that Anderson did "worse" than Reagan, but more was expected from him. One might go through the texts of both statements, and show the differences between Anderson and Reagan's stands, but the form of their speeches were exactly the same.

In his essay "Politics and the English Language," George Orwell noted that "it is broadly true that political writing is bad writing." But, he added "where this is not true, it will generally be found that the writer is some kind of rebel, expressing his private opinions, and not a 'party line'" Orthodoxy, of whatever colour, seems to demand a lifeless, imitative style."

Hadn't so many hoped to vote for Anderson precisely because of his unorthodoxy?

Instead, we hear from him, as from the other candidates, endless jargon, and buzz-words.

During the debate for example, the candidates were asked a question about religion and politics — as it related to an issue such as abortion. Neither candidate's answer is worth repeating, since both can be found in any piece of anti-or pro-abortion propoganda printed in the past decade. Observing the identical form of their answers, one can see how extremes meet.

Did either candidate create one vivid image, one memorable picture to contemplate while drifting to sleep that night. Was either candidate capable of expressing a long-sought truth — something that one could feel was exactly right.

Again, orthodoxy demands a lifeless style. It's no mistake that many feel the most moving speech made during the campaign was the one written for Ted Kennedy at the Democratic Convention. Could he have given that speech had he still been a popular candidate?

We don't demand that our candidates be excellent. We want them instead to just not make any mistakes. Both John Anderson and Ronald Reagan spent four hours before the debate on the podium, practicing their smiles and testing their microphones. It is almost a joke to analyze their language as we've tried to do. The debate was wholly style. One has nothing else to analyze.

From their styles, one might learn one thing. No matter who is the best presidential candidate in 1980, who could deny that Ronald Reagan is the most appropriate. How calm and gentle, how practiced before the cameras was Ronald Reagan.

John Anderson, however, accustomed to speaking at Iowa rall sounded forceful, a bit too much so. Joe McGinniss, author of The Sell of the President, the story of Richard Nixon's 1968 television campa would have said Anderson was too hot for the cool medium. But oth would have said that neither of the candidates was too hot at all. Judg them on their styles this way, television commentators tried to tally e candidates score for the debates.

If George Orwell had watched the debate on his telescreen, er, t vision — he wouldn't have hunted for mistakes in style. With a bit humor, he would have noted the hoarse quality of each of their candida voice. "When one watches some tired hack on the platform mechanic repeating the familiar phrases . . . one often has a curious feeling that is not watching a live human being but some kind of dummy," says Or in his essay. A speaker who uses that kind of phraseology has gone so distance towards turning himself into a machine. The appropriate noi are coming out of his larynx, but his brain is not involved as it would b he were choosing his words for himself."

In Orwell's 1984, they called that "duckspeak." What will they ca in our 1984?

Alcohol Complaint

To the Editor:

Okay, everybody, it's on. The Villanova Administration has declared war on Villanova student social life. Already they have successfully and gleefully reduced on campus social life to the state of non existence it was in during the 1978-79 school year and they now are even turning their sights off campus as well. Their method is simple; prohibit alcohol. The result is no successful parties or social events of any such recreational kind, hence no social life.

Of course it may not be fair to assume that the Administration is being malicious in its resolve to reinstate the prohibition. There is a remote chance that some of our Administrators are actually so incredibly foolish that they actually believe their own laughable premise that drinking alcoholic beverages causes vandalism. They do on occasion happen at the same time but so do snow, shorter days and longer nights and no one is so confused as to attribute them to each other.

The "proof" that the Dean of Men submits is the fact that on one night last May there was a large party in the quad at which "considerable beer drinking was in evidence," and, also that night, some vandalism occurred in Sullivan, and in one case, a sink was torn from a wall. That is the full extent of their proof! There is nothing to connect the two events except that they happened on the same night within the same group of buildings, and that's it!

What were the real circumstances of that night? Any reasonably intelligent person could comprehend the situation. All Villanova students had just been through two or three weeks of extreme tension culminating in the nerve wracking trauma of final exams. May 9th (the night in question) was the night after the last of the final exams, and in their relief, everyone was kicking up their collective heels. Most students went to the quad party to celebrate. Some (a miniscule fraction compared to the whole) went on a destructive rampage. Some people react that way to get relief from a great stress.

The quad party did not cause the vandalism, but they both stemmed from the same cause, final exams.

So, shall we then ban final exams? Of course not. A simple set of improved regulations and standards to counter vandalism itself would suffice. But the truth is that the incident provided a handy excuse for the Administration to come down hard, in the style of Carrie Nation herself, and enforce their already excessive regulations against alcohol. They were probably waiting all year for that to happen since the most serious real alcohol related damage was a little beer spilled on the rug in the West Lounge.

The result is that the Administration now has their nice and neat excuse for almost totally banning alcohol on campus. The result is also that there is a massive exodus from the campus as virtually everyone finds a car and goes off to find a real party somewhere.

Let's just hope that the Administration will have something nice and neat to say when three or four students are killed in a car accident, coming back from an off campus party.

Duty, Honor, and the Draft

By ROBERT A. MONTSERRAT, Chairman Conservative Party Villanova Political Union

The United States' ability to project raw military muscle to defend interests abroad, and ultimately at home, has seriously deteriorated the past decade. One of the key factors in America's growing imence is that the men behind the war machines are not of the caliber essary to initially respond and deploy our arsenal and sustain combat rations.

Under-manned, poorly motivated, and raggedly disciplined, the ill paid badly trained Volunteer Armed Forces lack the quality manpower, ic building blocks, with which to forge a first class professional fighting chine.

The draft would solve the main problems of discipline and manpower. day, the Armed Forces can't discipline their troops. Why? Because ruits are coddled and seduced into joining; they expect "their rights" attempts at discipline are met with their simply leaving.

A draft with no outs would alleviate the discipline problem and would w the Armed Forces to get down to the business of making soldiers out men. Obviously, the manpower problem would become moot as well.

Some people say the draft is socially unfair, but the volunteer Armed ces are even more so. The economically unfortunate who have no place to turn now join the Armed Forces. As it now stands, the dregs of iety will pay the ghastly price of the next war.

We cannot have black and brown men defend a primarily white ion. In a fair draft — everybody serves. War becomes a question more iously considered, and its possibility therefore reduced, when the can- fodder come from all social classes. There are social benefits to a fair ft. When the men of Harvard serve alongside the men of Harlem the se of social integration in a pluralistic society is well served.

Moreover, military conscription is a morally valid avenue to enhance erica's military might and rebuild our sagging capability to wage and war.

The moral side of the draft must be faced pragmatically. We may ee with the conscientious objector that war is morally wrong, but the n who serves his country responds to another moral consideration which the conscientious objector ignores. He feels duty bound — morally bound — to subordinate his personal conviction to the will of the community whose life he shares.

To evade service to his country, the reflective soldier would say, is to carry his private conscientious conviction to the point of moral epotism and this in times of national emergency is a sin. As for the will of God no man truly knows the will of God well enough to justify him shirking his responsibility to his nation, when the supreme interest of the national community, its life and liberty, is at stake.

The draft is a central tenet of what Walter Lippman called "A Public Philosophy." Nothing in national life is free and we, as individuals, must pay the community for the benefits society yields us in the form of service. Military conscription is the actualization of our reciprocal duties to the state. Through the draft we personally pay the state for the political freedom and economic wealth pur political economy grants us. Service in the Armed Forces is therefore not obligated slavery, but rather a tax upon all of us as individuals, yet borne collectively as a society.

Society is not Jeremy Bentham's concept of the summed interests of the parties present, it is more Edward Burke's notion that society is the combined interests of those ancestors who contributed to it in the past, those who exist now, and those who are yet to be. How many times have Americans in the past been called forth serving to fight those who would deprive us of our freedom? Our conscripted ancestors in serving have paid in blood, sweat and toil for that which we now have.

By not allowing ourselves to be conscripted to defend the state we scornfully depreciate the sacrifices of our ancestors. We thus forfeit what has been given to us and condemn our progeny unworthy of the political socio-economic benefits we now enjoy, paid for by those who have fallen in the past. The lack of a draft is a message that his obligation no longer exists. On the other hand, a continuous and permanent draft assures the population and potential adversaries that the republic stands ready to protect, well into the future, the gains of the past.

A free society is a privilege earned and not a given right since it must be defended from those who, domestically seditious, would subject it, and foreign imperialists who would eradicate our ideology and with it the core of civilization itself. If we are not willing to fulfill our individual obligations to the state; if we cannot, will not, for the impotence of a people, shoulder the burden of military conscription, there exists the potential for disaster. The rapidity of modern war will not allow us to face this question at the outbreak of hostilities. We must face the challenge of restoring the draft now or be prepared to accept the inevitable consequences.

This week, the Villanovan asked students their opinions on the presidential debate, held on Sunday, September 21, 1980. We asked, "What did you think of Reagan's and Anderson's performances, who do you think won, and did the debate lose something from President Carter's absence?"

"I thought they both did a good job. Anderson seemed to be more vehement. Reagan was calm and collected. I thought it was a close race as to who won. I think I would give it to Anderson, though. The real loser was Mr. Carter. Considering the fact that Carter wasn't there, the debate really didn't lose anything. In fact it probably gained something."

Mike Healy
Class of '81
Economics

"I thought Reagan was pretty good. He was calm and explained the facts. Reagan won, in my opinion. Anderson was too nervous and didn't answer the questions fully. I think the debate would have been better if Carter was there, then we could have seen all three sides."

Michele Cross
Arts and Sciences

"Reagan's performance was smooth but unimpressive. Anderson's performance was good, but he was a little too aggressive. It (the debate) obviously helped Anderson more than Reagan. In my opinion, Anderson won because Reagan was weak on many points. Of course there was a loss without Carter being there. Two Republicans can't debate fully against each other."

Chris Whalen
Class of '81
History

"I feel that both Reagan and Anderson came off differently. Reagan came off like a bad movie actor type, and Anderson represented himself better. I don't think either of them won. Carter came out ahead by not being there. The debate would have been worse with him there. It's easier for two people to debate than three."

John Bartuska
Political Science

"I think Reagan was much more personable and appealing to the public. Anderson seemed to be lecturing the public, as if he was a professor. I feel that Anderson did an overall better job forensically than did Governor Reagan. However, I feel that Reagan's conclusion was much stronger than Anderson's. I definitely feel that Carter's absence was a great loss. The two debaters spoke more from readings and briefings than from actual experience."

Campus Political Views Diverse

By ED LIS

Republican and Democrat, liberal and Conservative, Independent and Non-partisan: all of these people contribute to the political make-up of the Villanova community. The atmosphere on campus is composed of many diversified political philosophies which are oriented towards several different political organizations. Despite differences of opinion, there is a common thread of unity which binds them together; it consists of concern for our future as a nation, and intelligent, knowledgeable participation in the political process.

The Political Union is a good example of this unity through diversity. Student President Bruce Keogh described his organization as a nonpartisan, open forum in which members are given the opportunity to learn more about important issues and then present their ideas in an informal debate setting.

The Union is attempting to bring some major candidates to campus, including Anderson, Carter, and Reagan on the national scene, and Specter and Flaherty on the state level.

Keogh remarked that the most important issues of the campaign are inflation, defense, fiscal concern, and foreign policy. He cited leadership and decisiveness as the most important assets a president should possess.

Some of the upcoming activities of the Union include discussions on capital punishment (Ed Rendell), Carter's handling of the economy, nuclear energy, and defense spending. Liberal, conservative, or moderate, all are invited.

For those who have more partisan views, there is the College Republican Club. Co-chairman Joe Quinn predicts an active year, concentrating on the Reagen/Bush ticket. Other interests include John Alden and Arlen Specter, as well as a voter registration drive. Quinn feels that Reagan is the present favorite, and that he has picked up many individuals. The Republicans feel that the economy and the performance of Carter are their major strengths.

All of these organizations contribute to the political awareness of the Villanova community.

One of the new faces on campus is the Villanovans for Anderson. Faculty advisor Dr. John A. Doody said the organization will distribute information about Anderson, set up information tables in the Connelly Center, and actively campaign in all the dorms on campus. There is even the possibility of a student debate representing each candidate.

Doody feels that Reagan holds an edge in this basically conservative atmosphere. However, he thinks that voters will begin to realize that Anderson is the most qualified and intelligent candidate available, and that he can win.

"I think that competent and persuasive leadership, and ability and expertise in management of international relations are the real issues of the campaign."

One group that has disappeared from the political scene is the College Democrats. Previous faculty moderator, Dr. Jeffery Hahn, believes that lack of interest in politics was the cause. He sees Pennsylvania as a key area in the election, which will be decided on the basis of issues like the draft, nuclear energy, inflation, unemployment, and defense.

All of these organizations contribute to the political awareness of the Villanova community. Ignorance of the issues and of the political process can be alleviated by joining one of these organizations.

Liquor Laws Outlined

D.A. Explains Responsibilities

By HELEN CAREY

To clarify the actual laws and statutes concerning consumption of alcoholic beverages, the Villanovan interviewed William Davies of the Delaware County Attorney's Office.

According to Davies, an individual must be 21 years old to buy and consume liquor legally in Pennsylvania. Violation of these laws is a minor offense, with a $300 fine or a 90-day jail sentence.

When questioned as to the amount of alcohol considered dangerous, Davies replied, "The minimum amount of alcohol needed in the blood to cause a person to become intoxicated varies with one's weight, but generally, 10 percent alcohol in the bloodstream is considered 'under the influence'; with 20 percent alcohol, a person is unsteady; with 30 percent, boisterous. With 40 percent alcohol in the bloodstream you are usually unconscious, and with 50 percent, death may result."

Davies also noted that one 12 ounce glass of beer is equal in intoxication factor to one shot of 86 proof alcohol.

An individual arrested for driving under the influence could be subject to a one-year jail sentence, and a $2500 fine. Davies stated that "serving minors either in a bar or at a party is illegal and one could be charged with serving a minor and corrupting the morals of minors."

He stressed the fact that, "it is definitely illegal for anyone under 21 to drink."

When questioned as to the consequences if a person, having just attended a party, had an accident on the way home, Davies responded, "The host of the party is held fully responsible for damages. If a party is given and those attending are being charged at the door, the party-giver could be arrested for selling liquor without a license. To drink in the state of Pennsylvania, or anywhere else, one must take on the responsibilities of drinking and do it sensibly."

Volunteer 'Huggers' Act As Companions to Handicapped

A scene from last year's Special Olympics.

By PHILIP MUDD

The Villanovans For Life will sponsor a Special Olympics program here at Villanova on Sunday, October 5

Approximately 320 mentally handicapped persons, aged eight and above, will be participating in events such as soccer, frisbee, volleyball, and softball. Volunteers from Villanova, Allstate Insurance Company, and Sun Oil of Radnor will be working on a one-to-one basis with the handicapped children.

The participants in the frisbee and soccer events have advanced from various regional competitions and will be competing in the state-wide championships here at Villanova. In addition, sports clinics and entertainment will be provided by students. The state competition is sponsored by the Pennsylvania Special Olympics, and national as well as international meets are held throughout the year.

The 230 Special Olympics volunteers, known as "huggers," will act as companions for the children and adults during the day. The Council of Delaware County, in recognition of the dedication of these volunteers and the success of the program, has designated October 5 to be Special Olympics Day in Delaware County.

Special Olympics Day is entirely coordinated by student volunteers from the Villanovans For Life, a pro-life service organization. Jim Dimmitt, coordinator for student volunteers and president of Villanovans For Life, was "amazed at the enthusiasm of the students and their willingness to help others." Ed Lis, a freshman volunteer, also expressed his interest in the program, saying, "The day will be worthwhile because these kids are here just for the joy of competing, not winning or losing."

A number of student groups around campus have pledged their support to Special Olympics

A number of student groups around campus have pledged their support to Special Olympics. The University band, the Wildcat Ultimate Frisbee team, and the men's and women's soccer teams, along with some of the fraternities and sororities on campus, have donated their time for Special Olympics.

The day of activities, which will be held on Mendel and Austin fields, is being funded by several sources. Sun Oil Company has provided a major portion of the funding, and a balloon sale will be held on Tuesday, September 30, in Dougherty Hall and around the Kennedy Mall area to help defray costs.

Any student who wishes to volunteer may attend the huggers' final meeting, which will be held on Thursday, October 2, at 7:00 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Center Upgrades Programs

By MIKE GIAMMARCO

The Career Development Center is a specialized branch of the University Counseling Center. It deals with the inevitable tasks of career planning and preparation for undergraduates, as well as placement services for senior and graduate students.

Mr. Samuel Milioti, CDC coordinator, stated, "the programs and structure of the service itself have recently been significantly upgraded to meet the widest range of student needs. Students are encouraged regardless of their year at Villanova University, to make appointments with any of the three full-time counselors. All encounters are kept strictly confidential, and the number of appointments is left to the discretion of the student."

The many programs offered by the CDC include the popular career counseling sessions and available career interest evaluations, along with graduate and professional school advising, and registration for the necessary standardized tests.

This October 31, a Nursing Career Day is planned for prospective nurses to meet with hospital, health care, and government agency staff.

"We're over-flowing with workshops and lectures," Milioti said, "designed to encourage students to meet many needs by dealing with everything from employability, changing of major, to choosing a career and subsequently finding a job that suits them personally!"

He also stated that "the groups come together obtaining skills in an interesting and social learning format."

Various seminars are to be held in Corr, Dougherty, and the Connelly Center including tips on interview skills, establishing a credential file, job search techniques, instruction on assembling a resume (or refining your current draft), and information sessions about their invaluable on-campus recruiting program.

Through this program, seniors are able to interview with any of the three-hundred plus companies on CDC's list. Among the various companies, institutions, and agencies are banks, accounting firms, petroleum companies, chemical corporations, department stores, and insurance companies.

To take advantage of this service, any interested senior or graduate student need only fill out a form and submit it to one of the office staff. Any specific information about an attractive company is available in their career library. Interviews will be given from Oct. 13, to the end of April.

Milioti offered several tips of his own to graduating students who will shortly face the working world: "The quality of college graduates is getting considerably greater from previous years to present. This affords them a competitive, if not intense, attitude towards their career, or a desire to make a career shift and sometimes, surprisingly, to a totally unrelated field!

People nowadays often find themselves going back to school despite the positive and encouraged trend of developing a broad, liberal background. We strongly advise students to develop a solid minor so as not to be knocked over by an overload in their specific field, which was in an underabundance during their decision-making Freshman or Sophomore year! It does happen! We try to help by relaying the most up-to-date job market trends, and other useful and pertinent information in our weekly 'Career Call' newsletter. It's our periodic contact with the students."

The "Career Call" newsletter is published by the CDC and will become the vehicle for communicating news and information to the Villanova community. Topics outlined in the publication include hiring trends, job listings, job search hints, occupational information, changes in the on-campus recruiting schedule, career workshops, grad-school programs, and any career related interests.

"As a result of improved program and efforts to improve service-student communication via the weekly newsletter (they will be delivered to the dorms and are available at Connelly Center), the service has grown to capacity. Everyone here feels pressured yet satisfied by the large turnover of career-conscious students."

He also urged all seniors "not to neglect their career. Procrastinating about post-graduation plans is easy and it (predictably) leads to a senior panic in the Spring."

The Career Development Center is located in Corr Hall on the lower level and is open from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Wyeth Captivates the Academy

Latest Works Unveiled

Jamie Wyeth signing etching.

By ALICE FISHER

When one is asked to think of a famous artist, the average person finds it necessary to look back at least 100 years before finding a real master painter. Most people don't realize that there are artists alive today that have created works that are a realistic reflection of our times and are promising masters of their medium. In fact, it might be surprising to know that there is one such artist right here in the area of Villanova.

In celebration of its 175th anniversary, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts will have an exhibition the works of one of America's best known contemporary artists, Jamie Wyeth. The oldest museum in America is featuring the works from Wyeth's first exhibition in 1966 through works completed in 1979 and 1980. Jamie Wyeth's most comprehensive exhibition ever assembled includes more than 100 oils, water colors, drawings, and preparatory drawings of portraits, landscapes, and paintings of animals. Many of these works, including the artist's first suite of etchings, are new and have never been exhibited before.

"I like the medium," said Wyeth about his recent introduction to etching. "It is fascinating. You never quite know if it works until you are finished. I'm working in smaller size and scale than I ever have before, and in color."

Jamie Wyeth's portraits are noted for their unique, realistic style and revelation of the objects character. Wyeth attempts "to become the sitter in his search for truth and to hope to reveal all the strengths and weaknesses hidden below the surface."

This is evident in his earlier works like his posthumous portrait of John F. Kennedy (1967), painted at the request of the Kennedy family. It was completed after much research including accompanying Senators Robert and Edward Kennedy on the campaign trail. The later portrait of Rudolph Nureyev (1977) combines the expressions of a dancer's intense concentration with the arrogance of a superstar.

Among the popular favorites is Portrait of a Pig (1970) which is a colorful and affectionate painting of Wyeth's first pet pig, Den-Den. Fascinated by their shapes and expressions, Wyeth believes in painting animals as one would people. As a result, these paintings express Wyeth's sense of delicate contrast of light and shadow, with a surprising touch of irony.

Jamie Wyeth, born in Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania, is the third generation of a family of painters. He is the inheritor of both the American realist tradition from the works of his father, Andrew, and the fantasy world, created by his grandfather, N.C. Wyeth, illustrator of children's classics.

Alchemy Dazzles The Main Point

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Alchemy is sometimes frantic, sometimes tranquil, and almost always fascinating. This tight, hard-driving group, formerly known as Daniels, Mason and Gallagher, came home to the Main Point for two shows this past Saturday. The surprising diversity of these shows demonstrate how important growth has been in keeping Alchemy's attitude towards its music fresh and vitally enthusiastic. There's Always A Way speaks subtly of CSNY, Dan Mason's Affirmation is built around the rhythm riff to the Beatles' Day Tripper, and Energy Unlimited shows the beginnings of a reggae influence, especially during Mason's offhand, Wilson Pickett style rap toward the end.

The band has extended its on-stage web through the addition of pianist Charlie Thompson, who fills in between the dual guitars and the rhythm section, with a more powerful, tighter sound as the result. Emanuel Del Pizo is more authoritative on drums, his solo during Teddie Gallagher's I Need More is a primary example, and this is also fortunate.

Teddie Gallagher is a more than adequate composer and vocalist, but Dan Mason and Ben Daniels are the heart and soul of Alchemy. Like the greatest players at center

Tangerine Dream

By MICHAEL JONES

Tangram is the thirteenth album by German electronic trio Tangerine Dream. Chris Franke and Edgar Froese have picked up a new member, Johannes Schmoelling, to replace Peter Baumann who is embarking on further solo projects.

The album is a return to the long works of earlier releases such as Zeit and Rubycon. Musically it is split into two parts, Tangram Set 1 and Tangram Set 2. The extended nature of each set allows the pursuit of certain musical themes with a plethora of variations both sonically and musically. The majesty of earlier works remains intact and the programming or synthesis of the tonal qualities of the elaborate keyboards results in new sounds which are not possible with conventional instruments. Rather than just listening to a synthesizer that sounds like a horn or a string ensembel, T. Dream has created novel sounds to provide a unique aural experience.

Tangram is much more ethereal than Edgar Froese's last solo effort, Stuntman and the last T. Dream album, Force Majeure. The only percussion on the album is synthesized and put into sequencer loops, not as rhythmic footholds for the music, but rather as just another textural overlay which appears and vanishes from the music without any conscious sense of loss. The disappearance of any loop and the appearance of its replacement is subtle in the mode of the avant-garde school of minimalism, which includes such artists as Philip Glass, Steve Reich and Terry Riley. There is a moment with sounds used by Klaus Schulze on Moondawn, together with a soft grand piano which reminds one of the first rays of the morning sun on fresh-fallen snow when the world has yet to awaken in the stillness.

Towards the end of Set 1 there is a false ending from which comes an unsettling theme with the random sound of distant gunfire against a hauntingly peaceful koto-like theme reminiscent of Bowie's Moss Garden from Heroes, during his Berlin recording sessions. These themes are superseded by the sound of synthetic laughter and the return of the koto-like sound with several VCS3 synthesizers, only to be extinguished by Froese's guitar synthesizer and Franke's moog which lead the energy back to tranquility.

The inner sleeve shows a large mystic geometrical figure done in mirrors, set in the forest during the winter. The Tangrum portrays a door or window to another dimension or perhaps merely to another perception of the same dimension. This apparition wavers and becomes energized at the end of Set 1 until it twinkles away, wafting on the cool breeze.

Vasey Plays Two Stages

By ALICE FISHER

It is a known fact that getting thrown out of bars, staying up three nights to finish a paper, or watching soap operas in the Pie Shop are three of the least stimulating activities a college student can pursue. To offer relief, Vasey Theatre has announced its line-up of plays for the 1980-1981 season. Consistent with its widespread reputation for offering intellectual, creative and highly enjoyable productions, Vasey Theatre will be presenting five productions on the main stage at Vasey Theatre and two plays at the newly established Rosemont Studio Theatre.

A previous Vasey production.

The season opener will be William Inge's Picnic (October 16-18, 22-25). "Picnic is easy to understand. It is very loving, affecting, bittersweet. Any student would probably enjoy it," says Dr. James Christie, chairman of the Theatre Department at Villanova. "Picnic" will be directed by James Harbour, assistant professor of Theatre at Temple University.

Bertolt Brecht's The Caucasian Chalk Circle will be the next play of the 1980 season (Nov. 12-15, 18-21). The Theatre Department is looking forward to the arrival of Heinz-Uwe Haus, a guest from the German Democratic Republic who will be directing this epic drama. Dr. Christie states that there is an arousal of Brecht appeal in this generation and although it is a demanding play in its ideas, it is highly interesting.

The season will continue in February with a production of Luigi Pirandello's classic comedy, Six Characters in Search of an Author (Feb. 11-14, 18-21). Irene Baird, professor of theatre at Villanova, will be directing this fascinating study of theatrical illusion.

Guys and Dolls, Frank Loesser's tuneful tribute to the lovers and gamblers of Broadway, will be the fourth show of the season (March 11-14, 18-21, and 25-28). Directing this production will be Terry Fimiano, director of last season's critically acclaimed Cole.

Vasey Theatre will offer as its final mainstage production of the season the Philadelphia area premiere of Michael McClure's Josephine the Mouse Singer (April 8-11, 15-18). This 1979 Obie Award

Bowie Fripps Out

By JERRY ARTH

With his latest release, Scary Monsters, David Bowie has finally burst out of the constraint of his collaborations with Eno which stifled his last three albums. This new album is a drastic divergence from and improvement over the trilogy of the past few years when Bowie pressed the limits of musical sensibilities with less than mixed results. Scary Monsters marks a return by Bowie to the style(s) which not only popularized him, but also distinguished him from the mass of avant-garde artists.

But were not Scary Monsters serious musical efforts by one of rock's few true geniuses, it could almost be considered a self-parody. From the album's cover, with pictures of Bowie in a clown suit on the front and pastiches of him in various "phases" of his long career, to the musical styles of the songs, each highlighting the changes which have occurred in Bowie's singing over the years, one senses a self-depreciation by Bowie of his past works. Only the sheer brilliance of the music saves it from being merely a re-hashing of previous Bowie classics.

The album opens with a bleak rocker, "It's no Game," half of which is sung in Japanese by Michi Hirota, the other half sung by Bowie in English. The fantastic guitar work of Robert Fripp (who co-produced the album) saves It's No Game from being simply a piece of bi-lingual cynicism.

However, the three remaining songs constitute the core of Scary Monsters. The raw, Cars-like vocals and pounding Fripp guitar of Scary Monsters (and Super Creeps) mesmerize and horrify at the same time. The throbbing Fashion appears to be Bowie's assault on the New Wave movement: "There's a brand new dance/But I don't know its name/-That people from bad homes/Do again and again." And the tour de force of the entire album, Ashes to Ashes, is a blisternig recapturing of the Space Oddity days, with Bowie updating the story a bit: "Ashes to ashes funk to funky/We know Major Tom's a junky/Strung out in heavens high/Hitting an all time low." Absolutely orgasmatic.

The remainder of Scary Monsters is full of reminders of Bowie songs gone by. Teenage Wildlife could be a dead ringer for Heroes, while Because You're Young could have been on the Pin-Ups album.

An all-star cast worked on this new Bowie effort. Robert Fripp, Pete Townshend, Roy Bittan, Tony Visconti, and Carlos Alomar, to name a few, contributed their enormous talents in a way that compliments Bowie's instead of superseding them. The resultant Scary Monsters is the best Bowie release since Ziggy Stardust, and for old Bowie fans, it's like comin' home. It is much more than, to quote from Teenage Wildlife, the "same old thing in brand new drag."

court in Wimbledon, they hammer at their limits to bring out the best in themselves, only to find it also brings out the best in the other. Flaxen-haired and bespectacled Ben strums and sings with a very comforting, quiet manner, content with a minimum of between-song chatter. Dan, who introduces the members of the band and asked for applause for Frank Gunther's new bass strings, "They're very expensive," is more of a showman and scathingly, even dangerously, flirts over his cascading lead guitar runs.

Three vocalists unleash many possibilities, and in To Rosemary, I Need More and What's It to You, Daniels', Mason's and Gallagher's voices interweave with remarkable clarity. It may be ironic that Daniels' solo number was I'll Never Be Alone, but regardless of irony, his sensitive guitar playing and breathlessly hopeful voice are sufficiently beautiful to capture any spotlight or audience with ease.

In these days of monolithic supergroups whose only apparent concerns are avoiding the next live performance and avoiding the audience that supports them, bands like Alchemy are a welcome, even necessary, supplement to Philadelphia's music scene. It may have been the cozy ambience inside the Main Point and it may have been that the band was playing way over its head, but at any rate, Alchemy was indeed magical.

Yes Looks to Future

By CHRIS RADAN

The only Drama people are interested in these days is the question whether or not Trevor Horn's voice will be able to fill the formidable bill Jon Anderson's voice has left.

The album contains six solid tracks, all originals, and all highlighting the attributes of Horn's voice, rather than any shortcoming in comparison to Jon Anderson's legend. Machine Messiah and Into the Lens are to Horn what And You and I was to Anderson. Geoff Downes plays some impressive organ and piano and demonstrates his skill with a vocoder on Man in a White Car.

With veteran Yes manager Brian Lane again on the job, Yes has turned out a well-crafted album, combining the skills and talents of the new members with the proven popularity of the remaining original members. Bass virtuoso, group leader and co-founder Chris Squire plays his incredible (can you think of a better word?) brand of bass, and demonstrates his versatility by playing electric piano on Run Through The Light. Drummer Alan White acts as a solid backing unit, as he has since 1972, and performs an explosive solo on Machine Messiah. The master of guitars (and about 14 other stringed instruments), Steve Howe, has never played better than he does on Drama.

The album sounds like the positive, progressive Yes. A lot of people who listened to Yes in 1970 and are dissatisfied with Yes in 1980 should take into account that, even if the cast of the group remained unchanged, the new album could never be a Yessongs, or Yes. Times change and music changes. People change. Jon Anderson and Rick Wakeman changed into purely solo personalities; because of this, Yes probably has several more years of popularity and profit. The new members are exactly what Yes needed at exactly the right time. And, just maybe, if people stop thinking of the group as "the group without Anderson and Wakeman" or "the new Yes," and accept the group simply as Yes, the new album will give as much enjoyment to biased fans as it has given to the others.

Vasey

winner explores with sad poignancy the role of the artist in society. Directing this production will be Lon Winston, newly appointed Assistant Professor of Theatre at Villanova.

Vasey Theatre will also open a small studio theatre this year at its sister school, Rosemont College. The two productions scheduled for this season are a new musical by Peter Mattaliano, author of Jack the Ripper Revue (October 30, 31, and November 1) and an original script by Otto Eckstut, entitled Say it Ain't So, Joe (March 26, 27, and 28). The goal of the theatre is to encourage new works and to offer a chance for the students to experiment.

Dr. Christie claims that he is not interested in making Vasey a "commercial theatre," but rather the department's goal is to refine theatre into an actual art. "The faculty and staff (at Villanova) have been very strong supporters," says Christie. "I'm hoping that through them the students will be encouraged to see one of our plays . . . Then, maybe a few years from now, they'll look back and be able to appreciate what they saw as an act."

Performances are Wednesday through Saturday for mainstage season productions at Vasey Theatre. Rosemont Studio Theatre performances run Thursday through Saturday.

Victories Spark Volleyball Season

By KATHY MAHER

The 14-member girl's volleyball team began its season last week with a victory over Trenton. In the best of five varsity matches, the Wildcats won 15-11, 15-6 and 15-4. The junior varsity also defeated Trenton in its best of three bout, 17-15 and 15-4. These opening victories were especially important because Trenton won the prestigious LaSalle Tournament last year, defeating many Villanova rivals of the upcoming year. This match-up is indicative of the quality of future seasonal play.

The team battled Wilmington College on Friday, September 19 and posted its second victory of the season. The varsity won in five games, 15-10, 15-9, 7-15, 13-15 and 15-5, while the junior varsity won in two games 15-8 and 15-7.

In its third confrontation, Villanova handily defeated Pharmacy, 15-0, 15-1 and 15-1. The Junior Varsity also won easily, 15-2 and 15-4. The Wildcats remained untested throughout the entire match and completely dominated the Pharmacy team.

"Practices are rigorous and more intense than last year. Floor play is being emphasized, which is providing a better foundation for the team," stated Coach Rose Selby. "The team is willing to work in order to win," continued Selby.

The upcoming schedule is a tough one, but because of the higher level of skill in this year's team; the strong competition is needed and anticipated.

The captain and moral leader of the team is Joanne Canuso. She is also the only senior member on the team. Behind Canuso on the varsity squad are five other solid players. The team is exceptionally strong because it has depth. Each of the players on the bench has great potential.

Victory has not come as a surprise to the team or its coaches, Bob Covell and Rose Selby. Improvement over last year's 16-5 season record will be difficult because of the tough competition, but for this team it will not be impossible. Determination and skill are the key words to the success of the Wildcats this year.

Soccer Scores First Astroturf Victory

By JULIE ROBERTS

Villanova scored all three of their goals in the opening period, with the first goal coming after only 45 seconds of play. Denise Finn led the way for the Wildcats with an assist from Linda Padula. The second score was made by Karen Clabber with an assist from Liz Supchak. Supchak added the final goal for V.U. on a pass from Lori Stasco.

Lehigh's only goal came in the second half on a free kick.

Coach Lee Stevenson was pleased with the girls' effort. "Our defense is back with 7 starters returning. If we can generate some more offense, we could have a 10-3 season."

The toughest teams on the schedule for this season will be Princeton, Penn State and Franklin and Marshall, all of which have women's soccer as a varsity sport. The women are also entered in 2 tournaments.

Although there are many returning starters, the team did lose goalie Susie Stroud. Patty Nowlan will be replacing Stroud.

Villanova's defense was so tough there wasn't much action at the Wildcat's end of the field in the first game. One reason was freshman Terry Shunk, a fullback who had never played soccer before but play a tough defensive game.

Returning seniors for this year's women soccer team include: Carol Boyle, Sue Cofnuk, Cathy Ortale, Liz Supchak and Lori Stasco.

Tomorrow, the team will play in a tournament at Princeton and then will return home for a game against Rutgers at 4:00 on Thursday, October 2.

The women's soccer team fielded the first Villanova victory on the new astroturf this past Saturday as they defeated Lehigh 3-1.

Ruggers Rout Penn

In an effort to redeem themselves after last spring's disappointing season the 'Nova ruggers took it to Penn from the opening whistle Saturday. President Timmy McCarthy attributed the Wildcats strong physical condition to their week of intense training in Stone Harbor during August. This season's outlook is bright, strongly due to the presence of the following returning seniors: Captains Mark Civil and Jim "Tooth" LaVine, President Timmy McCarthy, Bill Zisek, Peter Ferrari, Colin Foster, Joe Napp and Joe White.

At the University of Pennsylvania's River Field Villanova dominated Penn 18-0. Paul Hartwyk was outstanding as he turned in many open field tackles on defense. "Tooth" LaVine turned in a gutsy game at Hooker while continually winning the ball for Villanova. The wing play complemented the outstanding play of the scrum. McCarthy had an outstanding game, scoring twice as he ran circles around Penn's wing. Ferrari and Terry Boyle contributed to the scoring once each. Tomorrow all are welcome to come out and watch the Cats take on Villanova's Law School at home at 1:00 p.m.

TENNIS REVIEW

By KYLE GOTHNER

This past week of competition was expected to give the Villanova women's tennis team and its coach, Dr. Langran, a pretty good idea of what to expect from the 1980 squad. Facing the three strongest teams on the 1980 fall schedule in just five days, the Wildcats emerged from the testing with flying colors, winning two of the three contests.

The Cats started the season off by avenging one of only two losses suffered last season when they beat Franklin and Marshall, 6-3. And despite a loss to the traditionally tough Temple Owls, 7-2, the Wildcats rebounded to nip Seton Hall, 5-4, to up their record to 2-1.

Against Franklin and Marshall, freshman Trish Stairiker won at second singles, Dawn Fisher won at fourth singles and Gina Ayoub won at sixth singles. Each of the three doubles teams also won.

Versus Temple Cynthia Burke was the only singles player to win her match, but Carol Harrison and Fisher won first doubles, Diane Williams and Satiriker won second doubles and Bonnie Stokes and Diane Cappuccio won third doubles.

To cap off the week vs. Seton Hall, Stairiker, Fisher and Burke won second, fourth and fifth singles, respectively, and the three doubles teams each won their matches.

Meanwhile, the men's tennis team traveled to Rider College for the ECAC Division II tournament and surprised everyone finishing fifth — their best finish in recent years. Providence won the tournament with 15 points, three more than the Cat's 12.

Among the Cat's outstanding performances were Tom Fieger, playing his senior season at number one singles, knocking off his first two opponents before losing. Also, junior Shawn Friel won his first two matches before being defeated in number two singles and 'Nova's number one doubles pair of freshmen Bill Harahan and Bill Dullivan went the farthest of any Villanovan, advancing to the semi-finals after winning three times.

Olympians Return to Dedicate New Track

Tomorrow Villanova will begin a new era. Father President John Driscoll will dedicate to Villanova's Head Track Coach, James Francis Elliott, the newly installed Rubaturf track in Goodreau Stadium. In his 46 years of coaching, "Jumbo" Elliott has coached at least one Olympian in every Summer Games since 1948.

It will truly be a homecoming (but with a new refurbishing) for the 23 former Olympians who will honor their one-time coach, Jumbo Elliott.

"The track is a shot in the arm for athletics and the entire University community. It has dressed up the stadium," says Athletic Director Ted Aceto. The multi-million dollar cost of the renovation will extend its usability to more of the Villanova community, including varsity football, men's and women's soccer, men's and women's lacrosse, field hockey and intramural football.

"We need to educate the university on how to use the facility," explains Aceto. "We'll be posting track etiquette rules, installing lights and a security fence and posting security guards so that more people will be able to use the track and field."

Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah comments that the track is "like an intramural facility. They can play three games of intramural football on it at once."

"Even though the track team hasn't run on it yet," continues Pyrah, "it can't help but help. We have already scheduled two meets here for this spring: the Big East Track Championships (May 3) and the IC4As (May 23 and 24)."

Pyrah also states that the dedication is special because "no other coach has had 20 Olympians all coached by the same man."

The list of track stars returning includes: Glenn Bogue (1976 Olympian in the 400-meter run), Don Bragg ('60 Olympic gold medalist in the pole vault), Alex Breckinridge ('60 marathon Olympian), Frank Budd (Olympian in the 1960 100-meter dash and 440-meter relay), Dick Buerkle ('76 and '80 Olympian in the 5000-meter run), Noel Carroll ('64 and '66 Olympian in the 800-meter run), Eamonn Coughlan (1976 Olympian in the 1500-meters and 1980 Olympian in the 5000-meter run), Rolando Cruz ('64 Olympian in the pole vault), Ron Delany ('56 Olympic gold medalist in the 1500-meter run), Paul Drayton ('64 Olympic gold medalist in the 400-meter relay and silver medalist in the 200-meter run), George Guida ('48 Olympian in the 400-meter run), Erv Hall ('68 Olympic silver medalist in the 110-meter hurdles), John Hartnett ('72 Olympian in the 5000-meter run), Larry James (1968 Olympic gold medalist in the 1600-meter relay and silver medalist in the 400-meter run), Charlie Jenkins (1956 Olympic gold medalist in the 400-meter run and gold medalist in the 1600-meter relay), Marty Liquori (1968 Olympian in the 1500-meter run), Frank Murphy(1968 and 1972 Olympian in the 1500-meter run and 1972 Olympian in the 800-meter run), Don Paige ('80 Olympian in the 800-meter run), Phil Reavis ('56 Olympian in the pole vault), Browning Ross ('48 and '52 Olympian in the steeplechase), Donal Walsh (1972 marathon Olympian) and Vic Zwolak (1964 Olympian in the 2000-meter steeplechase).

Also on hand for the celebration will be other famous Villanovans: Cummin Clancy, Mark Belger, Tom Donnelly, Chris Mason, Phil "Tiny" Kane, Dave Patrick, Ken Scheppert and Pat Traynor.

1980 graduate Don Paige charges in front of another VU grad, Mark Belger. Paige won a spot on the 1980 U.S. Olympic team and also beat Sebastian Coe, the gold medalist at the Summer Games.

Dave Patrick rounds the corner for Villanova at Madison Square Garden in a relay, always a strong point for the Wildcats.

Browning Ross became Villanova's first Olympian, participating in the steeplechase in both the 1948 and 1952 Olympics.

Noel Carroll glides to one of his many victories in the quarter-mile, half mile and 1000-meter races.

Wildcats Remain Winless

By JOE JASEK

Things just didn't go as planned last Saturday for the Villanova Wildcats. The Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts downed the Cats, 24-12, at Alumni Field tallying Villanova's third straight loss against no wins this season.

The Minutemen set the tone of the game right away. Massachusetts took the ball on their own 20 and moved it to the Villanova 43. This ball control offense was only an inkling of what was to materialize later in the game. Villanova couldn't move so they punted. Villanova and Massachusetts exchanged fumbles. Neither team could mount a successful scoring drive. At the end of the first quarter, there was no score.

In the second quarter, Massachusetts started on the Villanova 45 and drove 45 yards for a touchdown. The eight-play drive topped off by a two yard run by tailback Garry Pearson. Jim Mullins' point after touchdown was no good so Massachusetts led Villanova 6-0.

On the kickoff, Villanova was penalized for clipping and started at their own 8-yard line. Dan Green replaced Pat O'Brien as quarterback, but running back Greg Bedesem fumbled the pitch. Massachusetts recovered on the Villanova 5 and four plays later, Garry Pearson took the ball from one yard out for his second touchdown of the day. Reserve quarterback Dan Peevich entered the game and passed to Garry Pearson for the two point conversion and Massachusetts led 14-0.

On the kickoff, Willie Sydnor went 101 yards for a touchdown, one of the few bright spots Villanova had all day. Villanova was on the board but losing 14-6. Massachusetts couldn't move on their next possession, which ended in a fumble recovery by defensive back Chris Yurkow. Villanova took the ball and scrambled 60 yards for a score. Running back Shawn Passman took the pitch from Pat O'Brien and went in for the score from eight yards out. The Cats tried to tie with a two-point conversion but O'Brien's pass to Greg Bedesem fell incomplete. The half ended Massachusetts 14, Villanova 12.

In the third quarter, Garry Pearson ran ten yards for his third touchdown. The point after touchdown was good and Massachusetts was up 21-12, ending the third quarter.

The fourth period was a defensive struggle and the last score of the game on a thirteen play, 42-yard scoring drive capped off by a 20-yard field goal attempt from the Villanova 3. The final score of the game: Massachusetts 24, Villanova 12.

The Cats take on a tough Boston College Eagles team this Saturday, September 27. This is Homecoming Weekend and the Jumbo Elliott track will be dedicated.

PHILLIES FEVER IS INFECTIOUS

By PATRICK FLYNN

Right around this time last year, this space was devoted to an examination of the Philadelphia Phillies. Danny Ozark inevitably picked up some of the blame. Injuries were mentioned. An unfavorable team reaction to the presence of Pete Rose in the area of overall intensity was perhaps the greatest villain. In short, the Phillies were simply losers in every sense of the word.

What a difference a year makes.

It's hard to pinpoint the reasons for this year's turnaround. The Phils have survived some more injuries, periods of inconsistency and a miserable season by one of the backbones of the squad, Bob Boone. And as the 1980 season screeches toward a halt, the Phils are still battling for the top spot.

Maybe it's just the law of averages working in the Phils favor. There's too much talent in those maroons to expect another fourth-place finish. All the breaks that didn't come last year are piling up now.

Maybe its simply the play of younger players like Lonnie Smith and Keith Moreland that's made the difference.

More likely, maybe Dallas Green deserves some credit. When Danny Ozark was fired, a lot of the sting of those playoff strangulations as well as last year's humiliation was washed away. Green has remained positive and, above all, has created the blend of experience and youthful enthusiasm that a winner needs in any sport. His confidence in the younger players, particularly pitchers, like Bob Walk and Marty Bystrom, has made a big difference in the stretch.

So it looks like it's going to the wire and you really have to thank the National League for the schedule that they've put together. Not only do the Phils end the season in Montreal, but over in the Western Division, The Astros will be seen on the coast facing the Dodgers in a season finale that could also be a barnburner. Compare that to the American League, where the Yankees and the Orioles played eight of the most exciting games in recent memory over a ten-day stretch in August, then bid each other farewell until next March in Fort Lauderdale. Chalk up one for the senior circuit.

All eyes are on the National League. Two teams will walk away as winners and about four others will be making excuses. It could be a Phillies-Dodgers rematch, or a battle between postseason virgins like the Astros and Expos, or even a duel between the Pittsburgh Pirates and Cincinnati Reds for the fifth time in the last eleven years.

Whatever happens, two teams will take the field two weeks hence and both will be sharp and have momentum to battle for a World Series berth. While in the American League, the Yankees will have had time to catch their breath from the Baltimore scare and the Royals will be trying to remember the last time they had to win a game.

Artificial turf, no designated hitter, and whatever else, September belongs to the National League.

Ed Geisz Honored As Wildcat Winner

By PETER J. RYAN

Fast becoming a legend in his own time, swimming Head Coach Ed Geisz has been presented with the "Distinguished Coaches" award for his contributions to the sport.

The requirements for this honor include winning fifty percent of all dual meets, having coached for twenty-five years, placing one swimmer in the Olympics and finally, having one national champion.

Head Swim Coach Ed Geisz.

After twenty years as head coach, Geisz has won sixty-eight percent of the team's dual meets. As for the Olympics, Geisz has sent Tom Arantz and Olaf Von Shilling (both representing West Germany) and John Fitzgerald for the United States. Dick McDonough was the lone national champion for Villanova, as well as one of many All-Americans on the Wildcat squad.

"I am very thankful to the swimmers for this award," said Geisz, "they have always given me their best and I am proud to be their coach."

On December 1, the Cats will open their season at George Washington.

The swimmers, like the basketball team, find themselves competing in the Big East. Villanova will swim against Maryland instead of Drexel due to mix-ups in schedules.

"For the first week we will be working out light with some running, exercises and water polo," commented Geisz. The team has lost two swimmers to graduation and will be working with five freshmen walk-ons. It is too early to measure their potential for the upcoming season, but the loss of the two seniors, Larry Malloy and Steve Quindlen, will force the current swimmers to reach deep within themselves.

A bright spot for the squad will be the return of the entire diving team.

Franks Named Swimming Coach

By LARRY GOANOS

The name Debbie Franks may not be as familiar to Villanova students as those of Dick Bedesem, Rollie Massamino, or Jumbo Elliott but it may be by the time this swimming season has concluded. Franks is the new women's swimming coach at Villanova and she plans to make her team one of the finest in the east.

A recent graduate of Rutgers University, which she attended on a swimming scholarship, Franks had an outstanding collegiate swimming career. At Rutgers, her team placed first in the east three out of four years and had a combined record of 41-2. She also set the eastern collegiate record for the 100-meter individual medley in 1978.

Franks, previous coaching position was as an assistant coach to the Los Alamos, New Mexico A.A.U. swim team. The season before her arrival the team lost the state title by 12 points. After one summer with her guidance they again went to the state championships, this time emerging as state champs by a whopping 310-point

Franks is very optimistic about this year's chances, in fact she even postponed her December wedding date until February in order to devote 100% to the team. "We have good senior leadership and all the potential that you could ask for," she says with confidence. She may even find herself connected with the Eastern Collegiate Swimming Champions again ... this time as the coach.

Elliott Track Dedicated

By BETH WHITE

Homecoming took on a new meaning for the 22 former Olympians and other notable Villanova athletes who honored their one-time track coach, James "Jumbo" Francis Elliott, in the dedication of the new Rubaturf track in Villanova Stadium. Acclaimed as "the greatest track team ever assembled," the Villanova track alumni and the present track team marched to the Olympic theme with Coach Elliott during the halftime presentation.

Reverend John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., president of Villanova University, acclaimed Elliott as "a personification of the Villanova ideal of a competitor, a leader, a scholar and a gentleman." Driscoll also presented Elliott with a plaque honoring his accomplishments in his 47 years as Villanova's head track coach.

Elliott's achievements include: coaching 467 individual champions (including 28 Olympic team members) and 51 team championships. He is also the only man to have coached one Olympian in every Summer Games since 1948.

Ron Delaney, the 1956 gold medalist in the 1500-meter race and one of "Jumbo's Irish boys," explained that Coach Elliott brought out the best in each of his runners, whether it was an American record, a world record, or an Olympic medal. "Being able to come back for the dedication of the track just gives us all an opportunity to say thank you to Villanova and especially to Coach Elliott and the difference they made in our lives," continued Delaney.

"He's a very important person in all of our lives," stated Dream-Miler Marty Liquori, "not so much for what he did as a coach, although that was certainly important, but for what he did as a man."

Liquori and recent alumnus Don Paige agreed that the occasion was "the opportunity of a lifetime," since the track stars that were assembled were people whom they had read about but never met before. Paige, a 1980 graduate, feels that the track will "help the University as a whole, especially the fans. When I was a runner here, none of my student body ever had a chance to see us run."

The 1.2 million dollar renovation to the stadium includes an eight-lane track surrounding a multi-purpose astroturf field. The James Francis Elliott Track will allow Villanova to once again host home track meets. Already scheduled are the Big East Championships (May 3) and the IC4As (May 23 and 24).

Charlie Jenkins, a member of the Development Council and an instrumental force in proposing the stadium renovation ("only because I was continually bringing it up in the Development Council meetings"), noted that, "The new track will serve two purposes: it will motivate more kids to come here and will bring top-level competition to the University."

Jenkins carried home two gold medals for the United States in the 1956 Olympics.

Middle-distance Olympian, Eamonn Coughlan asks, "What more can you do for Villanova Track? This is just the icing on the cake."

Senior Amos Korir is looking forward to the opening of the spring season. "The track is going to be fast, and you can train really well since it doesn't hurt your legs. There are going to be some good times next spring."

College Inaugurates Alumni Award Fete

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The College of Liberal Arts and Sciences presented its first-ever "Alumni Medallion Award Dinner Dance," last Friday evening.

The awards dinner, held at the Aronomink Golf Club in Newtown Square, marked the first year the college has presented medallions to its alumni; in the past the awards were given only to arts and sciences undergraduates.

The alumni medallion is awarded to arts and sciences graduates based on achievements in their personal and professional lives.

Five alumni received awards; they were Dr. Thomas L. Corwin, Thomas G. Labrecque, Hon. Robert N.C. Nix, Lawrence M. O'Rourke, Esq., and Dr. John J. Rumbarger.

Corwin, a 1969 graduate, is currently a vice-president at Daniel H. Wagner Associates, consultants in operations research and mathematics.

Labrecque serves as president and chief operating officer of Chase Manhattan Bank and its parent company, the Chase Manhattan Corporation. A 1960 graduate, he also serves as a member of Villanova's Board of Trustees.

Nix, who graduated in 1960, is at present an associate justice of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Law School.

O'Rourke currently serves as deputy assistant secretary for public affairs in the recently-created Department of Education. He formerly was the Washington Bureau Chief for The Philadelphia Bulletin. O'Rourke graduated from Villanova in 1959.

Rambarger, also a 1959 graduate, is editor of The Journal of the National Archives.

Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of arts and sciences, presented the medallions to the recipients. Robert Capone, alumni office director, presided over the ceremonies.

O'Malley, describing the award procedure, said that there were no specific categories for nominations. "We simply took five of the very best nominees," he noted. The nominations for the awards were made by faculty members, O'Malley pointed out.

All the recipients expressed their gratitude to Villanova and the College of Arts and Sciences for playing an important part in their successes and achievements.

Labrecque revealed that he deliberately chose arts and sciences because he wanted "the best preparation" for a business career.

Rumbarger recalled the members of the faculty who had taught

Iran - Iraq Hostilities Evaluated

By TOM HULL

With the recent hostilities between Iran and Iraq, there has been much speculation over how the United States will be affected by the war and what the status of Persian Gulf oil supplies will be in the future.

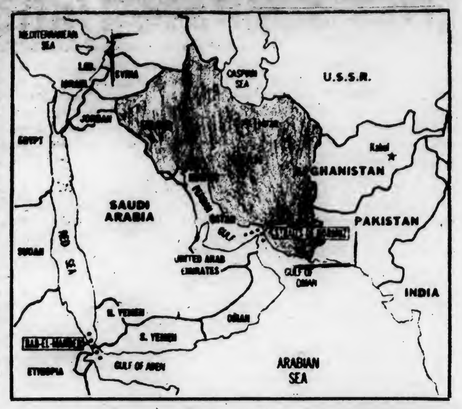
Dr. Hafeez Malik, political science professor and director of Pakistani studies at Villanova, explained that the dispute started when Iraq protested the fact that the Iranian navy took control of three islands which lie directly in the entrance of the Straits of Hormuz.

The straits are the only waterway which leads into and out of the Persian Gulf, from which the U.S., Japan, and Western Europe import well over one-half of their oil supplies. The three islands, Big Tumb, Little Tumb, and Abumuza, lie in the thinnest part of the straits, where the width is only four nautical miles.

Iraq has demanded that the Iranian government turn these islands over to the United Arab Emirates, the country which formerly controlled them. The Iraqis have threatened to blockade the strait, and stop all Iranian exports if the islands are not given back.

According to Malik, this blockade is very possible. "Being that the channel is only four nautical miles wide, it would be very easy to block all Iranian ships from entering and exiting. The width of the strait only permits two shipping lanes, one entering and one exiting. If the Iraqis are successful in carrying out their threat, then they would successfully cut off virtually all world oil exports."

"Despite its implications, there is no need for concern at the present time on the part of the U.S.," said Malik. He believes that unless the war becomes protracted, there is no cause to fear a gas or oil shortage. Malik stated America has a 4-6 month oil reserve supply which he hopes will not be needed if the two nations take their propositions to the negotiating table and not the battlefield.



Debate Considers Death Penalty

By CAROL ALKONS

Edward Rendell, district attorney of Philadelphia, came to Villanova Monday night to lead a debate on capital punishment.

The Villanova Political Union decided to accept the Resolution 5-6, that: This House favors Capital Punishment in appropriate cases.

The program consisted of a thirty-minute speech by Rendell followed by seven-minute speeches given by representatives of two of the three parties in the Political Union.

Rendell explained that "no topic in criminal justice evokes more emotion than that of capital punishment. The issue cannot be decided by studying data and statistics because there are too many variables. This must be decided almost emotionally."

"Capital punishment must be examined in terms of the goals of the criminal justice system: rehabilitation, punishment, and deterrence. Granted, a death sentence would not help to rehabilitate an offender, but the threat of a death sentence would serve in the two other regards," said Rendell.

"Punishment is an absolutely appropriate goal of the criminal justice system; the system would collapse without it," he continued. "I'm a great believer that these people are violent from the day they are born until the day they are put to death. The only way to protect society from them as well as if they were dead is to keep them in solitary confinement. But there is no money for that or rehabilitation," said Rendell.

The response of the Liberal Party, represented by Owen Evans was: "Capital punishment is a component part in the issue of why our criminal justice system does not work. Only 3% of all crimes end up in conviction; people just don't consider being caught. Capital punishment does not deter crime."

Evans stated that the judicial system must be improved. "Convince people that they will be caught and processed and sentenced to jail. Before we go to the extreme of a death penalty we must work from the bottom up and improve the system. The criminal justice system is crumbling of its own weight."

Patrick O'Neil, representing the Moderate Party, said that "the death penalty is revenge by society. No death penalty will deter crime. Nothing is being endorsed by capital punishment except senseless barbarism and legalized killing. The system should be above murderers."

The Conservative Party did not have a caucus and voted to abstain from speaking.

The crowning of Ann Mariano as Homecoming Queen highlighted the 1980 Homecoming ceremonies last Saturday, prior to the Villanova-Boston College football game.

Mariano, a senior nurse, was a member of last year's court. She was escorted by senior Paul Kidd, and had been nominated by the Cheerleaders.

The first runner-up to Mariano was Gianna Ravuado, a freshman competing in her first Homecoming ceremony. Patti Ferri, also a senior nurse, was the second runner-up.

Missy Araya, a junior communications major and an assistant features editor on The Villanovan, was third runner-up. Sophomore Terri Lynn Fish was fourth runner-up, and Tee Hoyne finished as the fifth runner-up.

Attorney Plans Case For Crosswalk

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Several Villanova students will be selected to testify at the October 7 Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission hearing at which the University will argue for a safer passenger crossing for the Villanova train station.

"The issue at this hearing is whether or not dangerous conditions exist at the train station," stated attorney James Patterson, who is handling the case for Villanova. "We argue that they do because we don't think the underpass is safe. It is flooded during storms, and it is dangerous for women at night even if it is not flooded."

Amtrak first renovated the tunnel last year when a Villanova freshman was killed crossing the tracks after a rainstorm flooded the tunnel.

"What I'm trying to do is load our guns with all the ammunition possible. I say women find the tunnel unsafe — and I guess men probably do too. We're going to be trying to gather together members of the student body as witnesses to this," explained Patterson. "I want to get men and women but I am particularly interested in having women testify."

Explaining what action students interested in testifying during the hearing should take, Patterson said, "I would prefer to set up with Father Deegan or his nominee some program to collect names of those who are interested. We will then come out and interview them."

Patterson has received tentative approval from the PUC to hold the second day of the hearing at Villanova University where the student witnesses could testify.

"The University is filing complaints against Conrail, Amtrak, Septa, the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, Delaware County and Radnor Township — all of whom have an interest in what happens because some or all of them will have to pay if we are successful," said Patterson. "These six are called the respondents and in this instance Villanova University is the complainant.

"Their position has been that the underpass is adequate as a means to get to the other side of the tracks. The issue is drawn — are existing facilities adequate or safe?" said Patterson, noting that the only alternatives to using the underpass are to cross the tracks or to use the overpass above Route 320. "The obvious problem with crossing the tracks is that you are going to get hit. And if you've seen it, you know the bridge is not safe either," he added.

If Judge Fountain finds that the existing facilities are unsafe, the PUC will have the power to require repairs or improvements, and to allocate which of the defendants will pay for these improvements.

"The PUC will put a time limit on these improvements if they have to be made," said Patterson. "From the way that I ride down highways and see repairs being done, it seems to take forever, though. I don't know what a bridge engineer would say about how long it would take to improve the overpass, for instance."

Campus Buildings Modified To Facilitate Handicapped

By LAURIE MILLER

Considerable construction and renovation work was performed over the past summer in order to make Villanova facilities accessible to the handicapped.

This work was done in order to bring the University into accordance with Federal regulations concerning the rights of the handicapped.

Planning for the work was done by the Committee for the Handicapped, which is chaired by Ed Collymore, who also serves as director of social action.

Funds were appropriated for the Committee to carry out the construction for handicapped accessibility to facilities. Maintenance was then asked to conduct a study about the cost of revisions to be made. After the study was completed, the Committee set priorities for construction.

Ed Maher, assistant to the director of maintenance, stated that construction of the facilities began last January. Referring to a Federal directive, he added that the University had to show "an honest effort" in providing accessibility by June 1.

Exterior construction included the building of access ramps for major buildings across campus including Bartley, Dougherty and Kennedy Halls as well as the Field House. Parking areas were also set aside for use of handicapped drivers and curb cuts were made in front of the Chemical Engineering building, the Library and Kennedy Hall.

Modifications were also made to the interiors of many buildings. These involved converting bathroom facilities in order to make them accessible to the handicapped.

University Hosts Festival

By LEN LA BARTH

A number of community events, including the opening activities of Main Line Week and the Delaware County Special Olympics, will commence at Villanova University on Sunday, October 5.

The opening event of Main Line Week, sponsored by the Main Line Chamber of Commerce, will be a 6.2 mile mini-marathon that will begin on North Ithan Avenue and finish in the university stadium. According to organizer Joni Reusche, "Over $2,000 in prizes will be awarded to the runners from the tri-state area, including silver bowls, gold wristwatches, a $100 gift certificate from Jacob Reed's men's store to the men's winner and a $100 certificate from the Joseph Banks store to the first-place woman finisher."

Following the race, runners and spectators can enjoy cuisine served at an afternoon food festival sponsored by approximately twelve local restaurants including J.P.'s, Conestoga Mill, Armenian Delight, Pizza Hut, and Higgin's Baking. Crepes and funnel cakes will also be prepared and sold at the food festival from 1 to 4 p.m. in the parking lot opposite the field house.

Sponsored by Villanovans for Life and the Responsible Citizen Program of the Sun Company in Radnor, the annual Delaware County Special Olympics for mentally retarded children and adults will be held at the university.

Approximately 300 "special" participants from local schools will engage in soccer and frisbee tournaments held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Austin and Mendel Fields respectively.

Over 400 volunteer students, staff, and faculty from Villanova will assist in the events. Groups on campus participating include the University band, the Wildcat Ultimate Frisbee team, and the men's and women's soccer teams, as well as several fraternities and sororities.

The Sun Oil Company is funding a large share of the program.

Pay Rates Rise For Work Study

By MARK KRAHFORST

Villanova has boosted its pay rates as of September 1 in anticipation of the passing of a bill currently being discussed in Congress which would mandate that all college students enrolled in their school's work study program be paid at least the minimum wage.

"We anticipate that the minimum wage for work study will be made effective January 1, 1991, should the bill become law. The pay rate for our work study students was raised to the minimum effective September 1 so that the pay rate would be consistent throughout the school year," cited Ann Keisler, coordinator of the college work study program here at the University, as the prime reason for the pay hike.

There are three levels of pay in the program based on description in the job detail issued by the work study office. The current pay rates for the levels are $3.35, $4.00, and $4.50 per hour respectively. The average pay hike in the three levels is approximately $.50.

Villanova students are still enrolling in work study for this semester and final tabulations of the actual number of students participating in the program have not as yet been made. There were approximately 250 students enrolled in last summer's program at Villanova.

Besides the pay raises awarded to the work study students, the wages paid out to regular work students were also increased. The regular work salary hike amounted to $.25 from $2.85 to $3.10 per hour.

The career decision you make today could influence national security tomorrow.

For professionals at NSA contribute to the dual missions of foreign intelligence production and communications security.

Our Electronic Engineers, Computer Scientists and Mathematicians are working with systems at the cutting edge of technology.

Career opportunities and challenge await you in any of these NSA career fields.

Electronic Engineering: There are opportunities in a variety of research and development projects ranging from individual equipments to very complex interactive systems involving large numbers of microprocessors, mini-computers and computer graphics. Professional growth is enhanced through interaction with highly experienced NSA professionals and through contacts in the industrial and academic worlds. Facilities for engineering analysis and design automation are among the best available.

Computer Science: At NSA you'll discover one of the largest computer installations in the world with almost every major vendor of computer equipment represented. NSA careers provide mixtures of such disciplines as systems analysis and design, scientific applications programming, data base management systems, operating systems, computer networking/security, and graphics.

Mathematics: You'll work on diverse Agency problems applying a variety of mathematical disciplines. Specific assignments might include solving communications-related problems, performing long-range mathematical research or evaluating new techniques for communications security.

NSA also offers a salary and benefit program that's truly competitive with private industry. There are assignments for those who wish to travel and abundant good living in the Baltimore-Washington area for those who wish to stay close to home.

Countless cultural, historical, recreational and educational opportunities are just minutes away from NSA's convenient suburban location.

At NSA your future will be linked to the nation's. The vital role that the National Security Agency plays demands and ensures constant challenge and professional growth.

High School Students Attend Open House

By ANNE SUYDAM

The annual open house for high school seniors was held on Saturday, September 27. It began at 10 a.m. with a welcome from Father President Driscoll, and Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A. director of admissions. The students then met with the various schools for course information, lab tours and student activity possibilities.

Guided tours were given by Blue Key Society members. Dougherty Hall was open with representatives from admissions, financial aid, and athletics.

Dorothy Boyle, a member of the admissions staff worked with Erdlen in preparing for the open house. She said that ads were placed in The Inquirer, The Bulletin, and on local radio stations. Boyle also placed ads in local parish bulletins handed out at Sunday services.

A turnout of eight hundred was expected and although five hundred actually attended, the admission office was pleased.

"Having the Open House during Homecoming weekend offered more excitement for the high school students and they were able to see what a busy weekend is like at Villanova," Erdlen said.

All activities were designed so that the visiting students received desired counseling on a one-to-one basis.

Father President Driscoll and Father O'Malley, Dean of Arts and Sciences, greet prospective Villanovan at Candidates Day.

Villanova's Side of Story Untold

Press Accounts Are Unbalanced

Even though Villanova's campus is fairly self-contained, it has a definite relationship with the surrounding community. Many local merchants thrive on student business. Our academic resources are available to area residents. Our athletic events thrill local sports fans.

Villanova is not a perfect neighbor, but we do have a positive influence on the Main Line area. Yet, many people try to contend that Villanova students cause problems for the community.

Recently, local press reports have presented Villanova in a unfavorable light to the people in the area. The last two issues of the Suburban and Wayne Times contained articles derogatory to the Villanova student body and administration.

In September 18 issue of the paper, the headline read "Police To Clamp Down On Villanova Students." The article reported on local reaction to off-campus activities by Villanova students. The article, however, does not quote any administration officials or student representatives. To be fair, both sides of the story should be presented.

More important, however, is the article's showing of local resentment toward Villanova. For example, the article said, "Another caller Saturday afternoon said that Villanova students were upsetting cattle on a field of the dairy on Darby-Paoli Rd. The report does not in icate (sic) how the complainant identified the trespassers as students, but in any case police found no one at the pasture."

The above incident is not newsworthy, at least not on the front page of a reputable newspaper. When local residents read something like this, though, they are convinced that it is true.

The following week, the Suburban and Wayne Times printed an editorial on the Augustinian Cemetery in front of St. Mary's Hall. According to the editorial, the bodies in the cemetery are to be moved to a site in Havertown.

It seems that the paper did not have enough information about the story to run it as a news item, so it came out in the editorial column. Besides a letter to and from a relative of one of the priests, there are no other sources; no quotes from the Villanova administration nor the Augustinian fathers. Again, before a newspaper prints something as factual to its readers, all sides and angles of the story must be pursued.

Without soliciting a response to the charges, the editorial states "It is disturbing to all those with ties to the Villanova community — and, at least vicariously — all residents of Radnor township are members of that community, too, that the current officialdom of the Order seems to have no sense of history; no sense that the graves of the departed can-be an inspiration for those who come after them, for generations. If the area is too heavily traveled; if there is too much trash; well, steps can be taken to alleviate the traffic on the main campus. And, perhaps, more important, the Augustinian Order could require, as part of Freshman orientation, that every student be personally taken to the cemetery, shown the graves of those who gave their lives for Villanova.

It is natural for local residents to have a dim view of Villanova when they are confronted with stories such as these every week.

But Villanova is a part of the local community and the building of strong and working relationship is important to both parties.

By approaching Villanova and student-related stories with objectivity and adherence to professional journalistic standards, the local press might set the tone for such a relationship.

Moral Considerations

Dear Editor:

In his editorial "Duty, Honor and The Draft," Robert A. Montserrat touches upon enough issues to have a course offered called REFUTING ESSAYS 1001. Although he tries to deal pragmatically with the draft issue, his solutions and underlying assumptions require deeper moral considerations.

It is true that the current problems with America's military need attention. People in our armed forces sometimes have to hold down as many as two outside jobs to help balance their budgets. Married military couples are in actual need of more income to feed and clothe their children. It follows that our defense ability has deteriorated; without enough incentive people simply cannot afford to volunteer for service. Yet higher salaries, not the draft, will solve the main problems for a peacetime defense system.

In reference to the discipline problem, Mr. Montserrat begins to illustrate his warped sense of values. Those interested in a military lifestyle know that the program is rigorous and disciplined before they enter it. It is and should remain the individual's decision as to whether or not he or she wants to live that way. The author sarcastically comments that soldiers in the armed forces expect "their rights." Well, when a man decides to let himself be "made" into a soldier does it mean that he is to forefeit all rights to make decisions? If so, that is a very dangerous practice. Hitler's SS men sacrificed their private emotions for the state leaving them with weak defense cries of "Befehlsnotstand" compared to the gravity of the crimes against humanity which they performed. I hope that our "men in blue" can be sensitive, thoughtful military people not just trained, disciplined animals.

Mr. Montserrat's consideration of social integration as one of the advantages of the draft displays a rather naive viewpoint. One simply has to consider the results of forced busing to realize that the men of Harvard and the men of Harlem will not be yachting together every Saturday when the war's over. What is truly ironic is that the writer's use of the English language rings with racism. To state in one part of an essay that our defense is composed of "black and brown men" after calling these same men the "dregs of society" is a serious oversight.

Yet, in the true style of Archie Bunker, he did not limit his condescending classifications to color. His statement that "no man truly knows the will of God well enough to justify him shirking his respo[nsi]bility to his nation" was obviously aim[ed] at conscientious objectors. Merely equipp[ed] with human reason man may not have th[e] capacity to comprehend Divine truths y[et] he can certainly understand the words "Thou Shalt Not Kill." To refute the charg[e] of social irresponsibility that these peop[le] are accused of, I suggest that the writer r[e]hold of some C.O. literature and read abo[ut] the alternative service programs that th[ey] are involved in.

Mr. Montserrat allows that war [is] morally wrong. How then can conscriptio[n] a practice which stems from this horrib[le] man-made reality be deemed a "moral[ly] valid avenue?" To deny an individual a fr[ee] choice concerning something very basic [to] his lifestyle — is theoretically u[n]American. Mere habit does not make an a[c]tion right. Yet each of us must turn o[ur] energies toward the avoidance of war; it [is] gravely presumptuous to consider "out ne[xt] war." If we choose to get involved, it w[ill] surely be our LAST war. I would imagi[ne] that "our conscripted ancestors who paid [in] blood, sweat and toil" did not do so for us [to] continue warfare in honor of them. Peace [is] a much greater tribute.

Unrealized Bigotry

ar Editor:

I am writing in response to Robert A. ontserrat's distressing slip in "Duty, nor, and the Draft" (September 26, 0). In demand that Mr. Montserrat logize to the Villanova community for at I believe to be a gross racial slur. Mr. Montserrat, in arguing for the reation of the draft, has exposed an ugly ory, a bigotry perhaps he is not even re of. While posturing that the draft and volunteer army are "socially unfair," he es, "As it now stands, the dregs of iety will pay the ghastly price of the next ". From this premise he adds, "We can- have black and brown men defend a pri- rily white nation."

submit that Mr. Montserrat's sequence thoughts are unacceptably offensive and st be retracted or clarified. To write ut an army which is "socially unfair" ause it is composed of Americans in the ority, and then to contend that only ugs" will suffer in the event of war is to gerously equate minorities with dregs. Mr. Montserrat, your bigotry, although subtleties may escape you, is unstakably clear and frightening.

Even if this letter does not appear in The lanovan I will pursue this matter until I thoroughly satisfied. Minority students e on campus deserve that this irponsible, disgraceful exercise in propadistic journalism be answered and exined fully.

Respectfully Yours,
LOUIS D. TERRANOVA '82

Alcohol Policy

would like to take this space in Villa-a's student newspaper to express the lings of many students regarding Villa-a's alcohol policy. First, let me express concern about the total confusion that ently exists among the students, the dent assistants and even the adminisors. I appreciate the concern that the ministration has about the large quantity lcohol that is consumed by some stu-ts. It is a problem; a problem that uld be dealt with in a mature fashion ough education, not obliteration. It is the time when you were a young child your mother told you not to go to the kie jar. Well, there were children who ed and wouldn't go near the cookie jar. n there were those who became at-ted to the cookie jar that because they told not to go near it became a chal-ge and the cookies tasted better than . Now if the Villanova administration a chance they would create their own kie policy." Since some children dis-ed they would not allow any children to any cookies because they would be that no one was able to understand they should stay away from the ies.

o get away from the analogy, Villanova's alled concern (and I called it this be-e nothing positive has been done) is ting an alienation among the students, resident assistants, the administration the alumni. Yes the alumni, whom Vil-va calls each year and asks for dona-s, are also concerned. Certainly it was evident this weekend when they d up to the parking lot across the et from the field house and saw a sign g "no-tailgates" when in fact they had invited by the alumni association gh Father Driscoll to pre-game festivi-Talk about confusion? And to top that, e even tried to stop the tailgates. I the concern of the administration only so far as the sign.

ave been very critical, but is hard not . Villanova has taken a step back into rk ages. A step that is very, very un- and very, very negative. They have de- to punish all students because some t know how to drink moderately. This t help those that have a problem, be- they still go elsewhere and become a problem for all of us when they are on the road. It doesn't help those that don't need any help because they just become angry at the administration and those sent to enforce the rules. It only helps the administration, who can say they are trying something. It is a very poor and uneducated attempt of showing concern.

I, like the administration, am concerned; however, our concerns go in opposite directions. I am concerned for the administration, who appear more confused everyday with what exactly the alcohol policy is and how they want it enforced. I am concerned for the resident assistants who have to try to enforce a rule that they or their bosses don't really understand. I am concerned for Villanova students who want to be treated as mature adults and start making decisions for themselves, which is what college is supposed to be all about. Villanova took a minor step in that direction when it opened the dorms to people of the opposite sex. However, even that positive step was realistically about ten years late. Now it is time for Villanova to make another positive step. They must admit that the alcohol policy as it is now stated and attempted to be enforced is not very practicable nor even realistic. They must realize that they have made a terrible mistake and created tension and confusion. Their concern should be more realistically pointed to those who need it, and the sooner the better.

I welcome comments from administrators, resident assistants and other students, but unfortunately cannot sign this knowing that at Villanova freedom of speech may be used against me at a later date and so I sign,

A REALLY Concerned Student

Tailgating

Dear Editor:

We are reminded time and again about the minority of students who are labled as irresponsible and inconsiderate villians. They rummage about our campus and community with the end result of tarnishing the integrity of student opinion. Yet, when one observes courses of action taken to alleviate pressing problems (i.e., tail-gating), one soon realizes that our select minority is not a dying species!

Pre/post tail-gating has its roots imbedded in V.U.'s parking lot — a tradition longstanding. On the contrary, there are those who believe the time has come for a change. True, life is an ever-changing equation. But tackling tradition is a change that warrants a little more consideration.

First, let us consider a couple of arguments against relocation of tail-gates: 1) severance of tradition; 2) eventual destruction of practice field; 3) possible injury to players from tail-gate debris; 4) possible lawsuits; 5) size inadequacy.

Second, let us consider a couple of arguments for relocation of tail-gates: 1) removal from public eye; 2) forces people to purchase tickets and attend games; 3) alleviates maintenance of a parking lot; 4) proximity of bathroom facilities; 5) proximity to stadium.

Obviously, both sides have their points but consider the tune of such repercussions as: the mass confusion and traffic-jam of spectators and tail-gating enthusiasts; a slipt in the V.U. community among school organizations and family; and the fission of the festive atmosphere associated with Parent's Weekend.

The dilemma is upon us. Tail-gating possesses problems that will never die. They may wither or even hibernate, but never die.

Our course of action can be one of two ways. First, a plan devised by a conductor-director-producer of universal capability and insight can be implemented. This type of plan eventually leads to utter chaos, as evidence by countless examples. The second available course is to orchestrate a plan that addresses the problem both realistically and economically.

For example, the answer to the debris problem is not to pass the buck onto students, alumni, nor maintenance, but to react by dispersing dumpsters throughout the parking lot. By following such, at least three ends are achieved. First, one eliminates the problem of broken glass the students complain about. Second, one eliminates the complaint of creating an eyesore on the Main Line.

It is about time that Villanova University is acknowledged as an integral part of its surrounding community. If we Villanovans hope to elimate such a status to our neighbors through the pursuit of such irresponsible actions as hiding tail-gates (out of sight, out of mind), then we are grossly misled. As a student, I support the campaign for responsible students; perhaps I should support a similar venture for others!

Name on File

Absentees

To the Editor:

I would like to voice my strong disappointment in the behavior, perhaps I should say, lack of behavior, of the conservative party at the recent meeting of the Political Union. While a serious issue was being debated, most of the regular members of the conservative party chose not to even attend the debate. Worst of all, the conservative party chairman, Bob Monstserrat, did not attend and gave absolutely no reason for his lack of attendance. The only thing that was heard from the party was that they were too stymied to reach any stand whatsoever on the issue in their own pre-debate caucus.

It is well known that Mr. Montserrat has an opinion on every issue "known to man," all of them conservative opinions, of course. So why was he unable or unwilling to even express his own opinion on the issue during the debate? It is well within it the rights of a party chairman to express his own opinion without setting any official party line. Mr. Montserrat's lack of attendance shows a blatant lack of responsibility and good taste upon his part. Perhaps the issue was too complicated for him. Yet, in the past he has always shown a great willingness and ability, though misdirected, to deal with the issues. One can only hope that in the future Mr. Montserrat will take his duties more seriously.

Respectfully,
Patrick K. O'Neill

NOTICE

Villanova University has filled a complaint with the Public Utilities Commission for relief of the pedestrian traffic problem at the bridge over the Railroad tracks on Route 320. Any student, faculty or staff who has personal experience of the danger of pedestrians crossing this bridge and who would be willing to testify before the P.U.C. to this fact should contact Fr. Deegan, Vice President for Student Life, Room 201 Dougherty Hall, EXT 4550. Lawyers for the University will be interviewing witnesses in the near future. A representative sample will be selected to give testimoney before the P.U.C. Also, persons who have factual experience as to why the tunnel is an unacceptable alternative may volunteer to testify.

Libertarians Gain Popularity

By ROBERT HAGSTROM

From the time they attend the first grade, and even before, Americans are taught that there are two political parties in America — Republicans and Democrats — and that there are two political philosophies — conservative and liberal. For years political debate in the United States has been confined to a phony tug-of-war between liberals and conservatives, sometimes called "left" and "right" viewpoints — as if these two choices were the only alternatives.

Liberals (the "left") have half-heartedly supported civil liberties, while working to reduce economic freedom.

Conservatives (the "right") favor a bit more economic freedom, while working to crush civil liberties and enforce social conformity.

Libertarians reject both of these inconsistent positions. Because of their commitment to the concept of individual rights, Libertarians strongly support freedom in both social and economic affairs.

The Libertarian alternative is a unique political philosophy which has never before been fully implemented in American history, although it traces its roots to the classical liberal tradition of Thomas Jefferson, George Mason, and Thomas Paine. Founded in 1972, the party has from the beginning attracted supporters from across the entire political spectrum. In the party's first serious presidential campaign in 1976, Roger L. MacBride was on the ballot in 32 states and received 174,000 votes, not a large total, but nonetheless, it was more than any other third party candidate. It was the "off year" elections of 1978 that clearly established the Libertarian Party as something other than a minor party, and demonstrated its potential to create a three party system in America. That year about 200 Libertarians ran for office and garnered over 1.3 million votes.

With projected ballot status in each of the fifty states and the District of Columbia, Ed Clark (Presidential candidate for the Libertarian Party) is heading the most serious third party effort in the United States in over half a century. In 1980 approximately 600 Libertarians are seeking office at the state legislative and congressional levels.

Many political observers in the media have concluded that the Libertarians have positioned themselves to make a major impact in 1980 and the decade to follow. San Francisco Examiner political reporter Larry Hatfield wrote that the Libertarians are "the fastest growing political party in America and perhaps the most serious third party in this century." Nick Thimmesch of the New York Times writes "Where both parties seem becalmed of ideas, the Libertarians send fresh gusts . . . the party is far more creative, diverse in approach, and intellectually stimulating than either the Democrats or Republicans."

History shows that the best way to solve problems is to leave people free to find their own solutions — without government compulsion or interference.

The Libertarian Party holds that "all individuals have the right to exercise sole dominion over their own lives, and have the right to live in whatever manner they choose, so long as they do not forcibly interfere with the equal right of others to live in whatever manner they choose."

By JOHN PACE, JR.
and CAIT CLARKE

This week, the Villanovan asked students their opinions on the conflict between Iran and Iraq. We asked, "What do you think would be the proper response for the United States to make to the conflict between Iran and Iraq? Should the U.S. take any action? Should we take any sides? Do you think the conflict will have any effect on the fate of the American hostages?"

The situation in the Middle East at this time is a critical one. Since our nation depends upon that area for energy resources, alternate means of energy production should be promoted. All possible means should be taken to avoid our nation's involvement in the Middle East. I'd rather not comment on the fate of the hostages.

DAN O'NEILL

At this point in time I feel that the United States should stay neutral in the war between Iran and Iraq. The reason being that the U.S. cannot be committed against Iran because of the hostages or against Iraq because of Russia.

KEVIN J. O'LEARY

The United States should take no immediate offensive action. Instead, they should pursue diplomatic action with Iran and Iraq. The U.S. should side with either povided the country will best benefit the fate of the hostages and will best serve the interests of our country.

CHRIS SERAT

I definitely don't think the United States should be involved. We should just sit back unless the hostages are in immediate danger as a result of the war. In that case we should take action on Iran.

ANIT SPINELLA

I think they should basically stay out of it for the time being. The only excuse I could see for the U.S. getting involved would be if it turned into a regional conflict that may draw in the Soviet Union.

I think that since Iran is engaged in a war with Iraq this is the best time to go in and get the hostages. We should let them know we're coming. They're in one war; they can't afford to fight two wars.

Parking Poses Some Problems

By LAURIE ALMEDA

When a populace of students go through the agonies of waiting in line and paying money for the supposed necessity of a parking permit, it is not taken lightly if the students' money is spent in vain.

A random inspection of 325 cars situated in various areas of the parking lot revealed that 54% of the cars surveyed had valid parking stickers, while the remaining 46% of those cars had either an invalid sticker or no sticker at all. The whole meaning and worth of the parking permit is brought into question by these figures.

Seniors, juniors, and all commuting students are eligible for permits, which cost $25 for the year. "We do have enough space for the cars if everyone went through the system," stated Captain Joseph Cunnane, head of security.

Watching a car circling the lot in search of an empty parking space, somewhat like a falcon circling in the sky waiting to pounce upon its prey, it becomes apparent to the observer that the number of cars attempting to park in the lot exceeds the number of available spaces.

"We have to be fair to the students who paid their money," continued Cunnane, "the ineligibles should take their cars home." Cunnane also stated that there wasn't a "large percentage" of cars parked without permits, but that "flagrant offenders and cars parked in the inner campus would be towed or ticketed, and that repeat offenders would be sent to the Dean of Men or Women."

Looking at the figures it appears that the rules are almost unenforceable. Towing does take place in the lots, but almost half the cars would have to be towed or ticketed to enforce the rules completely. This might make towing companies and police happy, but it would probably cause discontent among many students. One student had taken a precautionary measure against towing. A note inside the windshield of the car said, "Please do not tow this car — I have already paid for a permit but am waiting to receive another one."

"I don't want to harass anybody," stated Cunnane, "it's important for students to respect the rights of others. The freshmen and sophomores are here for four years; their time will come when they are eligible to park too. Until then, they shouldn't be taking up other students' spaces."

A scene in the main parking lot.

Of course, if a car is towed because it was parked illegally, it will cost the owner $35 to get it out of impoundment, making the $25 fee for a parking sticker more economical. But if the owner of a car can outsmart the towing company for a year, spending $25 for something unnecessary could seem a bit extravagant. The intrigue of dodging the cops and the tow trucks for a year may seem more exciting anyway.

"The subject of parking permits is touchy because we have people trying to circumvent the system," stated Cunnane. To the observer it might seem that students do circumvent the system without feeling any ill effects. This doesn't mean that students don't take the administration seriously; it just means that rules aren't taken seriously if they're easy to get around.

RSA Adopts New Structure

By CATHERINE SHEILS

The Resident Student Association, (the RSA), is the organization involved with improving resident life through individual dorm programming and intra-campus events.

This year, the structure of the RSA has been somewhat reformed. In the past, the organization consisted of the area representatives, area chairmen, dormitory presidents, and the executive committee. This year, the position of area chairman has been omitted. The RSA hopes that by omitting the position of area chairman, they will create a more direct communication line between the organization and the resident students.

By the new standard, four area representatives are elected from each dormitory floor or wing. From the area representatives, a dormitory president is chosen. The executive committee, which consists of the RSA president and the four vice-presidents, works in conjunction with all hall presidents forming the Campus Council. This year the hall presidents and executive committee are attending a series of Leardership Workshops.

On the operational level, the RSA is subdivided into various committees each having a specific function. The Resident Life Committee deals with specific problems in individual dorms and security measures. The Social Committee works with other campus organizations to improve and coordinate the Freshman Orientation Program. The Publicity Committee helps inform the resident students of campus events sponsored by the RSA. Finally, the Evaluation Committee attempts to improve already existing programs.

Another part of the RSA is the Judicial Board. This board is comprised of students who decide what action should be taken in disciplinary cases involving dormitory living. This board works in conjunction with the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women. Any student may apply for this position on the Board. All applications are considered and then through an interviewing process, the Board is chosen.

The RSA has many social events scheduled this year. They plan to run a series of Coffee Houses. During Parents' Weekend, individual dormitories will hold receptions after the football game. Also, on Sunday of Parents' Weekend many masses will be celebrated with coffee and doughnuts afterwards. Like last year, a Mr. Villanova contest will be held in which the girls' dormitories will nominate guys for the contest. On St. Patrick's Day, a trip will be sponsored to New York City in order to see the St. Patrick's Day Parade.

Mike Imperiale, a junior resident at St. Mary's, is presently serving as the president of the RSA. He acted as an area representative last year and was elected to the presidency in April by the campus council. Mike comments, "I feel the main purpose of the RSA is to provide some type of continuity to resident life and to make living on campus as desirable as possible in accordance with all University regulations."

This once again brings up the question of the alcohol policy. "The RSA will abide by the University policy concerning alcohol 100%. Dormitories are permitted to have parties and various other social events if they go

'Queen' Discusses Homecoming

By KATY WALSH

Homecoming 1980 was just about as special a day as they come. Old friends, beautiful weather, and an unexpected victory over Boston College made September 27 and example of the perfect homecoming.

For Ann Mariano, the day must have reached somewhere beyond perfection. The senior nursing major was presented at a pre-game ceremony as Villanova's 1980 Homecoming Queen. Completing the homecoming court were senior Patricia Ferri, junior Melissa Arayo, sophomores Terri Lynn Fish and Tee Hayne, and freshman Gianna Rovaudo.

To be one of the chosen six involved a competition no less difficult than the one on the field. Forty campus organizations nominated one girl to represent it in the homecoming election. The student body voted for six finalists. These six women were then invited to a reception given jointly by the Villanova Student Union and the Office of Student Activities. The votes the girls receive at this gathering were added to the student votes, and the homecoming queen was named the same night.

"It's a different kind of competition," explained Ann. "We had to meet members of the administration and the faculty, and talk to them all. They'd come up to us, or we'd have to go up and talk to them."

Having been LXA's nominee and a member of the homecoming court last year, she observed, "You're judged not so much on ability as sociability." This year, chosen to represent her fellow cheerleaders, Ann had to admit "It wasn't as bad this year. Still . . . you don't really know what they're looking for."

Despite the ordeal of the contest, Ann had a special feeling about the whole idea of homecoming.

"It's so neat. In high school, homecoming is really something to look forward to. In college it's the same. It's neat to see everybody back again. . . . I'm a little bummed out that I'll be leaving after this year. I'm already looking forward to next homecoming."

"It's strange, too. You always look through the yearbooks and see all the pictures of homecoming. This time I'll look, and I'll be in there!"

It might be strange now, but this time next year, Ann Mariano will be back at Villanova, remembering Homecoming '80 as one of the nicest times of her life.

Entertain Your Parents

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

October 10, 11, and 12 mark the dates of the annual Parents' Weekend. Although the idea of seeing our families, relaxing and talking sounds very inviting, how to keep parents occupied and interested for an entire weekend is still a problem. Here are some suggestions that might spark some excitement in both you and your family.

If your weekend begins on Friday evening, a cocktail party and dance at the Covered Wagon Inn in Strafford, sponsored by the Blue Key Society is a possibility. Dance music will be provided by the Concert Band.

But if heavy socializing does not fit in with your immediate plans, how about a movie? The Villanova Union is sponsoring "Shampoo" in the Connelly Center Cinema at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. Admission is $1.00.

Saturday begins with a welcome address by Father President Driscoll, and a 1:30 kickoff of the Wildcats-Cincinnati game. Try a tailgate with your parents before and even after the game. Along with rooting for the Wildcats you can catch a glance at the Marching Wildcats' pre-game, half-time, and post-game shows.

Some of the possibilities for after-game dining are: Winston's in Bryn Mawr, featuring 22 varieties of hamburgers; Gullifty's in Rosemont, with a variety of Italian food; the Picket Post Inn in Gulph Mills; or choose between the Rusty Scupper in Philadelphia on the waterfront for a dramatic evening or the one in Strafford for a quiet and elegant setting. If relaxing and hanging out close to home suits you better, then try the all-time favorite, order strombolis.

The Villanova Union will sponsor a dance in the Fieldhouse from 10-1 a.m. on Saturday.

Sunday Mass at noon can be preceded by breakfast at the International House of Pancakes, in Ardmore.

Another suggestion for a different kind of Sunday is a trip to Philadelphia. There's the Philadelphia Art Museum containing priceless collections of paintings, sculpture, prints, furnishings, and objects from the Far East, Medieval era, Renaissance periods, as well as contemporary works.

The Philadelphia Zoological Gardens, housing 42 acres of the finest animals all featured in natural settings is a tourist attraction. Follow that with a tour of the Academy of Music, the home of the world famous Philadelphia Orchestra. See backstage, orchestra pit, dressing rooms, and more.

Independence Mall and America's most venerable symbol of Independence, the Liberty Bell, are always interesting sites. Impressive buildings, old and new, surround the Mall.

There are stores and malls in the area if you care to shop. Some of these are: Wanamakers, Altmans, King of Prussia Mall, and The Gallery in Center City.

The Connelly Center may fit into your plans for the weekend. Game rooms are available for your entertainment.

Club Appeals to Iranians

By CATHY MURPHY

Dr. Adolph Butkys, moderator of Villanova's National Student Consumer Protection Council, says that his club wants to do something different from what other clubs are doing. They are. The twenty members of this club have decided to do something to aid the fifty-two American hostages in Iran.

The plan is already underway. The following letter has been drafted:

TO: Iranian Students, U.S. Embassy, Teheran, Iran
FROM: Concerned Students, Villanova University, Villanova, PA 19085, U.S.A.
Dear Moslem Students:

We the concerned students have committed ourselves to the students, to release the fifty-two (52) American diplomats before November 4, 1980 on grounds of common decency, legal rights, humanitarian reasons and academic courtesy. If the unfortunate diplomats are not released before November 4th, then the annual anniversary of your unlawful act shall go down in world history as a day of infamy. The students of Iran and the Moslem Revolutionists shall be forever dishonored, discredited, shamed, and tarnished.

We the concerned students have committed ourselves to the ultimate and safe release of all the fifty-two unfortunate Americans held in your senseless custody. To this end we shall devote our energy and our prayers.

When asked why this particular idea should help the hostages, Dr. Butkys replied, "We feel that it is unique in that it is the first time, to our knowledge, that a direct student-to-student approach has been taken." The goal of the club is to gain the signature of every Villanova student. Says Dr. Butkys, "We need a substantial number — even one thousand is not enough. But we are not interested now in faculty members and administrators. We want students."

To further this aim, a signature drive is currently taking place. Students may sign the above letter during lunches in Bartley and Dougherty cafeterias. In addition, starting on Monday, the resident assistants will advance the drive in each dorm.

After the obtainment of the necessary signatures, Dr. Butkys plans to send the petition to Iran. However, in order for it to receive notice, he hopes to send it via either the White House or a United Nations delegation. States Dr. Butkys, "We, as a consumer club, are trying to protect the fifty-two American consumers in Iran. If nothing else, it will show we are as concerned as everyone else."

Fight Against Leukemia

By MELISSA ARAYA

At a DTD committee meeting held a few weeks ago, the Delts discussed the idea of doing something to help out a charity. The charity decided upon was the Leukemia Foundation, a subdivision of the American Cancer Society. Reason: a fraternity member lost his 12-year-old brother to leukemia two years ago. The event to be held on Saturday will be dedicated to him.

The "event" evolved out of a unique idea, which was born at the aforementioned committee meeting. Joe Napoletano, who is the chairman, got the idea rolling — literally. Napoletano contacted "Born to Roll," a 'mobile skating unit company in Philadelphia, and the result was this: On Saturday, October 4, the Delts will give Villanovans a chance to skate, dance, listen to good music, and have a great time, while helping with the fight against leukemia.

Members will be situated at tables in front of the Connelly Center from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday. Students can rent a pair of roller skates for three dollars, giving them two hours of skating time. Additional hours will cost one dollar. There will be free refreshments, provided by McDonald's, balloons, a band and WKVU jocks to provide continuous music, a raffle and a road rally. Prizes have been donated from various Main Line establishments, ranging from Gullifty's to the Main Point and the Wayne Movie Theater. Participants may also compete to win a free pair of skates.

Napoletano hopes that, with the raffle and the skate rentals, Delta Tau Delta can raise up to $2000. He stated, "The Leukemia Foundation was very excited and very receptive to our idea. With participation, I'm sure we can reach our goal."

RSA

through the ascribed petition process through the RSA and the Dean's office."

When asked what he hopes to accomplish, Mike remarked, "My biggest goal is to make the RSA the organization it has the potential of becoming. This organization actually encompasses the entire campus. It has the potential to be a very powerful and worthwhile organization. In the past, I feel the RSA, was pushed aside, but his year we plan to take the initiative necessary to improve the RSA."

Just as every wine in America hoisted a few to Congress when they repealed Prohibition in the 30's, we, the lushes of WKWC raise our beer mugs to Villanova's alumni . . . those folks know how to throw a party . . . it was nice to see everybody happy for a change . . . even if they couldn't remember why . . . it just goes to show that nobody understands the restorative qualities of alcohol better than the grads of V.U. . . . of course if you had laid out $16,000 in tuition for four years and you still didn't have a job you'd probably take to the bottle too . . . ah, the V.U. alumni . . . some are illiterate (which doesn't say much for the university) . . . most are unemployed (which doesn't say much for the Career Development Center) . . . but they sure can drink (which doesn't say much for the alcohol policy) . . . we at the Villanovan must assume some responsibility for the terminally drunk at the tailgate . . . it seems they were testing the theory that a person could have 40 percent alcohol in his bloodstream and still remain standing . . . sorry suckers, but who ever told you that you could believe everything you read in the Villanovan anyway? . . . did anyone notice that the people who were really drunk were the ones who had gone to the Alcohol Awareness Seminar . . it was so boring it drove them to drink . . by the way, if you saw that funny little man in a black suit roaming around the parking lot Saturday with a camera we hope you didn't pose for him . . rumor has it he's from the A.L.C.B. . . . Augustinian Liquor Control Board . . . so if you posed — you're busted . . . it figures that the first time the football team wins a game in four weeks everybody is too blitzed to care . . . but let's give credit where credit is due . . . we all owe some thanks to the generous V.U. alumni who paid off B.C. to throw the game and let V.U. win . . . is it true that Radnor Garage towed two coolers on Saturday that didn't have valid stickers? . . . in keeping with the trend of renaming important edifices on campus (re: Jumbo Elliot Track) we've learned of the following: Marc Tuchman has changed his name to John Connelly Center, Jr. . . . the C Center has renamed their hamburgers "Kreiburgers" since they are now cooked in holy water . . . and Third Floor Gold, Good Counsel is now Locust Street Red . . . in reference to last week's Op-Ed "Duty, Honor and the Draft" we at the Villanovan plan to do our duty and uphold our honor by making sure that Mr. Monserrat is first in line when the Draft Board sets up house at V.U. . . .

WKWC would like to wish our buddy Joe Jasek the best of luck when he kicks off WKVU's Marathon for Muscular Dystrophy on Sunday . . . the question is can Joe really go for 144 hours without sleep? . . . without a shower? . . . without Betty?! . . . by the way, did you hear that a former Villanova track star and Olympic gold medal winner is donating his medal to V.U. . . . he wanted to "give that University a Blue Ribbon" but . . . who knows, who cares. . .

Band Tapes Ad

By MARY ANNE BILZ

This past Sunday afternoon in the aftermath of Saturday's victory over Boston College the Wildcat Band and Band Front once again donned their uniforms, took up their flags and pom-poms and taped a commercial. This time the marching units were forming the word "SALE" on the astroturf, rather than their customary geometric patterns and front lines. The commercial was taped for Silo Inc., a stereo and appliance store.

Though the weather was beautiful, the marching units trudged around the field, worn out from the previous day's game and festivities. Several band and film crew members came equipped with their portable radios to listen to the Eagles game they were missing that afternoon and the marching units were kept well informed of the current scores in between tapings. When it came time for the actual taping trumpets, piccolos, drum, and flags began to high step to the tune of "March of the Wildcats." A few jokes were passed around when the crew filmed marching feet and several pairs of pants were too short!

The V.U. Marching Units were provided with refreshments after taping the commercial. The band and band front members were not paid for doing the ad. The commercial is expected to be aired in November.

Ignore the Clues

By GREG ANTON

Robert Palmer, considered to be "the Great White Hope" of soul music, combines soul, jazz, new wave, reggae, and a little disco on his latest release, Clues. Palmer experiments by mixing a little bit of everything into the album, however, unfortunately comes up with a lot of nothing.

The album begins with an appropriately titled track, Looking for Clues. This is exactly what needs to be done to determine what Palmer had in mind. After sifting through the sloppily combined elements of disco, jazz, and new wave, this listener gave up and moved on to the next track, Sulky Girl. Again the direction of the song seems to be lost and the line, "If they won't give you no sympathy, wait till it's their turn," indicates that Palmer may have known what he was in for.

Finally on the next cut, Palmer's intriguing voice gives life to a mellow, folk-line tune. His powerful vocals manage to overshadow the annoying background keyboards. Johnny and Mary, the current single, is the only bright spot on the album.

What Do You Care closes the side and returns back to the confused disco-like style of the first two songs. Side one leaves us desperately desiring some Robert Palmer of old on side two. Unfortunately, none is to be found.

At best, the first track, I Dream of Wires, can be labeled as comical. Palmer goes too far in trying to capture the electronic-rock sound. Although assisted by Gary Numan on keyboards, the song fails horribly. Palmer's vocals come off as amateurish and unintelligible.

Believe it or not, an attempt at Jamaican reggae is next. Woke Up Laughing falls far below the standards established by the "Two Tone" label artists. Once again, Palmer's vocals prove to be very limited.

Not A Second Time, the next misery, perhaps refers to the number of times one should listen to the album. Following this, Found You Now brings the album to its much awaited end.

Diversity is essential to all artists, however Palmer goes far beyond this. He simply spreads himself too thin, never focusing in on his true talents. Clues is a total disappointment and is completely hapless. Avoid this one like the plague!

Marvin Stars in War Film

By ECHELMEIER YOUNGER

The Big Red One, written by Samuel Fuller and produced by United Artists, is a film that may be somewhat nostalgic for historians and those who crave intimate portrayals of war crimes during World War II. To others this film may be pure fiction or high entertainment depending on their frame of reference at the time of viewing.

Lee Marvin, the major character and an excellent performer, serves as the commander who successfully leads his squad through a series of battles from North Africa to Czechoslovakia. Mark Hamill, a product of the all-time money-making movie, Star Wars, was aptly suited for the role of Griff. Robert Carradine and Kelly Ward also star in the film.

The film is set around battlefields to convey the rugged feeling associated with scenes from the war. Here we see our men of war, men who are no different from you or I experiencing fear, loneliness and death. These men have lost their sanity, and distorted their values in order to serve their country.

Marvin leads his troops to battle.

Comics Cheer Chetwynd

By EILEEN A. McCAFFREY

Stand-up comedy may sound like an old-fashioned form of entertainment, but for a quiet, enjoyable, relaxed evening, "Way Out Wednesdays," a weekly comedy show at Chetwynd Apartments in Rosemont, would not be a bad choice.

Each show features seven comedians, different talents and styles of performing. Paul Lyons, the master of ceremonies opens the show with a film, and also does some stand-up comedy. Will Neri, a bouncy, enthusiastic fellow, performs some very good impressions. Jim Daly entranced the audience with comedy and magic. Ben Kurland has performed in both Los Angeles and Philadelphia. Tommy Moore, whose sexual subjects for comedy reminds one a little of Woody Allen, has made two albums and has been producing a variety show which has been at The Main Point each Sunday in September. Steve Dougherty, a night student at Villanova, has appeared on Channel 6's AM/PM. All of these people have good credentials; many have performed at the Jailhouse in Philadelphia.

The Tiffany Room, where the show is held, is a bar/restaurant type of place which at first turned this reviewer off. However, the show soon changes the atmosphere for the better. The seven comedians work well as a team. All of them like to bring the audience into the act which is easy because the performing area is small and cozy.

Paul Lyons and Steve Dougherty are now working with the Villanova Union to schedule a comedy show in the Connelly Center. They are also looking for Villanova talent to join the show at Chetwynd.

"Way Out Wednesdays" is presented each Wednesday night at 9 p.m. in the Tiffany Room at Chetwynd Apartments on Lancaster Pike in Rosemont.

WYSP Rocks Out

On October 3, WYSP will hold a very special night of music and rock video at Emerald City.

Upstairs, 94 winners will attend the AC/DC "Back In Black" Party in the Rainbow Room. There will be an hour presentation of AC/DC video and winners will win a drink on 'YSP. Then the fun begins downstairs.

Split Enz are appearing that night, also, and everyone can expect an atomic concert event as they sing songs from their new album, True Colours. That's the new laser-cut album (the first of it's kind) that's sweeping the country! There will be prizes for people in attendance, dancing, and more!

Powerful Trio Rushes Philly

By SUE BREHM

The Canadian power trio Rush made their American debut tour in 1974 but still remain, after eight albums, one of the most underrated bands in the rock scene today. Rush appeared at the Spectrum on Thursday, Sept. 25, 1980, courtesy of some 18,000 followers who signed petitions invjting them to perform in Philadelphia.

The audience greeted them enthusiastically when they opened with the title song from their fourth album, 2112. They offered a variety of songs, including Freewill, The Spirit of Radio, Jacab's Ladder and Natural Science from Permanent Waves their latest and most successful album in terms of promotional airplay and sales.

One of the three exceptionally talented members of Rush is Alex Lifeson, the blond, erratic guitarist who is also a closet classical guitar afficianado. A schoolboy friend of Lifeson's, Geddy Lee, is the band's bass guitarist and vocalist. Occasionally Lee plays synthesizer, Moog pedals and classical guitar. Lee and Lifeson are responsible for writing most of the music, while innovative percussionist Neil Peart writes most of the lyrics. Peart joined Rush on their second album, Fly By Night, and is gaining remarkable recognition, as was evident by the standing ovations he received before and after his flawless solo performance.

Each song is arranged dynamically using stop-time melody and rhythm changes like Yes and Genesis. Their visual show consists of an unlimited amount of energy exerted throughout the length of the concert. The special effects, which are tastefully combined with the music, consist of movies, an elaborate light show, explosives and an eerie fog.

The last selection was a medley of four all-time favorite Rush tunes starting with Working Man continuing into Anthem, Bastille Day and In the Mood. Lee's vocals are high-pitched and sound like an animated cartoon character. Lee relates Peart's phantasmal tales of other-worldly adventures over complex bass and drum patterns. Peart, referred to as "The Professor," consistently proves himself to be a perfectionist and modern day master of percussion.

The encore instrumental, La Villa Strangiato, from their Hemispheres album featured a tight jazz-blues jam in which Lifeson demonstrated his unique style of quick, heavy-metal chops but always fluidly controlled riffs.

The high geared, intensely powerful music of Rush created an aura of amazement which left fans spellbound.

Revel in Horror

By AMY MACLACHLAN

The Rocky Horror Picture Show is a film for moviegoers who haven't had the nerve to attend a so-called "racy" movie but have always had the urge to. On a scale of offensiveness, with a ten denoting "real trash", this film rates about a seven. It is most certainly not the kind of a show that one would take a brownie troop on a field trip to.

Aesthetically speaking this film will never win any awards for deep themes or earth-shattering revelations. What Rocky Horror has that other movies like it don't have is unbelievable audience appeal. From the start, when it was a constantly sold out stage show, it attracted thousands of people who just wanted to be a little crazy. It also attracted hundreds who really were. People were not satisfied to merely see this play performed live and withdraw gracefully into a quiet evening at the theater. The audience BECAME the show. Hecklers were welcomed and fans dragged of attending forty to fifty times. Due to the unbelievable interest in the show, the wise backers released a movie with much the same cast as the hit stage act.

If one can ignore the sometimes offensive lyrics, the soundtrack from the film is musically quite successful. Highlights include appearances from Meatloaf and the charming (and I say so somewhat sarcastically), vocals of Franky, the mad scientist from a far off, far out galaxy. The supporting cast includes the newlyweds, Brad and Janet, an all-American couple who stumble on the haunted mansion after having car trouble on their way home from their wedding. At the door Brad is greeted by the deformed but lighthearted butler and is led into the house full of crazy otherworlders. Well, this couple is in for quite a night beginning with "doing the time warp," a hit dance from far off Transylvania, and just escaping certain death at the hands of their very "friendly" host.

JOHN BONHAM

John "Bonzo" Bonham, the popular, quiet drummer for the Led Zeppelin, was found dead early last Thursday in the home of Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page. Zeppelin's record company, Swan Song, has steadfastly declined to make any comment on the future of the band or Bonham's death.

Bonham's brutal, energetic drumming is the "Heavy" of Led Zeppelin's "Heavy Metal" sound. Jimmy Page, Robert Plant and John Paul Jones could not have taken the chances that made Led Zeppelin such an exciting, innovative group if Bonham's senses of rhythmic thrust and improvisation had not been so daring, so powerful a starting point. Neither supporters or critics of the Zeppelin will deny that the passing of John Bonham leaves a position that might be impossible to fill.

JT's Pleases Diners

By JERRY ARTH

College students have gained a most deserved reputation for ingesting some of the worst food ever known to mankind. Cafeteria slime, hot plate and/or pot ooze, fast food piles of grease, nothing has been too vile for those in pursuit of knowledge to eat. However, there comes a time when all must seek out higher sustenance, and the newly opened JT's Place in Haverford is not a bad place to start.

Located at 625 Lancaster Avenue, JT's Place occupies the former site of The Joshua Tree. Thankfully, the relationship between the two ends there. The new restaurant has been completely redone, from an entire upgrading of the menu to a change of decor. And considering that, according to the manager, the place was altered in only two weeks, the effect is nothing short of remarkable.

JT's Place offers a full lunch and dinner menu, all at prices which are a little higher than one would spend in a sleazy diner, though comparable to any good restaurant. Lunch entrees run from a basic hamburger for $2.95 to seafood crepes for $5.50. Appetizers such as a very good French onion soup, fried artichoke hearts, and fried zucchini range from $1.95 to $2.95. Dinner is a bit more expensive. From $8.50 for chicken Cordon Bleu to $14.95 for steak and lobster, nothing on this menu is what one could call cheap, though for the budget conscious, the lunch menu is served all day.

The quality of the food at JT's Place is superior to most of the restaurants in the area which cater to students. The New England clam chowder ($1.50) is thick and creamy, and actually contains an ample amount of clams. The prime rib ($9.95) perfectly tender, and comes the way one orders it, instead of the usual practice of it being served the same way regardless of whether it is wanted rare, medium, or well done. The scampi ($9.95) is superb in a delicate garlic butter sauce with rice pilaf.

But, the key thing which sets JT's Place apart from crowd of restaurants has to be its salad bar. Sumptuous hardly begins to describe it. With at least 30 different ingredients and the most imaginative lay-out ever seen, just getting the salad bar, included with dinner, $4.95 a la carte, is worth the trip by itself.

Dessert, too, is a highlight at JT's Place, though the dessert menu must be the bane of weight watchers everywhere. The chocolate cheesecake ($2.25) is incredibly rich, or for the same price, the New York cheesecake with strawberries is equally good. But the true dessert masterpiece is JT's Finale ($2.95), a perfect concoction of chocolate ice cream, Kahlua, brandy, and whipped cream. Other desserts, including Haagen-Dazs ice cream ($1.95), are also available.

All in all, JT's Place is a very pleasant dining experience: good food; excellent service; and most important, reasonable prices. So the next time your parents visit, or your girl/boyfriend desires some change from the daily junk food, take them to JT's Place. You won't regret it.

JT's Place opens at 11:30 a.m. Monday through Thursday it remains open until 10 p.m., Friday and Saturday until 11 p.m. and Sunday until 9 p.m.

A Tribute to Local Comedians
Comics Open Local Shop

By IRENE SMITH

Tired of the continuous bacchanalian existence of drinking and partying? Looking for a different way to pass an evening?

An exciting addition to Philadelphia nightlife has recently appeared on the scene called The Comedy Works. It is Philadelphia's foremost comedy club located atop the Middle East Restaurant in the heart of Society Hill on Chestnut Street.

The Comedy Works is a unique entertainment establishment managed by comedians who perform in their own acts. The performers are all freelance comics from the Philadelphia area who seek to make Philadelphia a base where comedians can get started. The theater unlike most clubs has a cabaret style setting that offers some of the best comedy acts in the country. This past weekend featured New York comedy team, Mack and Jamie, a hilarious duo whose stunts ranged from improvisation of television commercials to mock cutups of the presidential candidates. Their antics, along with Mike Eagan of WPEN, Steve Young and the duo of Myer and Young provide an evening of sheer delight punctuated by gales of laughter.

Each comedian displayed an amazing collection of talent and diversity that quickly changed a passive audience into an excited boisterous one.

The Comedy Works has a new policy geared for the college student. On Thursday and Friday shows, students with a college I.D. will receive a $1 discount. Senior citizens will receive a $1 discount on all shows.

For information or reservations dial W-A-C-K-Y-9-7.

Koren Talks About It All

By SHARON WINTERS

Do You Want to Talk About It by Edward Koren does not merely deserve to be called a collection of cartoons. The book is really a compilation of witty, irreverent images of society.

Koren laughs at everything beginning with pop-psychology. The book's title is actually the caption for the cover drawing. A child crys as he points to his dropped ice cream cone. His mother ignores the obvious and subtly queries, "Do you want to talk about it."

The over-sized paperback is filled with outrageously understated captions considering the action depicted or the event taking place in the frame. Koren also utilizes signs and the like in his drawings that understate an issue to the extent that it is humorous.

Koren's drawings are unusual; he portrays strange nonexistent animals. Odd-shaped furry, feathery or finned creatures are sometimes major characters, at other times are objects of wonder. In one cartoon a shopkeeper displays a strange, large fish to a female customer. She replies, "Yes, it is beautiful but will it serve eight?"

The artist's human characters are drawn as mostly middle-aged, somewhat frumpy people. They seem to be middle class, ordinary people caught in traumas. The characters react to situations in an apathetic, understated manner: the world is falling apart, so what. By the way, can you pass the salt?

Koren's cartoons are great to browse through over and over again. He comments on most of today's concerns. Inflation, war, materialism, evolution, crime, art and pollution are just a few of the topics that he observes.

"Do you want to talk about it"

The drawings are in opposition to the subtle captions. Koren makes his works appear as hurried sketches. The tangled lines that he uses suggest confusion and unrest. His cartoons are "busy"; a lot of activity is alluded to. The reader's eye tends to look for more content than what is actually portrayed.

Confusion, noise, and discontent are implied by Koren's intensely-filled spaces. His pen supplies the emotion that is lacking in the captions. In some cases, the captions are not needed; Koren does not supply them. He has, through his career, curtailed the use of words with his drawings.

Do You Want to Talk About It is a book that can be read without really having to read. It is simple, yet pointed. The book is funny and also thought-provoking.

Koren has been a commercial cartoonist for many years. His drawings have appeared in The New Yorker and Harper's Magazine. This particular compilation was originally published in 1966, although it just recently was released in paperback.

Cats Clip Eagles' Wings

By BETH WHITE

The Wildcat offense rallied behind two different quarterbacks to upset Boston College 20-9 and crown their Homecoming festivities last Saturday.

Freshman quarterback Kevin Ingram, in the first start of his collegiate career, completed five of eight passes for 81 yards and rushed for 18 more before leaving the game with a bruised ankle late in the third quarter.

Ingram set up the first Villanova score with a series of handoffs and passes to senior runningbacks Bill Connors and Don Ziesel, with Ingram himself scrambling away from the pressure of the Boston College linemen several times to gain extra yardage. Ingram's passing arm accurately nailed Connors on the BC 19-yard line to set up Ziesel's ten-yard burst up the middle to a first-and-goal situation for the Cats. Senior halfback Shawn Passman slipped around the right end of the Eagle's defense for the first Villanova touchdown.

Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck tallied the extra points for both Wildcat touchdowns, as well as contributing two field goals from 21 and 40 yards out.

The final Villanova score came in the fourth quarter with three-year starting quarterback Pat O'Brien at the helm of the Wildcat offense. The Eagles were pressed deep into their own territory by a 40-yard punt by junior Joe Borajkiewicz and were able to weed their way through the Villanova defense, which held the Eagles inside their own ten yard line. The Eagle punter, John Cooper, belted a 49-yard punt which rolled dead on the Nova 44. The Cats then took nine plays to travel the remaining 56 yards to the endzone.

The touchdown came from a predominantly ground attack by the Cats, most notably on runs of 12 and 13 yards by fullback Don Ziesel and a one-yard plunge onto paydirt, also by Ziesel. Ziesel was also the leading ground-gainer for the Cats with 70 yards total rushing for the day.

Boston College seemed unable to mount a substantial offensive attack and was held tightly in check by the Cat defense. Outstanding defensive players for the Wildcats included linebacker Anthony Griggs with ten tackles, defensive end Tom Jensen with eight tackles and one tipped pass, safety Chris Yurkow with an interception in the Eagle end zone and left tackle Howie Long with six tackles, a tipped pass, a quarterback sack and a fumble recovery. Long was also named to the ECAC Player of the week and is this week's Athlete of the Week.

All of the points for Boston College on the scoreboard came from the foot of placekicker John Cooper, who booted field goals of 29, 25 and 20 yards.

Saturday's victory over Boston College became the first in the win column for the Cats and held to the 'home-team jinx' in the series. For the last six years, Saturday's game included, the home team has won. The victory now ranks the Wildcats at 1-3, and Boston College at 1-2.

Villanova has the week off before regrouping to meet Cincinnati at home on the Astroturf for Parents' Weekend.

Ruggers Split Contests

The previously undefeated Villanova rugby team went down to defeat to the Villanova Law School Saturday, 13-8. The undergraduates scored first but seemed to lose momentum to the persistent Law School team who scored the tying goal before half and outscoring the Wildcats, 12-7, in the second half.

The undergrads' loss was avenged in the second game of the match by the Villanova "Killer B" Team. The younger men on the field proved to be too much for the Law School by holding them scoreless and tallying 10 points of their own.

The club's next game is scheduled for tomorrow at 1:00 on the Rugby Field across from the Fieldhouse.

1964 Olympian Gives Medal to Villanova

By BETH WHITE

Paul Drayton, whom many Villanova athletic staffers called "the greatest lead-off in the mile relay," donated his Olympic gold medal to the University Saturday, capping off the weekend's track dedication ceremonies.

Running in the 1964 Tokyo Olympics, Drayton won the gold medal for the four by 100 meter relay. He also won a silver medal in the 200 meter.

When asked why he donated the medal to Villanova, Drayton offered a one-word answer: Jumbo. He feels that everything that he is today he owes to Villanova and Coach Elliott. "He (Elliott) is a special guy," explains Drayton, and besides, this is something that I've thought about doing for a long time."

"The track dedication ceremonies seemed like an appropriate time to donate the medal to Villanova," continued the '62 graduate. "The medal was just sitting in my trophy case at home where no one could appreciate it, so while I was on campus for the dedication, I just stopped by the Field House and dropped it off with Dr. Aceto (Villanova's athletic director)."

Paul Drayton's admiration for Coach Jumbo Elliott is expressed in his recalling the events leading up to the Penn Relays in Drayton's senior year at Villanova. Drayton ran a leg in the mile relay, an event which the Wildcats had won consecutively for the previous five years. Drayton was pushing himself too hard in training and the week before the Relays, ran his worst time ever. After a silent bus trip back to campus from the meet, Coach Elliott came up to Drayton, put his arm sympathetically around him and said, "Listen, Paul, I think that you are training too hard. Why don't you take a week off and just relax." Elliott's advice, although unorthodox, proved sound as Drayton ran his best time and carried Villanova to their sixth victory in the mile relay in as many years.

"The great thing about Jumbo is the way he understands people," admires Drayton, "and the way people understand him. Here's a guy who stutters, yet no one ever has trouble understanding what he says."

Gold medal from 1964 Olympics donated to the University by Paul Drayton.

Intramural Events Expanded

By JERRY VENTRESCA

Under returning President Dino Valente the Villanova intramural department has been altered and new events will be available for students this year. Along with Ed Geiss, director of intramural sports and administrative coordinator, only two staff members of last year's department are returning. Along with Valente, Cindy Caughlin will preside over women's events.

To round off the department, office manager Kevin Burke handles communications between the department, student body and the administration; Steve Cole coordinates men's events; Helen Haney handles special events such as the tennis tournament, two-on-two basketball and any other sports not league oriented; and Craig Hudson handles public relations.

So far the students are experiencing an expanded football league with 56 teams (up from 48 last year) and the new women's football league, a program already successful at the University of Pennsylvania, Rutgers and Penn State.

Sandwiched between grid games is a softball tournament scheduled for this weekend (signup deadline was yesterday) which, according to Valente, "is like nothing else in the country." The tournament is unique in that there is continuous play, similar to a marathon but following two losses a team is eliminated. For a team to win the tournament it would have played at least 15 games. Also, it is a one-pitch tournament. A batter faces one pitch; he strikes out if he swings and misses or the pitch is a called strike or he is walked if it is a ball. A foul ball is discarded and another pitch is thrown until it is connected on, a strike or a ball. It must be noted that this tournament doesn't replace spring softball but that will go on as planned.

Upcoming events also this semester include a one-day cross-country meet scheduled for October 7; the initial Strong Man Competition, which begins October 25 and will extend for several weekends, a one-day golf tournament beginning November 6 and the co-ed basketball two-on-two tournament which begins on November 19. All deadline dates for these events extend to the day prior to the event's start.

Those interested in signing up either as participants or referees or both should do so at the intramural office in Alumni.

Wildcats Avenge Soccer Losses to Haverford

By ROY MITA

The Villanova soccer team paid its long standing debt to Haverford College with their first win in the last five years against their enemies, 1-0.

The battle was well-fought on both sides with neither team taking decisive control until Villanova got on the board at the 21-minute mark, 1-0. Senior captain Dave McHugh, last year's leading Cat scorer, achieved the sole Villanova tally, with the help of an assist from senior Brian Pursel. The Cats left the field with a 1-0 advantage on their opponents at half.

With the exception of a Steve Frey goal that was called back for offsides, the second half was a stalemate. Therefore, McHugh's goal was all that was necessary as Villanova left the field one up on their rivals for this year.

Both teams used a controlled offense but had problems penetrating the tough defenses of both sides which kept shots on goal minimal. Villanova had eight shots while Haverford had only four. The goal keepers played another key role in the contest with Villanova's Pete Jirak receiving the shut out.

After the final whistle, Head Coach Howard Graff entering his sixteenth season as skipper of the squad, commented, "It's been five years and we owed them this one."

The Cats came into the match following a 3-0 win against the University of Maryland, Baltimore County. Goals in that game were scored by Frey, Brendon Dalton and John Waraska; assists came from Brain Barr (2) and Clint Grimes (1).

Women Fall in Final Seconds

By ROY MITA

With 50 seconds left on the clock vs. Swarthmore the score read Villanova 1, Swarthmore 0, but by the time the clock had ticked down to 40 Swarthmore had grabbed two quick goals to grab the win.

Villanova drew first blood early in the first half on a Patti Nolan score from a corner kick. Villanova proved to be the dominate force of the game out shooting Swarthmore 30 to 10. The Villanova squad constantly on the attack lead by Nina Wreczorek, couldn't seem to capitalize on any of their scoring attempts for the duration of the first half and most of the second.

With 44 seconds remaining in the game Swarthmore's Emily Rothburg scored to even the match. Two seconds later Roxan Bartel, a halfback, bounced the winning goal giving Swarthmore a 2-1 win.

Co-captain Karen Clabbers commented on the final moments of the game saying, "They just kept coming at us and bingo they got two goals."

Over the weekend the squad lost to Penn State 2-0 but knocked off powerful Manhattensville 2-1.

Special Olympic Runners

On Sunday, October 5, Villanova University will be host of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics State Soccer Skills and Frisbee Tournament. To underwrite the cost of these events, a group of Villanova students, comprised of members of the men's and women's track team, will participate in an Olympic Torch Relay. This relay will begin at Villanova's Ithan gate and encompasses a scenic thirty-mile route to the Philadelphia Art Museum before returning to Villanova for the opening ceremonies at 1:15 on Austin Field.

The athletes participating in the relay include seniors Pete DeStefano and Larry Mulligan, juniors Dorothy Regan and Maureen Sullivan and sophomores Carol Gilsinger and Carlton Young. Persons interested in sponsoring a runner may do so by contacting the Student Activities office in Dougherty Hall or anyone involved in the Special Olympics.

Intramural Football Projection

By LARRY GOANOS

Maybe you are one of those people who pictures intramural football as a pastime in which a bunch of unorganised guys run around on the field while waiting for a keg to arrive. If you are, it's time for you to update your thoughts. This year's Villanova intramural football league is well-organized and boasts a high level of competitive play. It's so competitive, according to senior Dino Valente, intramural president, "that some teams are recruiting linemen from other squads or anywhere else that they can find them."

The season is only four games old for most teams; therefore it is too early to predict the favorites for eventual league champs, yet some observers point to last year's runners, DTD. However, the fraternity division is still very much up in the air. A general overview of the early season favorites in each division shows the Nads and Joint Effort with an early season lead in the North, while the Wave and the Maulers hold that position in the South. In the West the Blacksheep and Wally's Gators have a foothold on first place. The East division's number one spot is currently being shared by Athlete's Foot and Austin's Army. In the Central division, the King's Court and Priory Moles are in the driver's seat.

A new feature this season will be an all-star game to be held on Villanova Stadium's Astroturf on the first Sunday in December. Valente explained, "Each team will be allowed to nominate two of its players, one being a lineman and the other a back. Three teams will be formed, each consisting of players from two different divisions. One team will draw a bye, thus it will play the winner the game between the other two for the league championship."

Now that you have a general rundown of the league at this point in the season, you're all set to go over to Mendel or Austin Field to take in a game or two of competitive football from the sidelines. There's just one question that remains unanswered, what the heck is a Priory Mole?

Varsity Watercats Lose Opener

By BOB CONWAY

The newest varsity team at Villanova, the Water Polo Watercats, lost to Johns Hopkins last Sunday to open their season.

The match did not count in the standings and the two teams will not meet again unless both qualify for the Easterns.

The loss did not seem to squelch the enthusiasm of Coach Al Fazio. He prefaced his remarks by mentioning last year Johns Hopkins finished in second place in the Division II Easterns. Coach Fazio claimed that, "Our chances of winning the division are good if we can cut down on the mistakes."

With only three seniors on the squad, Villanova lacks the quality most good teams need — experience. Fazio was quick to point out that he didn't think of this year as a rebuilding season. The important thing to Fazio is, "to keep our confidence. If we keep our confidence, anything can happen."

The Watercats are not without exceptional players, however. The three seniors (Mike Patti, Jim McDonald and Tom Schweiger) provide fine leadership for this young team. Patti, the goalie, not only does a fine job of blocking shots, but is also able to get the offense moving. Schweiger is a top defensive player. With Patti in goal and Schweiger on defense the opposition is hard pressed to score goals. The remaining senior, Jim McDonald, was one of the leading scorers in the Mid Atlantic Conference last year.

Other players who help make the Watercats a quality team are Chris Morris, a high school All-American last year and Bill Beck, also a freshman. Both upperclassmen Eric Pippen and George Anderson have a year of experience under their belts.

The Budweiser Athlete of The Week Is Returning

The Budweiser Athlete of the Week is a weekly feature which will highlight the picture and statistics of an athlete whose performance has been outstanding in his or her respective sport.

Nominations of the Budweiser Athlete of the Week will be considered only with complete information on the athlete and their performance. Nominations (and pictures, when possible) should be delivered no later than Monday before publication to the Villanovan office. The final decision for the Budweiser Athlete of the Week is up to the Sports Editors.

The following rules apply to nominations:

1. Only intercollegiate sports will be considered (no intramurals.) ANY VILLANOVA STUDENT CAN NOMINATE AN ATHLETE.

2. No one can receive the award more than once.

3. No more than three athletes will be chosen from any one sport.

TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS WILL BE DONATED TO THE ATHLETIC SCHOLARSHIP FUND IN THE ATHLETE'S NAME.

Pat Flynn Says: Pride and Pain Persist

How could you be anything but proud?

It was an impressive sight last Saturday when Jumbo Elliott strode onto the track that was to be named in his honor. It was awesome to see him enveloped by the cream of Villanova's athletic tradition, the seemingly endless parade of men who had represented nations as Olympians, who had at one time reached the pinnacle of their sport's ladder of success, and who had all worn Villanova's colors on their way to those heights.

It was just like watching John Wooden lead handfuls of his UCLA alumni to center court. Like witnessing Rod Dedeaux of USC bring together baseball's immortals who were first Trojan immortals.

And now, with a decent surface to run on, Villanova will again be able to play host to its own immortals, to provide a home for today's and tomorrow's track stars and to allow every Villanova student a chance to bask in the glory of those accomplishments without waiting for the once-a-year spectacle of the Penn Relays.

How lucky we are to be here to enjoy it.

Lucky?

It was fitting that Villanova entered the promising world of modern facilities at the same time that the track world itself, and Villanova in particular, is shaking off the bitter sting of the summer of 1980, the summer of the boycott.

Before this goes any farther, let it be clear that this will not be an expounding on the tragedy of the wasted training and time on the part of our exploited athletes. Last year was the time for that. It was talked about and ended in a futile attempt.

That was a story of pain. Didn't you feel it? Can you honestly say that you laughed at the Russians? Did you actually feel smug in the fact that we ruined their Olympics? That we stole their thunder?

Be really honest about it. At the time that the Games were actually taking place, didn't you miss it? Wouldn't you have loved to have seen all the flags, heard all the anthems, watched those events and shared in the tears of the losers and the winners as well?

Wouldn't you have loved to seen Don Paige, up close, and all the great publicity that Villanova would have received from Paige and the other Villanova greats? And while the Soviets may have staged a tarnished gold chase — didn't you envy them just for being there?

Villanova, like any institution, needs a shot in the arm every now and then. Wouldn't a touch of gold, or a touch of silver or bronze, or even just a touch of glorified sweat, have made a difference?

In the watered-down Summer Olympiad of Moscow 1980, it's difficult to say who the winners were. But it's easy to point to the losers.

Auto Accident Claims Life

Freshman Co-ed Dies In Early Morning Crash

By BILL CLARK and BILL ROCK

An automobile accident claimed the life of a Villanova student early Saturday morning, October 4.

Freshman Kathleen Hooker was pronounced dead at Bryn Mawr Hospital at 10 a.m. The Montgomery County Coroner's Office listed the cause of death as "multiple injuries--head and internal."

The accident occurred at the corner of Springmill Rd. and County Line Rd. at approximately 1:45 a.m.

The accident occurred during a heavy rainstorm.

Hooker and Lisa Stofko were passengers in a car driven by Rosemary Decker, all Villanova students.

The three girls reportedly had attended a fraternity party at Bartley Hall before the accident. According to sources who had also attended the party, it had ended exactly at 1:00.

According to Ed Evans, a Villanova security guard at the scene of the accident, Decker's car was approaching the intersection on County Line Rd.

"I assume that the Chevrolet (the other car in the accident) was coming up Springmill Rd. and the Volvo (Decker's car) was coming up County Line Rd." said Evans.

A blinking light system was in effect at the intersection at that time, and according to Evans County Line Rd. had the red blinker.

"The driver of the other car kept saying 'She broadsided me,' She broadsided me'," said Evans.

The other man in the accident was not injured, but his car went up onto the grass and crashed into the fence bordering St. Mary's Hall.

Evans said he radioed the North Ithan gate to notify the police of the accident. When he got there, he said that three or four police cars were already on the scene.

"The three girls were lying down on the grass. A doctor happened to be passing by at the time and was administering first aid to the girls," he explained.

"Hooker was unconscious and lying down at the scene of the accident," said Evans. "Decker was apparently suffering from a broken arm and Stofko had head cuts."

St. Mary's resident Tom Szayna was one of the first to telephone Radnor Police. "I was just watching television when I heard a screech of brakes and then what sounded like a series of crashes," said Szayna.

Junior Mitch Moettell, another St. Mary's resident, was one of the first students at the scene of the accident. "A friend of mine told me there had been an accident, and I went out to see if I could help. By the time I got there, there were already four or five police cars on the scene. All I saw was one girl sitting on the ground crying," said Moettell.

The accident is currently under investigation by Radnor Police.

As of now, no charges have been made against anyone involved in the accident. "There are no complaints registered against anyone as yet," said a member of the staff of Nicholas Sellers, district judge of Radnor Township.

According to Carl M. Hofheinz of the Montgomery County Coroner's Office, no autopsy was performed on Hooker. "We have issued a death certificate, and as far as we're concerned, that closes the case," said Hofheinz.

Even though the accident occurred in Delaware County, she was declared dead in Montgomery.

PUC Hears Safety Petition

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The first day of testimony regarding improvement of the Villanova train station's passenger crossing was heard by the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission (PUC) on Tuesday, October 7.

The PUC heard testimony from Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for student life, and from representatives of Amtrak, Conrail, and the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation.

Rt. 320 bridge over railroad tracks.

Deegan was the only representative from the University to testify at the hearing. He stated that he is familiar with the geographical area involved in the complaint, and listed the events and circumstances which motivated the filing of the complaint. These circumstances included the "obvious hazard involved," and the "fatal accident," in which a Villanova freshman was killed last October when she attempted to cross the tracks after a rainstorm flooded the underpass.

The changes, repairs or additions that would improve the safety of the railroad were also listed by Deegan during his testimony. They included the building of an overpass and the improvement and maintenance of the present underpass. Asked if he had any suggested locations for the underpass, Deegan said that to add width and a walkway to the Rte. 320 bridge, or to cantilever a pedestrian walkway on the southern side of the Rte. 320 bridge would improve the safety of the overpass.

Discussing the first day of the hearing, Deegan said, "We were asked questions about what our concerns are. We presented photos and newspaper articles about the dangers involved. They wanted to know our proposed solution. According to Deegan, the defendants in the case, which include Amtrak, Conrail, and PennDot, "are basically saying that they have no obligation to do anything."

According to Deegan, the second day of testimony will be held at Villanova, and will include an on-site examination of the train station, as well as the testimony of student witnesses.

"The students' testimony will be supportive of the truth, whatever it is. Hopefully it will help our case. I'm sure we're all agreed that the railroad crossing is dangerous," asserted Deegan. Several students have agreed to be witnesses at the hearing, and any students interested in testifying should contact Deegan.

Middle States Accredits University Academics

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

Villanova University has been fully re-accredited by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools.

According to Dr. James J. Cleary, vice president for academic affairs, the accreditation is good for ten years. An interim report is to be submitted after five years; 1980 is an interim year and the evaluation took place last spring.

The procedure for this examination consisted of a self-evaluation of the University. A steering Committee composed of persons in the administration, on the faculty, and in the student body was organized. This group produced a report of objectives and standards against which the University is measured. The association then drew conclusions and made suggestions for improvement.

Dr. Cleary notes that some of the many factors used in the evaluation included the amount of faculty members who have earned a doctorate in their discipline; the standard equipment used in scientific laboratories; the library's inventory of primary and second sources; and the degree requirements for graduation as compared with those needed in other colleges.

Dr. Charles L. Cherry, assistant vice president for academic affairs and chairperson of the steering committee, noted that in this report, the Middle States Association concentrated its study on the College of Arts and Sciences and on the Graduate Division.

He explained that the Colleges of Engineering, Nursing, and Commerce and Finance as well as the School of Law, although included in this evaluation, each have their own accrediting assemblies in their fields of study.

Tobacco Chewers unite. Join V.U. CHAW Club, meeting Tues., October 14, at 6:00, in Bartley, 209.

Jewish Union

The Jewish Union will symbolically celebrate Sasha Yakir's 25th Birthday on Wednesday Oct. 15 from 11:30-2:00 p.m. in the Connelly Center. Sah Sasha, Villanova's adopted refusnik, is still seeking permission to leave Russia and emigrate to Israel. Please stop by, join in the festivities and send a birthday card to Sasha.

Only your cards and letters can help secure his freedom and safe-guard his well-being.

Political Union

The Villanova Political Union would like to invite you to its second debate of the semester on Monday night, October 13, 1980, at 7:00 p.m. It will be held in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall, and the speaker will be Mr. David Preiksat. He has had 29 years of experience in manufacturing and worked under the former Secretary of the Treasury, W.M. Blumenthal. The Resolution: "This House Deplores the Carter Administration's Handling of the United States Economy." All members are asked to attend, and membership is still open to any student interested in joining the Villanova Political Union. There will be refreshments after the meeting.

New Tailgate Policy Considered

By ANNEMARIE URBINATO

The costs of maintenance and complaints from local residents have increased the pressure for a stricter tailgating policy.

Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, said it cost the university $1,475 to clean up the parking lot after the Villanova - Boston College game on Sept. 27. The costs for clean-up were doubled due to new contract specifications allowing double pay for maintenance workers to work on Sunday.

"Tailgating has gotten out of hand in the recent years. Football games are now an excuse for a large outdoor party," said Trucks. He blames lack of control as the major contributor to the problem.

He also received a number of complaints from the local residents about excessive litter on the streets. More waste receptacles, he felt, could not alleviate the problem since tailgaters turned them over preventing others from using them.

Relocation of tailgates behind the stadium would alleviate the pressure of one day clean-up, he felt, but would create the problem of ruining the practice field.

In response to tailgating, Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A. vice president of student life said "I am not in favor of banning tailgates but feel that there is a more repressible and responsible way. One football game is not enough to make this sort of judgment." As of yet, no new restrictions have been sanctioned and University approved pre-game parties will be allowed in the parking lot for the coming Parent's Weekend game, Deegan disclosed.

The main concern of banning tailgates is the severence of a tradition well established among students, parents and alumni, according to Robert Capone, director of the alumni association. He felt the "tailgates are a good way for graduates and undergraduates to mix."

He also believed they did cause problems among the community but believed the administration should create a policy which should appeal "first to students and alumni." He did, however, feel that the administration had its concerns and "would create a policy with good intentions."

A 10-foot high chain link fence with barbed wire attached was installed around the interior of football stadium approximately two weeks ago. Deegan stated that this fence "could conceivably" be used to enforce any restrictions concerning pre-game parties should they be moved to the practice field behind the stadium.

Ticket Sales Shifted

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

In the past weeks there has been confusion in buying tickets for athletic events. This comes from the shift of athletic ticket sales from the Connelly Center to the Field House and then to a combination of both places.

The original proposal, made by Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president of student life, was to have the Connelly Center as the main network of all tickets sold on campus. This plan was intended for the convenience of students, faculty and priests.

According to Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics, "the original plan didn't work out so the control of all athletic tickets has been moved back to the Field House," due to discrepancies coming from the Connelly Center and the concerns of their office responsibilities. To correct this problem of uncertainty, the entire control of athletic functions has been placed totally in the hands of Aceto. "The purpose of this final switch is to make tickets readily accesible to students," Aceto stated.

After season subscriber tickets, complimentary tickets, band, and "others" are put aside, those remaining will be "divided equally" between the Connelly Center and the Field House.

"We believe that the service of the students will be increased because now they have the advantage of having two ticket agents right on campus," said Aceto.

Bud Murnin, Connelly Center employee in charge of ticket sales, was originally a member of the Athletic Staff and later transferred with the originally proposed plan of a common ticket center. Murnin views the Connelly Center as an outlet for the Field House, and its athletic tickets will be those received on consignment of the Field House's choice. Any further comment on the issue was declined by Murnin.

Weekend Schedule Set

By BILL COPPERWAITHE

Parent's Weekend will be held on October 10, 11, and 12. The University is planning a number of activities for the students, parents, and guests of Villanova.

The purpose of the weekend, according to Dr. James Cleary, vice-president for academic affairs, "is for the parents to learn something about Villanova. The parents can meet the deans and find out about the academic and social life of their sons and daughters."

The proposed events include a cocktail party at the Covered Wagon Inn on Friday night. At eight o'clock the next morning, the NROTC will hold a military review on Mendel field. Later, the Navy will celebrate its 205th anniversary with a Mass in the Villanova Chapel, followed by breakfast in the day hop cafeteria.

At ten o'clock, the deans of the various colleges will address the parents and students. The President's reception will be held in the Main Lounge of the Connelly Center at noon.

The Blue Key Society will also be sponsoring tours of campus throughout the morning.

After the Villanova-Cincinnati football game, a BYOB parents' dance will be held in the Field House at 8:00 p.m.

A Mass will be celebrated by Father President Driscoll on Sunday in the Field House at 11:00 a.m.

AAUP to Renew Petition for Vote

By JOHN COUZENS

The Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) is planning to re-submit a petition calling for a faculty vote on the question of collective bargaining.

The Villanova chapter of the AAUP had indefinitely withdrawn a petition for a collective bargaining election. The petition had been previously filed with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB).

The NLRB scheduled a collective bargaining vote for last February. The balloting was set for February 27 and 28. The election was cancelled the day before it was to have been held due to a judicial ruling which cast doubt on its appropriateness.

Dr. William J. Rice of the Villanova AAUP executive committee said that "assuming no great progress in the bargaining power of the Villanova chapter of the AAUP, a petition for a collective bargaining election will be submitted to the NLRB as soon as possible."

Rice, however, remarked, "as soon as possible means waiting for legal precedence to be set that will allow the Villanova chapter to unionize."

Dr. James Bergquist, president of the Villanova AAUP chapter said, "The cases that are pending that could set legal precedence are doubtful to be successful."

The precedent that the Villanova chapter of the AAUP is waiting for would override the Yeshiva University decision of the United States Supreme Court last year. The Yeshiva decision determined that the National Relations Act does not apply to the "typical mature private university" where faculty members are "managerial."

Rice commented that "there is nothing we can do in our efforts to unionize until legal precedence removes us from the jurisdiction of the Yeshiva decision."

Vandalism Motivation Analyzed

By BILL CLARK

During the past academic year, ...e cost of repairing acts of vandalism on campus rose to approximately sixty thousand dollars. The ...asons for the motivation behind ...ese acts seem to vary from case ... case.

"Vandalism is usually a symbolic act of rebellion," said Dr. ...ffrey Pollard of the Villanova ...unseling Center. "Sometimes ...ople can't cope with the pres...re of being a student, and when ...u add stress to this, some people ...cide to take it out on some ...ilding."

Pollard went on to say that "a ...rtain small portion of the stu... body are rebelling against authority and demonstrate this feeling by committing vandalism."

"Acts of vandalism are more likely to be committed by students who are less mature and more destructive," said Dr. Bernard Gallagher of the sociology department. "In fact, vandalism is a display of their own hang-ups.

When I think of someone who commits vandalism, I usually picture a freshman who is away from home for the first time," said Gallagher.

Gallagher continued by saying that "vandalism is more likely to be found among people who have nothing better to do. These people usually have an excess of leisure time."

"There are not enough social events here to make everyone feel entertained," Gallagher said. "At most places, people are free to choose from many activities, but here it's fairly limited."

According to Pollard, vandalism is a major problem which needs addressing. "I don't feel that it is a growing problem, but it's certainly one that needs to be taken a look at."

Pollard said a vandalism prevention program could help alleviate the problem. "We have to identify these people and help them express their feelings in a more productive way," said Pollard.

"I feel that the person must want to be helped. If you can't get the person to realize what he or she did was wrong, they can't be helped. You have to look inside the person and see what the vandalism actually symbolizes," he said.

"If vandalism is actually going on," said Gallagher, "I would question the R.A.'s (Resident Assistants). If they can't find and help these people, apparently they're not doing their jobs."

Campus Hosts Special Olympics

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Delaware County Special Olympics and The Main Line Week Mini-Marathon were two athletic festivities held at Villanova University this past weekend.

The Special Olympics featured soccer and frisbee competition for 300 mentally handicapped children and young adults. Each athlete competed in an event striving for a Special Olympic Medal. "Every athlete will win something. This accomplishment can help these special people develop a better self image," said Carol Childress, project co-ordinator of the Special Olympic's state staff. Each "hugger," a volunteer worker, stood beside and supported a mentally handicapped athlete throughout the entire day of competition and festivities.

Special Olympics is a state-wide organization, co-sponsored for the Delaware County Games by Villanovans for Life, the Sun Company's Responsible Citizen Program, and the Allstate Insurance Company.

The Special Olympics' Torch was lit for the opening ceremony, marking the start of the competition in soccer and frisbee skills.

Throughout the day, huggers rewarded their athlete for putting forward his best effort. "Volunteers are able to help the mentally handicapped to realize what special people they really are," noted Martha Duprey, a Villanova hugger. "We give unconditional love. We love these athletes whether they win or lose."

A parade of the Special Olympians and their huggers marched into Mendel Field for the opening ceremony. The Villanova Band led the way playing the Olympic song. Frank Dean, specialOlympic state director, delivered a brief speech. Pleased with the days festivities, he commented, "I have never seen so many huggers! That's super!"

Father President Driscoll, O.S.A., also spoke to the Olympians. He congratulated the special athletes for "meeting the challenge of competition." Driscoll led everyone in citing the Special Olympic Oath: "Let me win, but, if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt."

A six-and-a-half mile Mini-Marathon and Restaurant Festival marked the beginning of the third annual Main Line Week. Approximately 800 runners started and finished the race at Villanova University. The shot gun start sounded early Sunday morning. The Chamber of Commerce awarded $2000 in prizes to the many winners.

First place winner Ross Donohue crossed the finish line of the ten-thousand meter course in 30:08 minutes. Donohue won a $100 certificate from the Jacob Reed's men's store. The first place woman, Roberta Anthis, ran the course in 37:58 minutes. Anthis received a $100 certificate from the Joseph Banks store. She placed 49th overall.

The Masters Category is for runners 40 years and older. Walt Pierson won first place in the men's Masters with a time of 37.57 minutes. He placed 48th overa Sandy Folser placed first in th women's Masters coming in a 45:53 minutes. She placed 167t overall.

The $2000 in prizes came fro various restaurants and shop Prizes included certificates to l cal restaurants and sportin stores, running shoes, runnin suits, wristwatches, visors, mug and medals. Fifteen prizes wer raffled off. Every registered ru ner received a free Main Li Mini-Marathon shirt. Participan fourteen years and young received a ribbon for completin the course.

New Organization Elects First Chairperson

By LEN La BARTH

Leslie Palmer was elected Facilitating Committee Chairperson at the weekly meeting of the organization, Wednesday, October 1.

Ms. Palmer, who also serves as Inter-Fraternity Council president, volunteered her services to head the committee which is comprised of eight other members: Villanova Union President Chris Arendt; RSA President Mike Imperiale: ASC President Grant Wagner, Student Body President Henry Amoroso; Bob Rosengrath, vice-president of SGA, Lucy Gorski, Union program director; Gary Belkot of the Campus Ministry Center and Fr. Martin, dean of student activities.

A major point of business brought up at the October 1 meeting was Fr. Martin's responses to earlier questions concerning reorganization of the tailgate parties. "There is an effort to make the tailgates less visible to the community but tie it in integrally to the football game," said Martin.

"People shouldn't be going to the football games to stay in the parking lot and drink." Fr. Martin noted that the behavior of most of those at the Homecoming Game was commendable.

Suggestions for permanent tailgating alterations have included fencing off an area of the practice football for either parking or tailgate parties the day of the game.

Amoroso stated that he believed a barbed wire fence installed around the proposed tailgate ar would be "misinterpreted" by t students.

In addition, Amoroso suggest that an effort to organize a camp cleanup for special duty Parent's Weekend following t tailgates would be an importa step for students to show an i terest in Villanova's appearanc

DJ Attempts to Break Record

By DREW MERRICK

On October 5 at 7:00 p.m., Joe Jasek stepped behind the microphone at WKVU and vowed to broadcast continually for six straight days. That comes out to 144 straight hours of broadcasting! The radio marathon will end at 7:30 p.m. on October 11th.

Jasek, general manager of WKVU, is running this radio-marathon for the benefit of the Muscular Dystrophy Association. The senior Communications major hopes to raise $5,000 while breaking the American College Record for continuous broadcasting. "We plan to reach our goal of $5,000 by running various fundraising events, collecting pledges, and holding raffles," says Jasek. "The last marathon in 1978 raised $4,000 for MDA. By adding new and different ideas in addition to the old ones, I don't think we'll have any problem reaching our goal."

When asked to explain why he decided to undertake such an arduous task, Jasek replied, "I was here when 'Ego' Ed Gallagher broadcasted for 99 straight hours in 1975, and also when Tom Kelly broadcasted for 120 straight hours in 1978. I really had a lot of fun participating in those marathons. These marathons are the pride of WKVU."

"To tell you the truth," Jasek says, "I'm kind of scared that perhaps I may be taking on something a little bigger than I am. I don't care if you're the best athlete in the world; everyone has a breaking point," continued Jasek. "I was talking to Rev. Driscoll about the marathon the other day, and he told me that I was out of my 'cotton pickin' mind," Jasek amusingly recalled. "He suggested that I should go to a doctor and get a note of approval. I went to Dr. Boyle yesterday and he gave me the okay."

Jasek plans to make good use of his allotted break periods. "I plan on taking many cold showers," says Jasek, "though I don't plan on drinking a lot of coffee. I'm only allowed to drink so much." Jasek plans on taking one two-hour break each day, for he is given 5 minutes per hour as a break period.

WKVU has been in operation at Villanova University for the past 35 years, and broadcasts via closed carrier to Rosemont College as well. Membership includes over 60 students from Villanova and Rosemont.

Professor Publishes Textbook

By JOHN P. MUDD

Dr. Douglas A. Klieger, associate professor of psychology at Villanova, has just submitted a psychology textbook for publication.

The text, to be titled either Computer Aided Research fo the Social Sciences or Computer Usage for the Social Sciences, will be published sometime next summer by the McGraw-Hill Book Company.

Dr. Klieger said that he began to consider writing a textbook about five or six years ago, when he felt the need for such a book in advanced seminar-type courses. The book is geared toward seniors and graduate students learning to use the three major computer packages of the social sciences: BMD (Bio-Medical Computer Program) SPSS (Statistical Package for the Social Sciences), and SAS (Statistical Analysis System). All but SAS are here at Villanova, although SAS can be accessed through the computer center.

Dr. Klieger mentioned that most graduate schools expect the psychology student to have had some background in these three statistical areas. He also stated that the book would be good for the student studying the social sciences because it would assist the student in developing saleable skills for the job market.

To write a textbook, Dr. Klieger said, one must have something regarding a particular topic that he or she wants to say. In addition, the author must be able to prove to a publishing firm that there is a sufficient demand for the material to merit a financial gamble. In this particular case, Dr. Klieger, assisted only by his wife, wrote several sample chapters along with a proposal and sent them to various publishing firms.

After receiving a viable bid, he spent much of his free time researching and writing the book. Although he was granted a sabbatical by Villanova during the time that the book was being written, Dr. Klieger stressed the fact that writing a textbook required "... just an amazing amount of work."

Dr. Klieger said that ideally the student could pick up the text and learn how to use statistical packages without the aid of a course in such methods. Requests from students were major motivating factors for writing the book, he said.

Dr. Klieger mentioned that he hopes to continue writing in the future, although he said that he would like to relax after having devoted the past six months entirely to the completion of the book.

Bicycling Club Gets Rolling

By CATHERINE SHEILS

"I feel the main purpose of the cycling club is to promote cycling as a worthwhile activity on the university campus," comments Jeff Kirchner, president of the club. Last semester, he and Paul Kehn, vice-president of the club, petitioned through the Student Activities Office to establish the Bicycling Club as an official organization on campus. Their request was granted and toward the end of the Spring semester, the club successfully sponsored two bicycle rides.

The club is presently under the direction of moderator Fr. Reilly and advisor Dr. Fielder. The other club officers include secretary, Mary Janc and treasurer, Claudin Pessotto. Under this leadership, the club plans to expand upon and improve the framework established last semester.

One does not have to be a professional bicyclist to join the club. All rides are planned in accordance to the skills the members possess. For example, each Sunday a short ride, ranging from ten to twelve miles will be organized for the early afternoon. Later the same afternoon, those who are serious bicyclists may continue and take a twenty-five to forty mile ride.

Jeff remarks, "By organizing shorter rides we hope to attract more members to the club."

One does not have to be an official member of the club to join a ride. All rides will leave from the front of the Connelly Center (facing the tennis courts), at 1:00 every Sunday afternoon. Anyone interested in going on a ride should meet there at that time.

In an effort to more actively involve members of the club, all rides will be planned and led by volunteers from within the club. Also, a separate committee has been formed to deal specifically with the organization of picnics and other activities after a chosen destination has been reached. It is hoped that these activities will provide incentive for the bicyclists.

Sometime at the end of October, this committee will organize a picnic in Valley Forge. Another committee will be responsible for decorating the Bicycling Club's bulletin board, located across from the West Lounge in Dougherty Hall. Vital information highlighting the club's activities will be posted on this board.

The club has many plans for the future in addition to its weekly rides. They have arranged for a guest speaker to attend the meeting on October 30. Mr. Patrick McKelvy, the owner of a bicycle shop in Bryn Mawr who is also involved with racing, will be the speaker. Members can obtain issues of Bicycling magazine at meetings, which will be loaned on a rotating basis. Films will be shown, highlighting the many aspects of bicycling.

The club has already held one Bicycle Clinic and hopes to sponsor another later in the semester. At these clinics one learns how to properly maintain his bicycle in addition to correcting any specific problems. Tentatively schedules for next semester is a bikathon, which will be coordinated in conjunction with LKD Fraternity to benefit a charity.

President Jeff Kirchner, a senior biology major, comments, "Presently the club consists of approximately fifty members. I hope we are able to generate enough interest in the club, that it will continue to grow in the future. Hopefully, we can make the Bicycling Club part of the Villanova Tradition."

"I feel the main purpose of bicycling club is to promote the bicycling as a worth while activity on the University campus."

Course Includes Trip to Mexico

By KATHY SCANLON

Next semester the history department will offer a course in which participants spend spring vacation in Mexico. Dr. Michael Burke is the instructor for the course and director of the week in Mexico.

Both the classroom portion of the course and the trip itself are designed to enable the student to acquire a "feel" for Mexico's past and present, said Burke. Students will visit relics of the past, such as pyramids of ancient Indian civilizations and the Spanish colonial city of Guanajuato. They will also acquire an understanding of present problems and possibilities in briefings by experts and informed meetings with Mexican students.

"Two years ago, a trip very similar to this was quite successful," said Burke. "The classroom briefings went well, and, on the trip itself, a number of students began to get acquainted with the Mexican people."

Burke is enthusiastic about the trip and encourages any Villanova student to participate. "Part of the success of the previous trip was the mix of students from different majors, ages, and backgrounds. Everyone benefited by this," he continued.

"Since 1964 I have been in Mexico on and off for several weeks at a time," said Burke. "I have seen the changes in the country over the years. It is because of my familiarity with Mexico that I consider leading this trip," he explained. Burke's academic speciality is Mexican History.

The trip is not a standard travel agency tour, but an itinerary designed by the instructor especially for this course. According to Burke, "The bulk of the week will be spent in Mexico City. The time will be divided between group and individual outings." The course itself, according to Burke provides an attractive opportunity to students who would like to experience a foreign culture more fully than the average tourist without spending an entire semester abroad.

Are We Truly Educated in Liberal Arts?

Core Requirements at Villanova

In a recent article in the National Review, Jeffrey Hart, a professor of English at Dartmouth College indicts Dartmouth and many American liberal arts colleges as not being serious about the design and purpose of undergraduate liberal education.

Dartmouth and other colleges, Hart believes, must have somehow lost the element of institutional inspiration in their approach to curriculum.

He maintains that liberal arts students must become more aware of their role as members of Western civilization. Teachers and administrators, he feels, must react to the demand of what an educated person ought to be, and must not merely respond to community demands and proposals for new and different courses.

Hart argues that Dartmouth students know "where they are in space but not where they are in time." Students do not recognize that they are members of Western civilization. At Dartmouth, one can obtain a degree without ever having read Homer, Dante, or Shakespeare.

One wonders whether the average Villanova student even recognizes the names of these individuals who have contributed to the formation of their own culture.

It is not that Villanova doesn't exhibit a belief in core requirements and a well-rounded education. While many universities dropped core requirements during the sixties and seventies (Harvard included), Villanova remained faithful to its belief in the relevance of this program.

However, Villanova has not re-examined its mission and the purpose of its existence. It has rested on the assumption that the core requirements alone are enough and that they necessarily provide the best possibile atmosphere in which a student can become an educated person, knowledgeable of his place in time.

Before being handed his undergraduate degree at Villanova, a student possesses a wealth of facts. He has read some great plays, he has heard a bit about scientific theories, maybe he's even performed a physics experiment or two. He knows some lines from Aristotle, and some from Camus, but the systematic interrelation among all that he studies is often left unexplored.

For example, when a professor and a student make a contract to study a chemistry course for "non-majors," for example, they expect and accept a minimum of work and capsule approximations. But the student often does not even gain a basic understanding of the underlying facts and concepts as they relate to each other and to the rest of his studies.

Hart calls for the institution of a Humanities I and II course at Dartmouth much like the Columbia University freshmen requirement. The program deals with Western thought in literature, art, and science as interrelated, not as existing in a vacuum.

Villanova's Honor Program offers an approximation of Columbia's requirement in its Interdisciplinary Humanities courses.

Every student should be required to take a Humanities I and II course; every student should have a background in Greek tragedy, Shakespeare, Milton, Dosteyevski, Chekhov. Such courses not only afford us the opportunity to have intelligent conversation, but expose us to the powerful body of thought and tradition which allows us to find our place in time.

We cannot assume the great tradition of Western thought is of no significance for man in the 1980's.

Draft Unnecessary

Dear Editor:

In response to the op-ed on the draft, one can say that it contained two main tenets: the draft definitely necessary and that to resist conscription is among other things moral egotism and a prelude to national disaster.

First of all, the draft now is not a definite necessity. The author gives several reasons which are all either false or inconclusive. In the interest of space, I will deal with only a few.

The problem of manpower is at the level of maintaining and understanding highly sophisticated weaponry. This primarily means re-enlistments. For example, Air Force pilots are trained to fly sophisticated aircraft. After four years, the Air Force can't provide enough of a monetary incentive for the pilots to remain. This example could also be applied for mechanical repairmen and operators for the weaponry. A draft will not solve this very central problem in the Armed Forces.

Also, the author believes that a draft, because it involves various social classes will be a deterrent to war. This is a highly speculative and inconclusive statement. It can just as easily and perhaps more forcefully be stated that the draft is going to be an incentive to war. Also, the upper classes in society, because of their status, would be exempt. For example, college will be an exemption. And it can be shown that a higher percentage of middle and upper class men and women go to college. So we are still stuck with the poorly educated, and unmotivated "dregs" of society in the armed forces.

The second tenet states that resistance to the draft is moral egotism and a prelude to national disaster. This is not only false but extremely dangerous if laid bare in its full implications. The author implicitly contends in his article that a conscientious objector should respond to presumably the highest moral consideration, duty to the national will. It seems that author is willing to subordinate all individual rights and other moral considerations to an undefinable national will, or "will of the community." What is this will and who's will is it really? It is difficult to understand how a conscientious objector, who realizes that another war means a full scale destruction of civilization, could be construed as a moral egotist.

The author also says that "he may agree that war is morally wrong," but that conscription is "a morally valid avenue . . . to wage and win war." If war is morally wrong then how can conscription be a moral avenue to wage and win war? More contradicts itself in its usage. And if war can be construed as morally right, a justification is needed. The next war will be a nuclear holocaust involving the destruction of millions of people.

Finally, the op-ed in its blatant nationalism and patriotic rhetoric is a sign of the times that one would do well to be wary of.

There was approximately $65,000 worth of damage due to vandalism on Villanova's campus last year, considerably more than in previous years. We asked Villanova students why they believe this occurs and what they think can be done about it.

Tim Malloy

"The vandalism in the dorms is done mostly by people from another area or section, some are probably drunk and for others it is just a way of releasing the tension. Now they are charging the people who live in the dorms which is not really fair, but there's not much else that can be done."

"The vandalism is usually isolated cases, due to the damage a few individuals have caused. Besides making the R.A.'s more aware of it, there's nothing else you could do unless you give the security guards guns, but that brings up a lot of other problems.

Special Olympics

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my thanks to the literally hundreds of Villanovans who gave so much of their time to make our Special Olympics program on Sunday the success it was. I think it is with events like this that we come to realize just how much we need each other's help and support and too that we realize just how much others need our help and support. I believe these words of thanks can also be spoken on behalf of the 219 Special Olympians who participated in our Soccer and Frisbee Skills Contest. Everyone from Olympian to Volunteer to Hugger can be said to be a winner.

Besides our Volunteers and Huggers I would like to recognize some of the Villanova Community who gave so much of their time, concern and love. Without these people Sunday would have been impossible: Rev. John Driscoll, President of Villanova University, Frs. Cedric Wilson and John Stack our Moderators, Fr. Robert Martin Dean of Student Activities and his staff Mrs. Jean O'Neill and Ms. Mary Pat Perri and with very "Special" thanks to the Steering Committee who cried over and over again "but Angie TOLD me to do it!!": Linda, John, Jim, Maggie, Debbie, Felicia, Tom, Brian, YA, Lisa, Martha, Janet, Mike, John, Joann, Bob and Anita (whose rain plan was never even needed), Ed, Maureen and not to be forgotten again, Peter.

To all of the SOB's in the Villanova Community (Special Olympics Boosters) who are already looking forward to next year just think if we can expand from reaching 38 Olympians in 1979 to reaching 219 Olympians in 1980, we can only do a better job next year. Until then with my thanks.

Homecoming Queen

Dear Editor:

In regard to the article "Queen Discusses Homecoming" in last week's Villanovan, Miss Walsh inadvertently omitted the most important statement that I stressed to her during my interview. Quote: "I was very honored, very proud, and extremely flattered to have been chosen as Villanova University's 1980 Homecoming Queen."

My sincere thanks to everyone.

Dear Editor:

After reading last week's review of JT's Place, I felt compelled to write something in response.

I was certainly amazed by Jerry Arth's journalistic dexterity. Really, from rock critic to culinary commentator, his talents surely run the gamut. And how glib Mr. Arth is, making use of such smashing phrases as: "vile" (when referring to the food in Villanova cafeterias) and "perfectly tender", "superb...delicate garlic butter", "bane of weight watchers" and "incredibly rich" (regarding the menu at JT's Place).

C'mon, who DOES Mr. Arth think he is? I have not seen such pomposity and pretentious buffoonery in print since William F. Buckley, Jr. Maybe he should just get un-'caught-up' in himself.

Letter Correction

By CATHY MURPHY

Last week, the Villanovan incorrectly printed the petition which the Consumer Club plans to send to Iran. This is the correct version:

TO: Iranian Students, U.S. Embassy, Teheran, Iran
FROM: Concerned Students, Villanova University, Villanova, PA 19085, U.S.A.
Dear Moslem Students:

We the undersigned students urge you, the activist Moslem students to release the fifty-two (52) American diplomats before November 4, 1980 on grounds of common decency, legal rights, humanitarian reasons and academic courtesy. If the unfortunate diplomats are not released before November 4th, then the annual anniversary of your unlawful act shall go down in world history as a day of infamy. The students of Iran and the Moslem Revolutionists shall be forever dishonored, discredited, shamed, and tarnished.

We the concerned students have committed ourselves to the ultimate and safe release of all of the fifty-two unfortunate Americans held in your senseless custody. To this end we shall devote our energy and our prayers.

To date, over 2000 students have signed the petition. The club hopes to double this number by the end of the drive. Students wishing to sign the letter may do so in Bartley, room 328, on Mondays, Wednesday, and Fridays between 12:30 and 2:30 or in various other locations throughout the campus.

In addition to the letter, the Consumer Club is selling message T-shirts. Over fifty shirts reading "Iran: Idiots running a nation" and "Iran: Idiots, Radicals, and Nuts" have been sold so far. The price of the shirts is four dollars each.

Says Dr. Butkys, moderator of the Consumer Club, "The shirts are tangible expression of our protest against Iran. Their purpose is to demonstrate that the plight of our hostages has not been forgotten."

Divine Miss M Caught Live

Midler Shines in Concert Film

By MARIE PATRIARCA

In spite of her shattering performance in The Rose, Bette Midler's talents as a performer are frequently underestimated. Divine Madness is the consummate version of the show she has performed for adoring fans the past five years. Director Michael Ritchie allows the films to be totally Midler's by regulating his role to a chronicler of events.

It is evident that the Divine Miss M is primarily an entertainer. In 90 minutes she runs the gamut from song and dance to telling dirty jokes. Midler is at home with her audience, content with pulling up a stool and chatting about her adventures around the world or doing her impression of Shelley Winters in The Poseidon Adventure. This one woman show includes such characters as Delores DeLago and The Magic Lady.

Delores DeLago, the toast of Chicago, is the epitome of the lounge act performer. Midler describes her as "A woman of the grandest notions and not the simplest hint of taste." Donning a mermaid outfit in a motorized wheelchair complete with swaying palms, Delores rides her way through her unique rendition of My Way.

Midler demonstrates her respect for the comedic tradition of pantomime in her touching portrayal of the Magic Lady. Sitting alone on a park bench with nothing but an empty bottle and a tattered umbrella, this optimistic shopping bag woman lives her life through her fantasies, telling us how she is Ready to Begin Again.

To not disappoint any of her fans, Midler includes in her repertoire many of the characteristic songs which exemplify her early stage performances. Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy and Leader of The Pack continue to be a vital part of the show. Another interesting number done in Midler style is Bruce Springsteen's, E Street Shuffle.

The closing song, I Shall Be Released, particularly captures the uplifting swells of emotion Midler creates during her frantic, loving communion with her followers. If you are a Midler fan, you will love the movie. For those who have not made up their minds about this talented but unconventional performer, Divine Madness is worth seeing.

Prine Brings Illegal Smiles to Fans at Tower

By AMY MACLACHLAN

After driving around the slums of Philadelphia for almost an hour, this reviewer finally arrived at the Tower Theater for the 8 p.m. show featuring John Prine and Rick Danko.

Rick Danko, an ex-Band member, has definitely seen better days. He no longer seems to have that necessary stage presence that made The Band so famous. Danko still manages to put out the kind of music that one would expect to hear in a small club, but unfortunately he ended up sounding somehow out of place in the Tower Theater among the surprisingly wild John Prine fans. Highlights of his mediocre performance included some old Band songs, his most successful pieces, and his more upbeat new tunes, which aren't terribly exciting.

After a 30 minute break the stage was reset and John Prine came hopping onstage in a black suit wildly playing his electric guitar. The crowd was elated: hand clapping; foot stomping and just screaming wild.

Prine's years with the music business don't seem to be taking to heavy a toll on him. An observer cannot help noticing the faint wrinkles in the corners of his eyes, but the attention is mainly focused on his youthful stature and his longer-than-ever hair. Prine seems to be changing his sound from the soul-searching mellow sound of his Dear Abbey days to the more rock and roll up beat of Oh, Oh Baby, Just Wanna Be With You. After doing all the traditional tunes like: Fish and Whistle, That's The Way That The World Goes Round and One Red Rose, he broke into Illegal Smile, which turned out to be a high point of the evening. Rick Danko and band came out on stage and, along with complete audience participation, John Prine sang this exciting song with a great deal of energy. Although Prine is turning towards more rhythmn and blues, he is able to mix the vastly different sounds in order to reach a very exciting effect. An example of this is, after doing a rocking version of There She Goes, he is able to hush the theater to almost complete silence to perform a song as emotional as Sam Stone.

All things considered, this was a memorable evening with John Prine, who is one of the most effective singer/songwriters of his class.

Elvis Takes Liberties

Father of New Wave Sings 20 Songs

Elvis and the Attractions.

By AMY MACLACHLAN

Throughout the history of popular music, we have seen many different trends come and go. For almost three years we have witnessed the birth of an age of music that appears to be here to stay. This style has been called "Punk" or "Power Pop," but generally is respectfully referred to as "New Wave." The singer/songwriter who most deserves to be called the Father of New Wave is none other than that obnoxious Englishman, Elvis Costello. Costello, who turns out more hits than a jukebox, has just released a collection of oldies and previously unreleased studio songs on his new album, Taking Liberties.

Taking Liberties is a collection of not 10, but 20 songs. The album plays 22 minutes per side and is varied in the types of songs. Aided by Nick Lowe acting as producer on 11 of the 20 songs, Elvis shows his unique ways of handling all the different types of material that appear on this album.

Side one features the old favorite, Girls Talk, that has been released three previous times by Elvis and also by numerous other entertainers. Stranger in the House, recorded in London with the Attractions, his back-up band, is a mellow, sentimental tune in which Elvis demonstrates his ability to create an emotional atmosphere by vocalizing sincerity in every note. The big FM hit, Getting Mighty Crowded, shows Elvis reaffirming the old adage, "Two's company, three's a crowd," in a real "get down and party" musical score. Tiny Steps is another real plus in this reviewer's opinion. Anyone who has been following Elvis throughout his quickly escalating career recognizes this as yet another step on the road to stardom for Elvis. I Don't Want to Go to Chelsea follows the typical punk stereotype one tends to acquaint with Elvis' other four albums.

Overall, this album is a very good buy. The pluses include 20 songs, 47 minutes of playing time, a vast variety of styles and, of course, Elvis. For those who Diana Ross, considered to be one of the top female entertainers in America, returns to the Valley Forge Music Fair, Monday Oct. 13 through Sunday Oct. 19. Performances are Monday through Thursday at 8:30, Friday at 7:45 and 11:45, Saturday at 6:30 and 10:30 and Sunday at 7:30.

With more No. 1 records in the charts than any other recording artist in the history of the charts, Miss Ross is truly one of the most important entertainers of the last decade. She began her career in 1962 as the lead vocalist for a small trio called The Primettes (later to be named The Supremes). Over a period of ten years, The Supremes, under the direction of Motown Records, had 15 records in the No. 1 spot and enjoyed the undisputed position as the leading female group in the world.

Comedy Works Hosts Benefit

By IRENE SMITH

The first all-women comedy show was recently held in Philadelphia at the Comedy Works in a benefit for Women Against Abuse — a protective shelter and counseling center for abused women and their children.

The show featured Carol Liefer from the Comic Strip in New York City and Margie Gross originally from Canada and the author of the book Titters, a humorous collection of women comics' writings. From Philadelphia there was a local performer Judy Toll, and Pam Matterson who is touring with the company of Annie.

The show played to a predominantly female audience whose reactions to the comedians offered insights and guidelines for future all women comedian shows.

The material and repertoire of the performers was disappointing

Feldman Stars in Heavenly Film

By ECHELMEIER YOUNGER

In God We Trust, the motto of our U.S. Currency and an often heard phrase in Sunday morning worship, has been coined by Universal Studios to produce an all-time zany film. This motion picture, produced by Howard West and George Shapiro, stars Marty Feldman, director and co-writer, Peter Boyle, Louise Lasser, Richard Pryor and Andy Kaufman.

In God We Trust reflects Saint Ambrose's, Marty Feldman's, flight into a world unknown to him. His mission is to seek Armaggeddon T. Thunderbird, Andy Kaufman, a crusader for the "Church of Divine Profit," and establish a final mortgage settlement for the monastery.

Ambrose, set loose on the outside world, encounters Dr. Sebastian Melmouth, Peter Boyle, a traveling Evangelist in a mobile church and lead con-artist who conned Ambrose out of the fifty dollars given to him by Abbott Thelonious, Wilfred Hyde-White. Louise Lassar from the TV series Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman, portrays the role of Mary the hooker who gives Ambrose cause to break the Seventh Commandanment. Mary leads him into earthy love and to Armaggeddon whose philosophy of religion entails the concept that, "it is better to give than to receive."

Ambrose, amazed by the importance and power of the dollar, is now more than ever determined to have a personal confrontation with God, Richard Pryor, to put the record straight. Consequently, Ambrose and God have involved themselves in a crusade — good vs. evil — to enable the meek to inherit the worldly goods of the earth.

Marty Feldman prays in "In God We Trust."

Vasey Hosts "Picnic"

Picnic, the Pulitzer Prize-winning drama by American playwright William Inge, will be the first production of the Villanova Theatre season. This moving portrayal of small-town life in the 1950's will run Wednesday, Oct. 15 through Saturday, Oct. 18, and Wednesday, Oct. 22 through Saturday, Oct. 25. All performances will begin at 8:00 in Vasey Theatre. Tickets are $5.00 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6.00 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts available. Free parking is located directly across from the theatre on Lancaster Avenue.

James Harbour, Assistant Professor of Theatre at Temple University, will be guest director for this production. Harbour's directing credits include Habeas Corpus, Prime of Miss Jean Brodie and Vanities, and he has acted in the Wisconsin and Oregon Shakespeare festivals, and in summer Shakespeare at Villanova.

Director Harbour regards Picnic as a "memory play," one that can show how "we grew into what we've become." Set in a sleepy Kansas town in late summer, the play traces the events following the arrival in the town of a handsome drifter named Hal. When Hal meets beautiful young Madge Owens, everyone's lives are changed.

ogly limited. There was a repetitious theme of The Wizard of Oz skit, a continuous run of jokes aimed at the Jewish American Princess and spin-offs of commercials.

However, the quality of the comedians was high, and despite the premise that women have had hard time being funny and still retain their feminity, the show was surprisingly well done. The criticism offered by women in the audience was a lack of political satire and too much emphasis on issues pertaining strictly to women hygiene.

Presently we are at the begining of an era of women in comedy. Thursday night's show was performed strictly from a women's perspective. More originality and focus on relevent issues affecting women of today would have added greater depth to the show. Five years from now, women will have a broader context of humor that will change as women become more secure. In all, it was an entertaining show that offers much promise for the future.

George Burns' Second Coming

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Imagine yourself in a Chinese restaurant, checking out the fortune cookies as you wait for your father to get off the phone. Breaking open a cookie, you are confronted with the fortune:

"Meet me in the lounge. God."

If you are Friedrich Nietzsche you carelessly crumble the slip of paper between you fingers and unravel your theory of the awful nature of the sheepish masses. But if you are eight-year-old Tracy Roberts in Oh God Book II, you wonderingly wander to the lounge door, which is opened by an unseen hand, and confront George Burns.

Literally, Oh God Book II tells the story of a west Los Angeles schoolgirl's love for her God and her persecution because of it. Metaphorically, it opens the painful wounds concerning these same circumstances in the lives of Abraham Lincoln, Jesus Christ, Martin Luther King, Mahatma Ghandi and Socrates. It introduces, as Tracy, a young actress named Louanne, and her talents steal the spotlight from everyone. Even George Burns' God, whose self-effacing humility (no Charlton Heston fire-and-brimstone) is definitely a tough act to upstage.

One particularly touching moment demonstrates the deep thought Oh God Book II brings to expressing such a noble theme through a film genre often accused of paltry shallowness. After Tracy and her friends spread God's slogan (Think God) from west Los Angeles to the world, school officials force her to submit to an excruciating barrage of physical and psychological examinations. As the little girl lies down on the table with dozens of electrodes connected to her head for an electronic brain scan, she is covered with a yellow print blanket and clutches it tightly. In the following close-up, we see that the pattern on the blanket is of laughing clowns. Their smiles, what Tracy's childhood should be, mock the fear in her eyes, what her childhood has become.

The script contains snatches of similar brilliance. The head of the psychiatric panel convened to examine Tracy's claims that she cannot only speak with God, but see him as well, reminds his colleagues that, "If she's right, then we're all wrong." In that first uncomfortable confrontation in the lounge, Tracy meekly inquires, "If you were God, why would you bother with me?" And the film opens with a shot of the globe, suspended in space, partially obscured by fleeting clouds, about which the voice of God profoundly exclaims, "What a mess!" The fact that these sentences were prevalent two thousand years ago and still are appropriate today is one of the reasons Oh God Book II is a masterpiece of its type, and a genuinely touching, meaningful film that everyone should enjoy.

Harriers Troubled in Big East Debut

By KERRY LYNCH

The course was fast and flat, the weather cool and sunny and the Villanova men's cross country team was not up to the challenge of its Big East debut. Last Saturday at Boston's Franklin Park, the Wildcat Harriers were beaten 31-37 by Providence College in the Big East Cross Country Championship. Seven other teams competed in the meet, which Providence College, traditionally a cross country powerhouse, and Villanova, 1979 IC4A's champions, dominated.

The race took on the quality of a dual meet between Providence and Villanova, each team placing four men in the top ten. Providence finished 1-2 before Wildcat Kevin Dillon crossed the line in third place. Challenged by teammate Treacy, Providence's Brendan Quinn established a new meet record when he captured first place in 23:30.5.

Kevin Dillon was the outstanding Villanova performer, running the five miles in a quick 23:43.0. It was a race that Coach Jack Pyrah termed "super" and "his best race for Villanova." Dillon attributes his excellent time to a modification of his training. He said, "It was definitely a very fast course."

"The freshmen ran very well" said Pyrah of Brian O'Keeffe's and Marcus O'Sullivan's first race for Villanova. O'Keeffe finished sixth, 29 seconds behind the winner, and O'Sullivan placed 13. John Hunter ran well for 10th place and Amos Korir's fifth place finish completed the scoring for Villanova.

The Friar victory over the Wildcats was not that much of a surprise to cross country Coach Pyrah, who said, "Providence recruits for cross country" while the program here is "geared to track." However, Pyrah thought it was a good meet considering that it was the first of the season and "neither Sydney (Maree) n Amos (Korir) are in great shape

The times were great, the sco was close, and the attitude op mistic. Dillon said, "We can b Providence when Sydney Amos run well." So perhaps t Wildcats will get their reven when they confront Providen again this season.

Title IX Controversy Continues

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

Title IX has been a very controversial ruling ever since it's enactment in 1972 and it continues to be a topic disputed among the Department of Education, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), administrators, coaches and players, even here at Villanova.

Title IX was originally created to eliminate sex discrimination in any educational insitiution receiving federal funds. This new law took off in one particular direction, women's sports.

Women began to fight for this equality act to be instituted in their sports programs. These actions stirred the NCAA and they began to question the effect Title IX would have on their programs.

The funding going toward the men's and women's athletic programs need not be fifty-fifty. They are required to be proportional to the number of varsity athletes involved in the respective department.If a college has 200 male varsity athletes and they are spending $1000 per male scholarship, the college must also average $1000 per female scholarship.

According to Maryann Steenrod, Director of Women's Athletics at Villanova, "We are in complete compliance with Title IX and our scholarships are exactly proportional. Our athletes are one-third female and one-third male."

Many of those who were displeased with the effects of Title IX argued that men's football and basketball receipts for the athletic department should go back into these programs. "The returns from Villanova basketball and football games go into a general Villanova University fund," commented Steenrod.

The institution has the obligation to provide overall equal athletic opportunities to male and female students, regardless of spectator interest, community or student support or the production of revenue.

Many schools found difficulty in adjusting their budgets to keep up their men's sports program and still allot the appropriate women's amount. "The Villanova intercollegiate budget was not affected. The women's athletic department

Wildcats Tally Two Shutouts

By KATHY MAHER

The women's soccer team won its game against Rutgers on Thursday, October 2 by a score of 1-0. Nina Wiezorek scored what turned out to be the winning goal twelve minutes into the second half on a corner kick. Despite the victory, Villanova had only 17 shots on goal compared to Rutger's 24 shots.

The team travelled to Lancaster on Saturday to battle Franklin and Marshall. Ending in a 0-0 tie, Head Coach Lee Stevens feels that "Villanova could have won had not four players missed the game and had the bench been more experienced."

Goalie Patti Nowlan, a junior and first year member of the team, displayed her talent in the game by blocking Franklin and Marshall's 13 shots on goal. Villanova also tested the opposing goalie with a total of 21 shots on goal.

Another outstanding player in Saturday's matchup was senior Lori Stasco. According to Stevens, "she had her best game ever at Franklin and Marshall."

"Scoring goals is the secret to future successes," stated the third-year coach. "We have the opportunities, all we need is someone to complete the play." Stevens continued.

Baseball Fever Never Dies

By PATRICK FLYNN

Eleven years ago, an eight-year-d boy accompanied his father d an uncle to Baltimore's morial Stadium to witness the playoff game in the new era of sional baseball.

Editorial

The weather was perfect; sunny; y had a bit cool. It must have the same weather that some eight-year-old relished in an er day, perhaps as he watched Larsen throw zeros at the ers in Yankee Stadium in aroma of baseball was there. mixture of cigars, peanuts beer mingling with the ance of freshly-cut grass have jarred the senses of er eight-year-old who may thrilled to the sight of Enos hter scoring from first base single to finish off the Red for the Cardinals in 1946. excitement was there. lighted by the post-season at- here and the hordes of media nel which flock to the , it's the same excitement was in Boston when Cy Young and Deacon Phillippe started it off in 1903, and no doubt the same excitement that races through Yankee Stadium when Mr. October, Reggie Jackson, sends one out after two dozen other teams have been sent home to wait 'till next year. It's the same frenzied passion that grips all the eight-year olds, as well as the eighty year olds, who are lucky enough to be there to watch October close the books on yet another campaign.

There's a magic to post-season baseball that escapes all other sports. As much as the Super Bowl is bally-hooed, it loses something in the sterility of a neutral field. The NBA playoffs excite virtually no one, since basketball has never been able to build legend on top of its disjoint past. The Stanley Cup Playoffs are great, but get knocked down a rung because of the watered-down nature of the also-rans who are invited to join.

But baseball has that magic. The magic that lets you see the ghosts of Willie Mays and Babe Ruth and Roberto Clemente and Thurman Munson in every game every autumn. The magic that can spur nostalgia even in the heart of one who hasn't lived two decades yet but already cherishes the memory of that eight-year-old he used to be.

The games are played at night. There's a designated hitter every other year, and the television fans get a better view than the paying customers. But one city lives, another dies. And the excitement and the memories come forth, just as they did through two World Wars, just as they did for this eight-year-old in 1969, just as it will for the new generations of eight-year-olds decades from now.

Wildcats Double Victories

By BUD PIERCE

Villanova's varsity soccer squad boosted their record to 4-2 last weekend with victories over Eastern and Spring Garden Colleges.

In the 6-0 victory over Eastern on October 1, sophomore goalkeeper Pete Jirak set a Villanova record for the most consecutive shutouts in a season with three. Jirak accomplished this feat partially due to the Wildcat defense allowing only three shots on goal. Halfbacks Carmillo Guitierrez and Ramon Garcia stole the ball several times from the Eastern offense, which led to Villanova scores.

The Villanova offense was led by seniors Steve Frey and Brian Pursel and sophomores John Warakasa and Clint Grimes. Frey scored 3 goals in the Wildcat victory.

The team took the field again on Saturday against Philadelphia rival Spring Garden College. The Cats defeated Spring Garden 3-1 for their fourth victory of the season.

The Cats first opportunity to score in the first half failed when Spring Garden goalkeeper Frank Murphy made a save on a penalty kick by Steve Frey. But Frey came back shortly thereafter to put the Wildcats out in front 1-0. The next goals for Villanova were scored by freshman Brendon Dalton and sophomore Brian Barr.

Defensively, the Wildcats seem to be improving. Fullbacks Tom Nealon and John Gallagher have only given up one goal in the last 4 games. When asked whether or not the two victories will have any impact on the remainder of the season, Head Coach Howard Graff said, "If we can keep up the momentum, we will have a good shot at the N.C.A.A. Tournament."

was given more money and nothing was taken away from the men's budget," explained Steenrod.

Scholarships may be allotted to any men's sport desired as long as the proportionate amount is given to the women.

If Villanova increases its athletic assistance to the male basketball team, female basketball assistance would not have to be increased as long as some female team received the respective funding.

Dr. Robert Langran, varsity tennis coach for both the men's and women's teams and chairman of the Political Science Department feels that this is the area where Title IX has hurt his team. "Title IX has helped me insofar as I now have two-tuition only scholarships within a four year period to award to my women's team," comments Langram. It has also hurt his men's team because he cannot award any male scholarships without the extra cost of adding proportionate scholarshipping to women's athletics.

"Villanova has done a really fine job in complying with Title IX," feels Steenrod. Now that the opportunities and funds are proportionate, eight years after the enactment, many people involved with athletics have begun to wonder whether basic female desire for competition would have eventually evened out the programs.

Darrell Mudra, football coach for Eastern Illinois University, expresses his view in the "NCAA News" on some of the pros and cons of the law. He claims there has been an unwarranted doubling of staffs in many areas and increased administrative costs. Mudra feels that more emphasis is needed on intramurals. Scholarships have put the emphasis in the wrong place, making the amateur athlete play for money. Yet he points out that scholarships help focus on excellence and team play also becomes valuable in a community.

Our women's basketball team has moved up to Division I after a very successful season last year in Division II. Volleyball is still undefeated this year. Field Hockey is undefeated in their division. All the women's teams have come a long way in just a few years of building. Whether this advancement can all be accredited to Title IX is questionable. The fact is, the opportunities are now there for ALL Villanova athletes.

SFERRA CLAIMS TITLE

By JERRY VENTRESCA

He's built like Lou Ferrigno, looks like Arnold Schwartznegger, and height close to Franco Columbu. He's Vince Sferra, a Villanova junior and winner of Teenage Physique '80, a body-building competition involving teenagers from Mid-Atlantic and New England states.

The Raritan, N.J., Arts major captured first place in his height class (5'7" to 5'9") and the overall title in June at William Paterson College in Wayne, N.J., which featured 51 other bodybuilders.

The award was Sferra's first and more are expected to come to the hard-working, dedicated lifter. His goals are clear: "I will win the states," says Sferra, referring to the Pennsylvania State Weightlifting Championships, which will be held in the Field House on February 9.

Vince started lifting at age 13 and has been around weights ever since, including during the off-season from football and track in high school. It wasn't until his senior year that he became interested in body-building. According to Sferra, "I've been serious about lifting for two-and-a-half years."

The essentials to a body-builder are a balanced diet and constant training, says Sferra. Although heavy weightlifting builds muscles and increases strength, a body-builder must remain on a strict diet to keep off fat. "In body-building, you're judged not by weightlifts but physical appearance, which includes the definition of the muscles, stage presentation and proportions."

Sferra's diet before Teenage Physique '80 varied. Four weeks before the meet, he began cutting down on carbohydrates and kept count of calories per day. For the next two weeks, he cut his calorie count down to 900-1,000 a day and 120 grams of protein were essential. His meals included broiled fish, broiled chicken, egg whites and half a cantaloupe. For the final week everything remained the same but the cantaloupe was cut to one-quarter a day.

After the competition, Vince ate the same, but on a larger scale, based on the fact that the pre-contest diet takes off fat but also lessens his strength.

Sferra's prerequisites for the body-building competition also included 12 hours a week of weightlifting, 5-6 hours a week posing and five hours of sun-tanning daily to drain [illegible] water and bring about a "[illegible] appearance." In Vince's [illegible] Sferra also pointed out that [illegible] steroids make you stronger, [illegible] is no need for him to take [illegible] because "I'm still young [illegible] have no need for them. Res[illegible]ers indicate the disadvanta[illegible] using steroids outweigh tha[illegible] vantages 100 to 1. In the long [illegible] they damage your liver [illegible] kidneys," continues Sferra.

When asked if muscle ti[illegible] turn to fat after one has sto[illegible] lifting with barbells (as oppos[illegible] Nautilus or the universal), S[illegible] explained that, "Muscle ti[illegible] cannot turn to fat tissues. [illegible] have to watch what you eat [illegible] like anyone else. Nautilus is [illegible] different type of training."

In the near future Sferra's [illegible]tative plans include being n[illegible] Mr. New Jersey next fall. [illegible] biology and chemistry as elect[illegible] Vince plans to attend a chiro[illegible]tic school following Villanov[illegible]

Women's Intramurals Initiates Season

By BOB CONWAY

"The initial year of the women's intramural football program is going fine," said Director of Women's Intramurals, Cindy Coughlin. "The enthusiasm of the girls," Coughlin added, "has made my job easier to handle."

The women play their games Sunday afternoons at the stadium on the new artificial surface. The setup for these games is different than when the Wildcats take on a visiting university. The field is divided into thirds. They play the width of the field so three games can be played at one time. The team which has the ball has six downs in which to score.

Two teams that will provide tough competition based on early season games are P.C.P.'s and Ray's Regulars. P.C.P.'s are captioned by Rita Doherty and Rosemary Gilgun. Ray's Regulars are captained by Rosemarie Burke and Kathy Beisel.

Cindy Coughlin expects that each team will play at least five games, but "more if the weather permits it."

Coughlin said, "For a first year program it is running smoothly." Special rules help make the game safer for the athletes; plus many teams have male coaches who help the girls with plays and problems. Cindy Coughlin hopes the enthusiasm on the part of the athletes continues.

Ali Reigns as the Greatest Ever

By EDDIE WALLACE

He has been called a loudmouth, show off, draftdodger and everything else anyone of his stature could be called.

At times we have all hated or possibly maligned him for his outspoken belief in himself. His "arrogance" seems to be unequaled by anyone of this era.

The fact remains though, that this is a very unique man. Aside from his physical ability, he exudes a confidence which is transmitted to others. One story tells of a sportswriter who was deathly afraid of flying and was asked to cover the Ali-Foreman fight in Zaire. He claimed that he would only cover the event if he was booked on the same plane as Ali, because he knew that flight would never crash.

As trivial as this anecdote may seem it is representative of the positive vibrations that Ali gives off. At 38 years of age, almost a decade past his boxing prime, Ali's courage, confidence, pride and $8 million forced him into the ring once again. He was terribly mismatched, but if you had asked anyone before the fight who they liked, almost everyone said, "Ali." Ali sincerely believed that he would not only win, but knock his opponent out. Ali lost terribly.

I would hope that this loss will not cause people to forget about the tremendous example of this man. His boxing accomplishments aside, let us attempt to remember the way he approaches life.

Living in this unstable, crazy world, we can all take a lesson from Ali, the man. We have to believe in ourselves and take pride in whatever we endeavor to undertake. If we all can acquire the inner strength and positive approach to life that he has demonstrated to us, then Ali's mission will not have been inconsequential. Let us not remember his as the greatest boxing champion of all time, but as a true Champion of Life.

Cross Country

By BOB CONWAY

Last Tuesday, October 7, the 11th annual intramural Cross Country meet was held on the new Jumbo Elliott Track. This event was co-sponsored by the men's track team, and was directed by intramural director Ed Geisz and director of Men's sports Steven Cole.

The course covered a 2.5-mile run beginning at the track proceeding along Ithan, County Line, Spring Mill, Montgomery, back down Ithan and finished at the track.

Arts and Science sophomore Paul Flagler nosed out Commerce and Finance sophomore Jim Martin, with times of 13:21 and 13:24 respectively. Freshman Frank Setterthwaite finished third with a time of 13:55.

Netters' Season On Upswing

By KYLE GOTHNER

In the past two weeks the Villanova women's tennis team has improved their record from 2-1 to an impressive 6-1. Their winning streak began with a 5-4 victory over Seton Hall and has continued with decisive wins over Widener College, 9-0 and St. John's University, 6-3. Other Wildcat victories came at the hands of Rosemont College, 5-0, and Gwynedd Mercy College, 5-0.

The matches against Widener, Rosemont and Gwynedd Mercy provided little in the area of competition for Villanova but St. John's proved to be much tougher than the others. Freshman Trish Stairiker won at second singles with scores of 6-2, 7-6; Dawn Fisher won at fourth singles 6-1, 6-0; Diane Cappuccio won at [illegible] singles in three sets 3-6, 6-3 a[illegible] 2; and Cynthia Burke won at s[illegible] singles 6-4, 6-0. At first doub[illegible] Carol Harrison and Dawn Fis[illegible] won 6-2, 6-3 and at third doub[illegible] Gina Ayoub and Lisa Martor [illegible] 7-5, 6-0.

Today and Saturday [illegible] women's team will face two [illegible] their more difficult opponents [illegible] the season, Mt. St. Mary's [illegible] Glassboro.

This morning the men's te[illegible] flew to Boston to compete in t[illegible] Big East Tournament be[illegible] played at Boston College. Th[illegible] will return Sunday hopefully h[illegible] ing avenged their fifth place fini[illegible] in the ECAC Division II Tourn[illegible] ment last month.

Senior Week Plan Goes Before Senate

By CAROL ALKONS

[illegible]ether there will be a Senior [illegible] this year will be decided at [illegible] next University Senate [illegible]ing, which takes place on Oc[illegible] 24.

[illegible]raduation ceremonies are [illegible]ently scheduled for Monday, [illegible] 11, and Tuesday, May 12, [illegible] but may be delayed until [illegible]day, May 16, and Sunday, [illegible] 17, to reserve Monday [illegible]gh Friday for Senior Week [illegible]s.

[illegible]ary Amoroso, student body [illegible]dent, said that "we must find [illegible]what the seniors want. We [illegible] to think that they would want [illegible]ole week to spend with their [illegible]ds, exchanging addresses and [illegible]yes." Amoroso added that [illegible]ight be easier on relatives [illegible]plan to attend the ceremonies [illegible]raduation took place on a weekend."

Amoroso said that seniors should make their opinion on this matter known. A survey will be taken to determine what the seniors want, and the results will be used at the Senate meeting.

Amoroso is "fairly confident" that the proposal will pass, and will expand on the details of Senior Week after the outcome of the meeting is announced.

The issue of Senior Week was raised last year. At that time P.J. Winterhalter, then student body president, entered a motion to have graduation ceremonies put back to May 16 and 17 from May 11 and 12 to allow sufficient time for Senior Week activities.

Winterhalter's motion was accompanied by a survey indicating 70 percent of the seniors favored the delay in graduation. The Senate proceeded to pass the motion by a 28-5 margin, with 2 abstentions. Final approval of the graduation rescheduling was granted by Father President Driscoll and the Board of Trustees.

The survey taken last year apparently played a vital role in the success of Winterhalter's Senior Week motion. Winterhalter stated that the success of the motion was "a direct result of the SGA (Student Government Association) survey."

Winterhalter revealed that the rationale behind his proposal was based largely on the consensus of the seniors that their graduation ceremonies be put back so that they would have the time to celebrate with friends and family.

Political Union Debates Carter Economic Record

By KATHY SCANLON

[illegible] Villanova Political Union [illegible] debate on the handling of [illegible]nited States economy by the [illegible] Administration this past [illegible]y night, October 13.

[illegible] guest speaker for the [illegible]g was David Preiksat, a [illegible]nt employee of the Bendix [illegible]ration with 29 years of ex[illegible]ce in manufacturing.

[illegible] resolution, "This house [illegible]res the Carter Ad[illegible]rations's handling of the [illegible]d States economy," was ac[illegible] 20-0 with one denial and [illegible]stentions.

[illegible]ksat explained that [illegible]cans are losing business because of the highly competitive foreign goods. "The year 1976 was the beginning of one of the worst recessions this country has had. Due to stiff foreign competition, the American domination of the economy is fading," he asserted.

"Carter says the recession is over. Big business disagrees. They are still looking for a direction (in economic spending) in which to go. Carter is not doing anything to rouse the economy and direct business away from foreign countries and back to the United States. He picks the popular issues that will get him re-elected," he continued.

When asked his feelings about Carter's bail-out of the Chrysler Corporation, Preiksat replied, "I think it is sick. Let business fail. I am aware that if the business was not bailed out, it would have been absorbed into foreign capital, but it is still a gross violation of business principles."

The Liberal Party, responding, said, "It is a well known fact that these deficits have been running up for 15 years, so we can't blame everything on Carter and his administration."

The Conservative Party asserted, "Germany and Japan import twice as much oil as our country, yet they don't have the inflation

Legal Center Offers Counseling

By LEN LA BARTH

[illegible] Villanova Legal In[illegible]ion Center, to deal prim[illegible]with landlord and tenant [illegible]s, has been re-established [illegible]ear by Dr. Sebastian Rainone, assistant professor of legal studies in the College of Commerce and Finance.

Amazed by how little Villanova students know concerning their legal rights, Rainone has spent the last four years advising students upon legal matters.

With the organization, certification and approval of the Legal Information Center, Rainone will now have a number of volunteer law students assisting him in counseling students.

"A law student approached me last year and volunteered his services in helping to advise students," explained Rainone, a 1972 Villanova Law School graduate and a Philadelphia lawyer. "He also interested a few other students who wanted to be involved and interact upon legal matters. However, the problem arose that anyone giving legal advice, other than a lawyer, can be held accountable for it and a law student can jeopardize qualification for the bar upon doing so."

To allow legal counsel by Villanova students without fear of charges of professional misconduct, Rainone presented a form of proposal to a local bar association's standing committee on Unauthorized Practice of Law and applied for a malpractice policy to cover all participants in the program. The proposal was unanimously approved, the malpractice protection policy obtained and the Legal Information Center was born.

Primarily, landlord and tenant problems will be handled by the University law students. "After a full year of activity we will reapply and hopefully expand our services," commented Rainone. "I see this as necessary for Villanova. It is more than just counseling — it is a storehouse of information. It is a logical extension of student services."

Training-wise, students who wish to provide free legal counseling must go through a thorough two-fold "orientation." "The first part consists of intense lectures, delivered by myself, concerning landlord and tenant law. Local judges, lawyers, building inspectors and zoning officers will come to Villanova University and lecture in their area of expertise," explained Dr. Rainone. "Then a practical workshop is held. The students are presented with test cases which they are to handle as if it were an actual case — counseling the student etc. Lawyers, including myself, are there to critique their handling of the case." Six students attended the first lecture, October 13.

By talking to students around the campus, Rainone believes that a good number of them feel "intimidated" by law.

When asked whether the idea of a legal information center staffed by law school graduates met with any serious opposition, Rainone replied, "There was the normal, healthy criticism. The objections I received were ones I had already expected. Answers were given and the program evaluated. I am grateful to the administration for its cooperation."

This past summer, the Legal Information Center, located in 206B Dougherty Hall, received legitimate University status, complete with an official budget, lending to the professionalism of the organization. Over 100 colleges have legal information centers, with many employing full-time lawyers.

According to Rainone, 70-80 percent of the cases taken to small claims courts involving students have been won. "The students are winning; at least two dozen evictions have been avoided because of students realizing they have rights, too."

Campus Responds To Tailgates

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Students, parents and alumni were asked their views concerning possible changes in tailgate party regulations during the October 11 pre-game tailgate parties.

These possibilities include moving all tailgates to behind the Fieldhouse, ending all parties by 1:00 p.m., and allowing only football ticket holders to participate in tailgate parties.

"Restructuring activities or tailgating before a football game lessens the student involvement and the atmosphere of it all," said junior Michael Schmitt, asked to consider these proposals. His mother, Mrs. Harry Schmitt, discussing the possibility of moving the parties to behind the Fieldhouse, said, "Is that getting too restrictive? Making too big a deal out of having a good time? I don't think I'd be for that." Mr. Harry Schmitt added, "I think Father Driscoll and the Augustinian fathers should come out and socialize and see what goes on at these tailgates."

"I hate the idea of moving the tailgates," stated junior Jack Dillon. "I don't like the idea of hiding it in a corner. I also don't like the barbed wire — it gives you the impression they're locking us up."

Junior Bob Falcon feels that moving the parties behind the football stadium would have disadvantages, saying, "It will ruin the practice field and there would be a lot of glass on the field." Falcon feels that allowing only football game ticket holders to tailgate, "is not a bad idea — but it would be tough to enforce it."

"No matter what football game I've ever been to, the tailgates are where the cars are parked. Part of the cost of doing business is cleaning up," said Paul McMann, a parent, discussing whether only ticket holders should be permitted to tailgate. McMann said, "You'd have an awful lot of regimentation. It sounds terribly expensive to hire people to check cars. I think you'd have an awful lot of trouble with alumni."

"Wouldn't the tailgates wreck the practice field?" asked sophomore Karen DeAngelis. "But I can see the point — the tailgates do leave a lot of glass and trash around," she added. DeAngelis does not agree that only ticketholders should be admitted to tailgates, explaining, "I don't think a stigma should be placed on people who just come to socialize. The people who can't get tickets — what are they going to do?" DeAngelis' father, Michael DeAngelis stated, "I think a good idea is to put more trash receptacles around the parking lot. People might use them if they are there." Asked if he feels tailgate parties should end by 1:00 p.m. DeAngelis commented, "I don't think that's needed. If people are enjoying themselves, I don't think a 1:00 curfew would help trash problems."

Bob Stevenson, another parent at the tailgate parties, noted, "Moving them is probably a cosmetic thing. I'd probably go along with that. I think tailgates are a fact of life. You just need someone to police it." Considering whether admitting only ticketholders to tailgates, Stevenson commented, I'm not aware of a problem of the magnitude of people coming and not going to the game. That might be a good idea though, if you have an awful lot of people coming to the game who have trouble finding parties."

"This is the only available spot kids can drink without getting harrassed by authorities," noted Stevenson. "Part of the reason to try to end parties at 1:00 may be so students won't have time to sow their wild oats."

Local Anchorman To Visit Campus

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Larry Kane, anchorman of Philadelphia's WCAU-TV 6:00 p.m. news program, will present a lecture entitled "Current Commentary" this Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Center of the Connelly Center.

Kane is to speak on politics and answer questions from the audience, said Chris Cherry, lectures chairperson of the Major Events Committee of the Villanova Union, which is sponsoring the event.

"He's speaking just before the election and he'll basically speak on the political situation," said Cherry.

The Union chose to sponsor Kane to discuss politics because "He's recognized by the public. He's one of the top newspeople in the area, and it is his job as a newsman to observe politics and interpret it to the public," said Cherry.

Kane spent eight years as anchorman for the 6:00 and 11:00 p.m. news program at WPVI-TV in Philadelphia before he was assigned to anchor the 11:00 p.m. "Eyewitness News" of WABC-TV in New York.

He returned to Philadelphia newscasting last year, however, to work for the CBS affiliate, WCAU.

Anchorman Larry Kane.

Kane's reporting work in Philadelphia over the years has included the story of Frank Rizzo's rise to political power in the late 1960's, the 1967 violence at the Philadelphia Board of Education Building, and the student unrest in the late 60's.

Recognized as a proponent of the rights of the handicapped and disabled, Kane is campaign chairman of the Delaware Valley Multiple Sclerosis Society. He received the first WHYY-TV Channel 12 "Man of the Year" award in 1973, and has been honored by such civic groups as B'nai B'rith, and the Sons of Italy for community concern.

Senate to Consider Equipment Purchase

By KIM RUSHTON

A proposal by Senator Lou sari that purchasing academic uipment be given sole priority in use of monies realized from er-enrollment for the academic r 1980-81 will highlight the t meeting of the University ate on Friday, October 24.

Senator Casari feels this need academic equipment is pecially acute in the fields of mmunications, nursing, and gineering. He pointed out the t that communications is now accredited major and should ve proper equipment to run a mprehensive program. He also ntioned that the new graduate ogram in nursing should have all proper equipment to run a ogram of the highest caliber.

"As this institution is growing re is an increased need for demic equipment. There is the need to update and upgrade the tools of knowledge. This should be an ongoing concern of the University," said Casari.

A proposal for a Senior Week for the class of 1981 will also be presented by Student Body President Henry Amoroso. It proposes the postponement of graduation for at least seven days after the end of exams. It also proposes that resident seniors be allowed to stay in their rooms during the week.

"We are currently involved in polling to see if the seniors really want a senior week. Possibly they don't. If this is the case, we won't follow through," said Amoroso.

Amoroso continued to say that if the seniors do want a senior week, they will follow up with a highly organized activities committee. He mentioned that support from seniors who favor the proposal can only help. He encouraged seniors to be vocal about their feelings on the subject.

The meeting will take place at 4:00 in Dougherty Hall.

rate we do." The Conservatives blamed the high inflation rate on excessive spending on the part of the Federal Government.

The Moderate Party said that "Carter is in favor of decontrolling oil prices. Oil prices should be controlled to prevent conglomerates from running businesses."

"Part of the blame must go to past administrations, the Congress, and the big businesses themselves. Along with power comes responsibility."

Figures Show Vandalism Growth

by BILL CLARK

University statistics indicate the amount of vandalism on pus has grown steadily over past year.

According to figures compiled the maintenance department, dalism expenses for September his year amounted to $10,130 thousand dollars of this esented painting in St. Mary's as a result of damage from year), as compared to 12.53 for September, 1979.

"I hope we hit the worst last ," said Thomas Trucks, direc of maintenance. "It seems like ple are becoming more aware the problem. The last few kends, the campus has looked er than it has in a long time."

rucks said that approximately 000 worth of damage last year not recovered from the nts responsible for it. "I the University has to make nts aware that they are the who will eventually pay for mage," said Trucks.

ording to Anthony Martin, acting dean of men, the average resident student paid $10 last year for vandalism done to public facilities.

"The University policy is to hold students personally responsible for the damage they have committed. If the cause of the vandalism is undetermined, the costs are assessed to all the students," said Martin.

"The issue here is not only dollars and cents," said Martin. "Students must also understand the responsibility they have to themselves and the community."

Martin emphasized that student involvement in vandalism prevention is most important. "Without the assistance of students, most individuals who vandalize will go undetected. If these people felt they had a good chance of being reported, it would go a long way toward solving the problem."

"Right now, it seems that the Villanova staff are the only ones who report acts of vandalism. Students who do these sorts of things can count on the silence of the other students," said Martin.

Martin defended the role of the Resident Assistants in the dormitories. "We have gotten some good R.A.'s who care very much about Villanova. But the R.A. is not there to patrol the dormitories. There are simply not enough of them to do the job."

The Villanova policy toward students caught committing vandalism has not changed. "If a person is reported, he could face suspension or expulsion. There's no sense watering that down. Sometimes sending a shock to a student is the best way to help him," said Martin.

Martin felt that the development of the Student Judicial Board would help the problem to some degree. If a student has a complaint against another student, it is heard by students and the issue is resolved.

"Until now, it has been difficult for students to report vandalism. With this board, students will know that their complaints will be counted," said Martin.

WKVU Overcomes Stumbling Blocks

Endeavors Meet Little Support

The University this year has spent much time trying to curb negative student behavior. Seminars are held to help curb alcohol abuse, measures are taken to help curb vandalism. It seems, in fact, that so much time is given to keeping the students quiet, well-behaved, and invisible, that when some students try to do something positive, they are given little support, and are often ignored.

Just one example of this was the campus radio station WKVU's 144-hour marathon for muscular dystrophy last week. Station General Manager Joe Jasek stayed awake and on the air for six full days and nights in order to raise a goal of $5000 for the cure of this disease. But the most important goal Jasek and the radio station achieved in the meantime was bringing students together, from the SGA, the Union, and the fraternities, for example, to work for a common and laudable cause. The radio station succeeded in this goal of binding many diverse groups together — but not without encountering stumbling blocks set every step of the way.

For example, when the radio station members tried to run a canned soda sale outside of the Connelly Center, they were told by the center director that they could not place cans of soda in front of the center because the cement pavement was not yet dry, and the soda cans would leave rust marks in the sidewalk. Then, when the station moved the operation out of the stream of student traffic, the director of the center refused to allow signs to be put up directing students to the new location. Signs would be distracting to the beauty of the facility, he said, and besides, if one organization was permitted to do so, he would have to let all the student organizations put up signs on what happens to be a studen center.

When the radio station attempted to run a record-breaking music chairs program, they were told no chairs were available for them, and the had to search for the necessary equipment outside of the University. Wh they met with no success, they went back to the University officials, w told the station members that chairs were available, but since the stati could not provide the proper security measures, holding the event would b inappropriate.

Luckily, the day before the event, enough students in the prope positions took it upon themselves to pressure the University for support this event. The musical chairs program finally went on — and was carrie on Philadelphia newscasts. And, in the last few weeks of publicity abo drinking and vandalism, this news coverage was some of the best publicit the University has had.

As for publicity, the radio station was on its own. Not even a pres release was sent out from the University's publicity office.

Under these conditions, it was indeed a great achievement for WKV to raise $2500, which was only half of its original goal.

In the framework of a University, students can only achieve positiv things with support of the administration. If the University would spen as much time recognizing worthwhile endeavors as it does reprimandin and repairing negative student behavior, perhaps students would spen more of their time on worthwhile projects than on those that caus destruction.

Accident Report

To Bill Clark and Bill Rock:

I am writing this in regards to your 10/10/80 article concerning the auto accident which claimed the life of Catherine Hooker.

It was in extremely poor taste. The style of the article was like a police rap sheet. Perhaps you do not realize that the accident was a very sensitive tragedy for those who were personally involved.

Efficiency in journalism is important, but there are times when this must be sacrificed. There was no need to include terms such as "charges," "complaints," or to go into the details of the coroner's report.

The Villanovan is not the Inquirer or the Bulletin. It is a community newspaper, and its writers should act responsibly toward their community.

Sincerely,
Bill Tucker '81

Collective Bargaining

Dear Ms. Lavelle:

In "The Villanovan" of October 10, an article under the byline of John Couzens makes several statements in quotation marks which are said to have been made by me. Unfortunately these quotations alter the meaning of my remarks to Mr. Couzens. Thus, I should like to correct any erroneous impressions which this article may have given.

First, there is no plan to submit a petition for a collective bargaining election to the NLRB as soon as possible. Such a submission would be premature, to say the least, under current interpretations of the National Labor Relations Act by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Second, there can be no assurance that a new petition will be filed with the NLRB even if the NLRA or its interpretation should change. The faculty and professional librarians at Villanova were moved to seek a collective bargaining election last February because of a number of problems at the University which the faculty and librarians have not been able to resolve. It is conceivable and to be hoped that these problems will one day soon be addressed and ameliorated. Then, collective bargaining might no longer be deemed urgent or necessary.

Third, it is incorrect to say that there is nothing we can do in our efforts to unionize until the NLRA or the judicial interpretation of that act changes. Indeed, there is much that can be done both to prepare for a possible future unionization campaign, if required, and also to try to remove the grievances which make unionization seem necessary to many faculty and librari For example, the Villanova AAUP Cha voted last Monday to set up a committe consider possible actions which might taken to achieve the goals implicit in move to unionization. There are a num of such actions worth nonsidering inclu joint actions with other faculty or n faculty bodies.

I for one do not consider the goals of faculty and librarians unattainable. Be ally they are the goals of making Villan a better university with a student b staff, administration, governing board faculty working together to achieve great potential which Villanova has wi itself. I think all segments of the Villan community are striving for the same th in their differing ways. With confidence trust in each other, we can all move for together.

Very truly yo

This reply is prompted by the "Who nows, Who Cares" section of the Villa-ovan which appeared on October 10. It ad, "There is no such thing as a smart otball player." During the past week, we ve realized that it is the sentiment of any students and faculty members alike at it is in direct conflict with 1) a publica-on which claims to be in the interest of the illanova community, and 2) a newspaper hich supposedly upholds the ethics of ality journalism, to present and generate totally unjust and vicious statement about group of Villanova students who happen play football.

The position which the Villanovan staff s taken in embellishing the false image of he dumb football player" indicates its deness and ignorance. In fact, to illus-ate this paper's lack of knowledge about subject matter involved refer to the fol-wing incident. Upon entering the office of author of the statement in question, the rty who had been referred to in the arti-was told, "I don't even know you. I've ver met you before." Obviously, the tement in the Villanovan was unjusti-d, and needless to say, in very bad taste. he implication is clear: the Villanovan es every Villanova football player a ompt apology.

It is our opinion that different people ssess varying degrees of intelligence. Thus far, psychologists have not been able to conclusively declare that one group of people is inherently superior to another. It is our overwhelming belief that it is not within the ability of the Villanovan staff to do so either. Each individual deserves to be judged on his or her own merit and not to be cast blindly into a stereotypical image which bears no personal significance. This realization is necessary before civilized communication can take place. We seriously hope that the Villanovan staff will consider this issue in the interest of better communication.

Editor's Note: It was not the intention of "Who Knows, Who Cares" to malign the football team or any particular member of it. Rather, we were attempting to point out the irony inherent in the situation on campus which allows an athlete to be named Athlete of the Week under the auspices of a beer company but will not allow the same athlete to have a case of beer in his or her room, as well as the fact that the administration considers all the students foolish for expecting changes in the present alcohol policy.

However, we would like to respond to some of the statements made in the letter above —

1) The Villanovan is not written in the interest of the Villanova community, it is written to present the facts of the events that occur on campus. Promoting the interests of the University is the business of the Public Relations office.

2) "Who Knows, Who Cares" is not an article, a word which implies the use of the facts. It is a satiric column, the contents of which is pure fabrication intended for comic effect. Following on the heels of such tongue-in-cheek comments as "Security is now using broken glass strategically placed under tires to open up spaces in the parking lot" and "Everyone is storing their dirty underwear in the Mendel planetarium" one could hardly expect to believe that a Bud athlete was indeed waiting for a case of Bud or that "There is no such thing as a smart football player."

3) It is true that the author of "Who Knows, Who Cares" never met the party who had been referred to in the column and this fact only supports the assertion that no offense was intended and that the statement would have contained the name of whoever the Bud Athlete of the Week happened to be as well as the sport that he/she engaged in.

Finally, we would suggest to any or all members of the football team who are offended by this remark, but have in the past laughed at a comment in "Who Knows, Who Cares" which was written at the expense of another that perhaps they should develop a more well-rounded sense of humor.

VAP

A.A.U.P.

Dear Editor:

The account of the recent A.A.U.P. chapter meeting in the October 10 issue may leave your readers with a misleading impression of what actually happened there. The headline "AAUP to Renew Petition for Vote" implies that a renewed collective bargaining campaign is imminent. But it was clear from discussion, some of which is reported in the article, that a lengthy process of awaiting legal clarification would be necessary before the petition could be renewed.

The chapter did decide to do something more than merely await legal precedent, however. It will direct its efforts toward those problems which precipitated the move for collective bargaining, try to sound out faculty opinion on the necessary steps to be taken, and seek alternative methods of resolving these problems.

Sincerely yours,
James M. Bergquist

WKVU Marathon

Dear Editor:

At this time I would like to thank all of the organizations that helped to make the WKVU radio marathon a success. Although we failed to hit our original goal of $5000, the marathon did much more than raise money for Muscular Dystrophy; it united the student body and the student organizations of this university in a way which I have never seen before. I would like to thank all the organizations that either contributed to our cause or supplied manpower. Thanks to all the merchants up and down the Main Line who donated money and prizes. And most of all, I would like to thank the members of WKVU whose contributions toward this cause were second to none.

Sincerely,
CHRIS CHERRY
Program Director

The Electoral College: Safety Valve of Presidential Politics

By JEROME J. NIOSI, Ph.D.

Every time Americans prepare to elect a President, pundits delight in plaining that we really do not elect the President: the Electoral College oes.

They point out how a few votes in this or that state would throw the ection to other candidates, or precipitate a "constitutional crisis by rowing the election into the House of Representatives," or otherwise rustrate the will of the American people."

Such comments, usually accompanied by demands that the college be olished, make the editorial pages of newspapers or magazines from Oc-ber to December when the College of Electors meet in their state pitals for the formal election of the President and there will probably be ditional comments when the Senate formally announces the name of the xt President in January.

The Electoral College has been called many names and its doom has en prophesied as imminent. Most recently, congressional critics called an "antiquated form of choosing our nation's leaders." Yet, for 200 ars, except for its detractors and its consideration by high school de-ting societies, the Electoral College has withstood criticism and at-mpts to amend it out of existence.

Relying on the elections of 1800, 1824, and 1876, the critics conclude at the college failed to register the will of the people and instead ecipitated a crisis.

Yet, the Founding Fathers provided constitutionally for such eventu-ities and accordingly, in 1800, the House broke the tie, picking Jefferson er Burr. Jefferson was the choice of the majority of the Americans. In 24, the House selected John Quincy Adams over the other "favorite ns." Here, too, despite pro-Jackson allegations of a "corrupt bargain," nericans did expect Adams to be the President.

The Hayes-Tilden controversy was further complicated by two sets of ctoral votes. With no constitutional remedy, Congress went outside the ndamental law and appointed an Electoral Commission to determine ich set of electors should be considered official. Hayes became sident accompanied by such derisive titles as "His Fraudulency."

As the United States sought to terminate the "reconstruction period," uds were perpetrated by both the Republicans and Democrats. The ction of 1976 was no different than much of the agony of that "tragic ." Nevertheless, historians have concluded that Hayes was the choice the American people and was entitled to the office.

What occurred in those three elections was mechanical and because mendments to the constitution, can never recur. Presidential and vice-idential candidates are placed on the same ballots while governors must certify the correct electoral ballots to the Senate of the United States.

Actually, there exists one case where the will of the American people indeed was frustrated by the Electoral College: the election of 1888. Cleveland received the greater popular vote, yet Harrison became the President. Four years later, however, Cleveland regained the presidency.

One "frustration" in two hundred years. This is quite remarkable especially since the Founding Fathers had expected that the House of Representatives would elect the President "19 times in 20." But, then, they did not contemplate the development of the American party system. For all practical purposes the Electoral College has been confirming the will of the electorate for almost two centuries.

Beyond the confirmation of the people's choice, the Electoral College today acts as the "safety valve" of American politics, protecting the democratic process by insuring the continuance of the two party system. The valve is the "unit rule:" the candidate who wins in a state takes all the electoral votes. While originally designed to reduce fraud and the manipulation of regional elections, the unit rule makes it impossible for factional parties to gain the presidency.

Fringe parties, radical groups, single issue movements can go through the motions of nomination and campaigning. They add to the education of the electorate. They give pundits a field day for speculation, but they cannot have a major impact on the result. Only the candidate of one of the two major parties will reach the presidency.

Eliminate the Electoral College or modify the "unit rule" for philosophic "democratic reasons," and the alternatives are horrendous: multiple parties, bloc governments and regional groupings. Because every shade of opinion will seek to run its own spokesman, the splinter parties will make inevitable minority presidents election by coalition.

Alexander Hamilton built better than he had anticipated when he successfully proposed to filter the popular vote of the people through the Electoral College. The Founding Fathers agreed.

"With no other feature of the Constitution did they express greater satisfaction than the Electoral College . . . "wrote Hamilton. "The mode of appointment of the Chief Magistrate of the United States" he continued, "is almost the only part of the system, of any consequence, which has escaped without severe censure . . ."

Rather than tinkering with the Constitution because of what might happen, we should be appreciative of our experiences since 1787. The Electoral College has performed exceedingly well. It will continue to stabilize American politics long after its critics, themselves have become "antiquated."

In light of the fact that the Royals-Phillies World Series begins this week, The Villanovan's "On Campus" crew asked students which team they thought would win and why. Following are several of the representatives.

Jeanne Focht
Junior Nurse

Even though I'm not a patronizer of professional sports, I've been a resident of the Philadelphia area for 20 years, and I just hope Philadelphia wins.

Margaret Martin
Freshman A&S

The Phillies. I hope the Phill win. Because I'm from N.Y., I w ted the Yankees to win. But, th were beaten by Kansas City, s want the Phillies to win.

Jeff Tevanian
Junior Political Science

Kansas City. I just think they have the better team. I don't want to have to listen to all my friends bothering me about the Yankees' loss.

Al Donation
Senior Finance

Kansas City. Because I'm an American League fan, and the Phillies pulled out enough miracles against the Astros, and their luck is going to run out against George Brett and the Royals.

Susan Radwanski
Senior Nurse

The Phillies. If you go to school in Philly, you've got to be a Philly fan.

Nora Merlini
Senior Nurse

The Phillies. They have a lot psyche. Pete Rose's and Tug M Graw's spirit is enough for whole team.

Greg Kuehhas
General Accounting

Kansas City is going to win, because the Phillies had a hard enough time with the Astros, which is a weak-hitting team, and now they have to play Kansas City, which is the best-hitting team in baseball.

Dan Lapele
Sophomore Accounting

Definitely the Phils, because of Mike Schmidt, Steve Carlton, Tug McGraw, and Pete Rose. With allstars like them, they can't be beaten.

Kathy McNamara

The Phillies in 5. After 30 years of choking, they can't blow it now.

Elise Valade
Sophomore Modern Languages

The Phillies. My favorite tea the Yankees, but, since they l I'll go for the Phillies.

Amoroso Discusses Goals and Changes

Henry Amoroso, Student Government President.

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

"We are no longer the Student vernment Association. We are going to be called the Student vernment Office," stated Stut Government President Henry oroso, discussing the major nges his office will undergo year.

"As a student government of-, we're working towards senate ilation on graduation week. 're working on a student bill of hts which has been unsuccessin meeting acceptance in the five to six years. We're work- on a long range 'green acres' posal which will include beauing the campus, making more cient use of space, putting a and shrubbery in, and makthe parking lot a little more aling to the eye," explained oroso.

"We'll also be instituting a vance form for students to complaints against any area demics and student life. My responsibility is to establish a system of communication between students, administration, faculty and myself. We want to end all rumors and make facts clear to people. Students have a lot of complaints — many of them justifiable." noted Amoroso.

One of Amoroso's key goals is to keep tuition at Villanova as low as possible. "We have requested that tuition be increased by five percent, and room and board by only six percent, but I can't see that happening in the near future," commented Amoroso.

"We don't want to be unrealistic, but rapid increases in tuition hurt our position in the market. We know that faculty and staff also deserve a fair increase and we don't want our tuition so low that it puts them in a bad position. So, we are looking for a happy medium."

Further discussing costs of operation, Amoroso asserted, "We can't stress enough that Villanova must be more efficient. And, we would like to see the development office continue to raise money and to increase that effort when possible."

Asked what complaints he has concerning campus policies, Amoroso explained, "I have a lot of gripes about alcohol policies and how they are enforced, and I have gripes about resident halls," "But," added Amoroso, "The only way we can do anything about these gripes is to communicate intelligently with administrators. That's where vandalism kills us. Any irresponsible act by any student hurts all the students because many people tend to generalize us."

"I want administration, faculty, and community to realize Villanova students are very good and do a hell of a lot of things. They should make the effort to commend them and encourage them. Maybe then we can work together. It just doesn't seem like anybody works together." lamented Amoroso.

Logue Aids in Debate

In Geneva last summer, the ited Nations Law of the Sea nference came close to agreent on a treaty that would order many old and new uses of the eans. The draft treaty now be- the Conference would regu- fishing and mining rights, ablish pollution controls, and arantee freedom of transit. ny observers believe that the rent treaty draft, or something y like it, will be approved at the nference's New York session t March and April.

Villanova political science fessor has been a close student the Law of the Sea Conference something of an activist in it. John Logue, Director of the versity's Common Heritage Inute, has attended each session the seven year old Conference, ther in Geneva or in Caracas New York. As a nongovernal observer he has served as viser to the Group for the mon Heritage Fund, a group egates who have been trying the Conference to take a and more imaginative apch to the ocean problem than present treaty draft does.

Villanova professor also ed author an imaginative posal which is now before the nation Conference. It is called Common Heritage Fund Proal and it has the strong backing the Group for the Common itage Fund. The proposal calls the creation of a fund, based ly on offshore oil and gas nues, which might reach five on dollars a year. The fund's nues would be used to help World development, to ect the marine environment for other international pur-. Logue hopes that the Com- Heritage Fund Proposal will corporated in the draft treaty the coming New York on of the Conference. He feels that it would help reconcile the developed and developing nations, and would have a very beneficial effect on the world political situation as a whole.

During last summer's session Logue organized a weekend seminar for Law of the Sea delegates from fourteen countries. The seminar was held at a conference center in the village of Cartigny, 12 kilometers from Geneva. A few days later he flew to Amsterdam to speak at a five day student conference on the Law of the Sea. That too was co-sponsored by Villanova's Common Heritage Institute. In his lecture Logue suggested that the Law of the Sea Conference could learn something from the tall ships which were then visiting Amsterdam, and from the tall ships which had captured the hearts and imagination of the world when they visited New York City during the American Bicentennial.

The oceans are not the only concern of the Common Heritage Institute. The purpose of the Institute is "to focus public and scholarly attention on the need for a more just, peaceful and humane world order and to make and evaluate policy proposals which will help bring that kind of world order into being."

Nursing Career Day Scheduled

By LAURIE ALMEDA

Career alternatives and employment opportunities in the field of nursing will be available for exploration by interested students and faculty at the eighth annual Nursing Career Day, to be held Friday, October 31, in the Connelly Center.

This year, the planning committee hopes to reach more students by breaking the program into a morning and an afternoon session, instead of having the program take place on consecutive Fridays as it has in the past.

The morning session begins at 9:45 a.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Six nursing professionals will speak regarding what their careers as nurses involve in order to provide a representation of career opportunities in the nursing field.

The guest speakers are: Maryellen Ahern, V.U. nursing faculty member and a child psychiatric nurse clinician; Rosalynn Alfaro, a nurse working for the J.B. Lippincott Publishing Co.; Michele Cavanaugh, Hospice Care Coordinator for the Terminally ill; B. Karen Coyne, a family nurse practitioner; Joyce Piroli, staff nurse and a 1980 V.U. graduate; and Mary Ellen Quinn, U.S. Navy nurse.

After the presentations, the speakers will meet informally with students and faculty in order to answer individual questions and to provide additional information regarding a specific field of nursing.

The afternoon session, which begins at 1 p.m. in the Villanova Center, will deal with a wider representation of employment possibilities in nursing. Representatives from more than 90 health care agencies, including Philadelphia, New Jersey, New York, California, Texas, Chicago, Florida, and Massachusetts will be available for questioning.

The program is being sponsored by the Academic Committee, the Undergraduate Nursing Senate of the College of Nursing, and the Career Development Center. Dr. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, will be introducing the guest speakers for Nursing Career Day.

"I think the day will be invaluable for seniors who are beginning their employment search as well as undergraduate nursing students who are presently exploring career opportunities and summer internships," stated Donna M. Zimmaro, student chairperson for Nursing Career Day and UNS Academic Committee chairperson.

The College of Nursing is sponsoring "Dress Up Military" on Thursday, October 30, from 7-10 p.m. in St. Mary's auditorium. "Dress Up Military" is a recruiting program of the armed services. Information will be presented on the advantages and benefits of being a member of the armed service. Representatives are: Captain Dianne Bechtold, U.S. Army; Captain Ginny Bossley, U.S. Air Force; and Lt. Mary Ellen Quinn, U.S. Navy.

Along with the recruiters' speeches, an audio visual presentation will be given. The Army ROTC is expected to present its program which offers financial benefits to students.

FACULTY FORUM

Professor Examines Upcoming Election

By MICHAEL BURKE
History Department

The presidential campaign of 1980 seems a bore. The candidates are uninspiring, the campaign rhetoric is negative, and the issues seem petty. Even supporters of the major candidates appear inclined to apologize for their man.

Carter supporters acknowledge everything his critics say, shrug their shoulders and say, "But he is a decent man — and besides, who else is there?" Reagan supporters have convinced themselves that their candidate will not really do all those radical things he has promised, as if hypocrisy is somehow superior to extremism. And the Anderson set speaks of the courage of a man who seeks votes by promising what the voters don't want. Some campaign!

Nevertheless, this election does matter. In fact, there is as great a difference between the two major candidates on precisely those issues on which a president acting alone can make a difference as in any election since World War II.

Mr. Carter and Mr. Reagan have contrary priorities in their vision on the role of government in American society and the role of America in the world. Each would sacrifice something from the priorities of the other in order to achieve his own primary objectives.

Government Regulation. Based on the principal that the government must protect the public good against private gain, a huge bureaucracy enforces thousands of rules designed to protect individual health and safety, the environment, and fairness in the marketplace. These regulations can often impinge upon efficiency and profit.

Both a clean environment and greater productivity are desirable. But the candidates disagree on which is most important: Mr. Reagan would suppress the regulators, while Mr. Carter would tolerate some sacrifice of profits. Since the President appoints the regulators and approves their budgets, he will be able to implement his priorities.

America Abroad. Iran and Nicaragua exemplify a dilemma we shall undoubtedly face again in the next four years: a popular revolution confronts a dictator with long ties with the United States. Neither side in the dispute may be attractive: the dictator may be a tyrant, hated by all but his wealthy clients, and the revolutionaries may be anti-American, perhaps supported by Communist arms or advisors. History suggests that whatever action a President takes would be supported, at least at first, by

Team plans include training

By SUE FRENCH

"Our immediate goal is to do well in the McMillin Cup Championship," remarked Rob Sonz, captain of the 30 member Villanova Sailing Team. The race, dubbed a "regatta" in sea lingo, begins today and continues through Sunday at Annapolis, Maryland. Teams will compete in Luders 44's, a yawl type sailboat that is forty-four feet long. "We've done well in the event the past four years," commented Sonz, "but we haven't done any practicing in yawls this year, only in Lasers."

Lasers are smaller single man sailboats, of which the club owns three, all acquired since its recent revitalization. "Villanova had a sailing team back in the 50's and 60's," remembers Sonz, "then they didn't have one until five years ago." Presently, the club is budgeted one new Laser a year, which, says Sonz, will account for $500-$1500 of the club's $1600 budget.

Owning only three boats creates no great problem, since, as Sonz explained, regattas are organized on a round-robin basis. "You're assigned a boat, but since every boat is different, you change boats every race." The course, says Sonz, "is usually two or three markers to sail around. If it's three, two are reaching, (at an angle to the wind) and one downwind; if it's two, then there's one each upwind and downwind." "Starts," he continued, "are three minute or dinghy starts." In a three minute start, competitors sail in circles behind the starting line, jockey the boat as close as possible to the starting line, without going over before the race begins. "Scoring is 1-2-3-4-5, where first is awarded one point, second two points, and so on," Sonz concluded.

Sonz serves as both captain and coach to the windjammers, and is assisted by Executive Committee members John Conte, Pete Furcht, Art Galloway, Rich Hogan and Henry Roher. When recruiting members, Sonz looks for people who have racing experience in sailboats. A few people with little or no experience have joined in the past, says Sonz "We use them for crew members." He added that those who would like to learn to sail should join the sailing club which becomes active in the spring.

Future plans for the team is

Boycott to Curb Disease

By MARGIE URBAN

Nestle, one of the world's largest food conglomerates, has become the target of a national boycott. The sponsors of the boycott are calling upon Nestle to halt the aggressive promotional techniques used to market its infant formula products in Third World countries.

The Infant Formula Action Coalition (INFACT), a group of nutritionists, physicians and clergy, along with many other church and health organizations, are claiming that Nestle is contributing to a serious health epidemic by encouraging women to use a powered infant formula rather than their own mother's milk.

Poor living conditions in the Third World nations make s use of the infant formula virtua impossible. The lack of pu water, sterilization and refrige tion result in what UNICE health officials have termed "B tle Baby Disease." This is a sy drome consisting of a variety of testinal diseases, malnutriti and brain damage which can le to death. INFACT estimates th over 10,000 infant deaths can directly attributed to Bottle Ba Disease.

Congress and the public.

Traditionally, the United States has tended to intervene in such cases by supporting anti-Communist dictatorships and occasionally overthrowing revolutionary regimes. Since 1974, however, the United States has played a more passive role, allowing events to take their course without our manipulation. This shift from traditional behavior has become a major issue in 1980.

Mr. Reagan's priority is clearly to prevent any anti-American faction from coming to power and to support all "friendly" governments. In this respect he has criticized Carter for "selling out" the Shah and Somoza. How far he would go to support a dictator in danger from the left, even if the threat is internal, remains unclear.

Mr. Carter's priority is more complex: to avoid excessive entanglement with dictators who are on the defensive against their o people. Thus, the United Sta eventually chose not to stand the way of revolution, but to events take their course. Such policy entails risks — the risk an anti-American regime. Yet, the final analysis, it is strategic/moral issue: How far we impose our own will on oth peoples? What some define weakness is nothing more th self-determination to others.

Thus, the upcoming election fers a real choice, a choi perhaps more substantive than t candidates who espouse the Shall government continue safeguard its citizens at some e pense of efficiency, or shall rely on the marketplace to prote us? Does major power stat require us to play a dominant ro in every dispute, or are the moral as well as practical limits power? The choice is there befo us.

Nestle also provides the hospitals with free samples so that mothers will immediately start the infants on the formula and within a week, the mother's own milk will dry up. Also, since the original samples are free, the parents are unaware of the high cost of the formula (about 60% of the average family income). Often the mother is forced to dilute the formula, and as a result the infant becomes malnourished.

A third method of marketing is the use of milk nurses or mothercraft advisors. A company sales person, often a nurse, will visit new mothers in order to endorse the infant formula. Once again, the parents are given the impression that the medical profession is endorsing the product.

In 1974, the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF drafted a set of guidelines to regulate the marketing of infant formula products. The guidelines call for a complete halt to the sales promotion of infant formula to the public, to the distribution of free samples and to the use of uniformed milk nurses.

WHO-UNICEF also stated that "breast feeding has proved to be the most appropriate and successful nutritional solution for the harmonious development of the child." Nestle has not responded greatly to the guidelines and continues to market its infant formula

The boycott was initiated in 1977 because of Nestle's lack of response to WHO. The products which are being boycotted include: Nestle's Crunch, Nestle's Quik, Nescafe, Nestea, Taster's Choice, Souptime and also Stouffer Hotel and Restaurant chain and the Rusty Scupper Restaurant chain.

clude a regular practice schedule, greater conditioning for members, and better training sessions for those who want to learn to sail. "We'd like to double the amount of boats too," added Sonz.

Besides the three Lasers, the club also owns a motorboat, which is kept with the sailboats at docks shared with Penn at Penn's Landing on the Delaware River. "This is the first year we've had the boats on the water, but we've only practiced twice so far," Sonz commented.

Presently, the team is halfway through the fall season, which runs from September until the end of November. The spring season begins in March and runs until the end of Spring semester. That schedule will be made in January at the Middle Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (M.A.I.S.A.) meeting.

So far this fall, the team ranked third out of eight teams at the Navy Yawl Invitation, an overall fifth out of ten teams at the West Point Great Chain Race, and sixth out of six teams at the Packer Trophy Championship. Lastly, in M.A.I.S.A. District competition, Wildcat sailors placed fifth in the Sloop Eliminations, third in the Area Eliminations, and first in the Mono Eliminations held last week at Princton.

Sonz says Villanova is favored to do well again in the McMillin Cup Championships, in what looks to be their first shot at a team title this season.

"Days of Heaven"

Starring Richard Gere

Set in the Texas Panhandle wheatfields on the eve of World War I, DAYS OF HEAVEN tells the story of one women torn between two men. The beauty, humor, and tragedy of normal lives provides the archetypal material for the narration by a street-wise twelve-year-old.

Vasey Opens With Prize Winner

A scene from William Inge's Pulitzer Prize-winning drama.

By IRENE SMITH

Villanova's theatre department has recently added a new diamond to its already impressive collection of jeweled performances. Picnic, the Pulitzer Prize-winning drama by the American playwright William Inge, is the initial production of the Villanova theatre season. A sensitive, emotional play its message "speaks to us today in a way that has been vastly changed by the passage of time" according to director James Harbour. The realistic psychological studies of ordinary people in a small midwestern town are brought to the audience's attention by the performance of a finely honed cast whose characters brilliantly complement one another. The actors communicate effectively what the playwright William Inge stressed in his plays. They showed that deep feelings of hope, fear or desire can lie below the surface of quiet lives and block individual fulfillment until such feelings are released and brought to the surface.

James Harbour, director, is the assistant professor of theater at Temple University. Harbour regards Picnic as a "memory play" one that can show us "how we grew into what we've become." The play, written in 1953 and set in a sleepy Kansas town in late summer, traces the events following the arrival in the town of a handsome young drifter, Hal, played convincingly by Tom Bradley. It shows how the repressed romantic dreams of several women are brought to a crisis because of this wanderer.

The idea of where we came from, the influence other people have on our lives and the struggle to determine one's own destiny is dramatized with Madge Owens played by Mimi McGrath. Her coming of age, doing what she feels is essential for her own happiness rather then her mother's wishes is based on Madge's need for an identity beyond her beauty. Her decision to take control and responsibility of her own life conflicts with her mother's dreams for her. The seeds of the women's movement are sown throughout the play. The breaking of tradition, two sisters forced to play roles determined by those around them and the eventual acknowledgement that Madge's life is her own and that her mother's mistakes cannot be prevented from re-happening again in her daughter's. Maureen Fagan gave a commanding performance in the role of the mother, a women embittered by her past, yet still loving and desiring the best for her daughters and aware of each one's limitations. Other noted performances included that of Rosemary Sydney, the spinster school teacher played by Janus Stefanowicz and Helen Potts the old maid who is constantly taking in male vagabonds.

The play will run from Wednesday, October 15 through Saturday,

What a Name?

By BOB BALLARD

If you and your friends got together and formed a band, what might you name your group? Well, how about the Flamin' Groovies? A group's name in New Wave music is often more entertaining than the group itself. Such is the case with the Flamin' Groovies. And the Dickies. And the Silicon Teens.

The mindless simplicity of New Wave group names is a throwback to the early sixties. Groups like the Ronettes, Gerry and the Pacemakers, the Supremes and Gary Lewis and the Playboys dominated the charts in those days.

The seventies arrived accompanied by the notion that it

Punk was born in the mid-seventies, and musicians all over Britain and the U.S. attempted to capitalize on it. Thousands of bands have sprung up in the past few years, many of which play legitimate rock and roll, but many more which have nothing to offer except skinny ties and a funny name.

Like the Silicon Teens. Imagine what it's like to be a member of the Silicon Teens. It's probably a lot like being a member of the Debutantes. And what about the Dickies? Are they in any way, shape or form similar to the Buzzcocks? Or the Sex Pistols?

For extreme punks who are heavily into alliteration, we

Bruce's Fans Line Up

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

The night is dark, but the sidewalk's bright
And lined with the light of the living . . . .

Bruce Springsteen

When Jack Koerwer, a junior engineering major, caught a ride to the St. David's Sears store early last Friday afternoon, he didn't know what it meant to be first in line.

He had never camped outdoors all night; he had never even stood in line for a popular concert like this before. He had never seen Bruce Springsteen before, but then neither had many of the others who would soon line up in front of the store to wait for tickets to go on sale.

The New Jersey-born rock artist's popularity had so increased since he last appeared at the Spectrum in August 1978, that an unusual three show engagement (Dec. 6, 8, and 9) had to be arranged just to satisfy his Philadelphia fans.

Springsteen in concert.

Ticketron office the day before tickets were to go on sale, and found that the staff there was already anticipating a crowd.

"The guy who handles the tickets said that if there was any drinking, noise, or trouble, they would just close down and not sell any tickets," said Koerwer.

The Sears' office manager recalled last Spring's ticket sale for the Who concerts at the Spectrum, when hundreds of people camped out in front of the store. "Cops were carrying people away that time, and they didn't want that to happen again," said Koerwer.

"So I figured the best thing to do was not to let anybody have to stand outside at all."

Koerwer bought a yellow notepad at Sears' stationery shop, and at 1:00 p.m. stood outside the door, and began to take names of fans who wanted to be at the front of the ticket line. After their names were recorded, Koerwer just asked the people to check back at 6:00 a.m. Saturday, and when the doors of the ticket office opened at 9:30 a.m., they could get tickets in the order of the list.

"Everyone agreed to it — it was a great deal for everyone because no one had to wait outside all night," said Koerwer.

"People kept asking me if I was a Sears' employee, and I said 'yeah, yeah.' I knew exactly what I was going to say to everyone, and they listened."

All Friday night, only a handful of people waited outside the Sears' doors. "Of course, people would drive up in the middle of the night and see only five people there and thought they'd get a place in line, but when they got out of the car, there were already 250 people on the list."

Koerwer said about 90 percent of the people there were Villanova students. "The first 25 people in line were the Villanova hockey team," he said.

Any one who got on the list before about 1:00 a.m. Saturday would have been in time to get tickets, said Koerwar.

But by 6:00 a.m., there were 600 people on the list. "After a while, I stopped taking names because I knew they wouldn't get in," he said.

In fact, only about 150 people waiting at Sears were able to get tickets for the show, since the 15,000 seats of the Spectrum for each of the three nights were sold out four hours after the Ticketrons opened.

At 9:30 a.m., after helping to call the names of the first 50 people on his list, Koerwer handed the list to a real Sears employee and ran down the stairs to get the first tickets. He then exited by the employee's doorway, "since I figured everyone knew I was first in line and would have the best tickets."

Then, after 20 hours of standing in the cold surrounded by 600 Springsteen fans, Koerwer realized he had no ride home, and had to walk all the way back to his dorm at Villanova. But at least he had the tickets in his hand. Floor seats, row two.

Dance The Night Away

By SHARON WINTERS

"The sound is taking over/I want to move my feet," encapsulates the feeling derived from the latest album by 3-D, See It Loud. The band etched these more than appropriate lyrics on track one, side one.

There's a Sound sets the energy level for the whole of side one. Good rock-n-roll continues with Long Distance and Cold Through the Medium.

The keyboards on Thrill Seeker lend a low-key, distorted calliope sound to the song. The notes aren't consistently high-pitched but alternate staccato with held notes that travel up and down the scale giving a subtle, circus overtone to the song. Lyrics like, "Playing with a live wire/Acting so electric/You're just looking for a thrill," compliment the arrangement well. The overall feel of an attention craving clown is communicated to the listener easily.

Flashback Baby is the only disappointment on side one. It begins with the sound of a rocket taking off although the song plateaus-out, never really delivering a soaring epic. The song is decent rock that just doesn't measure up to the rest of the energy on the side.

Side two is the more soulful part of the album. The first two songs are slow, nice love songs. They are pretty, albeit nothing special. The band goes back to rock with Easier Said than Done and finishes the side with Something in My Eye.

There is nothing profound or novel on the record, however, 3-D exhibits some amazing eclectic talents. Amazing because they do riffs and sing lyrics that have been done many times before, somehow they manage to entwine the components floating around the rock scene for years and deliver a sum that is greater than the miscellaneous parts.

The lyrics are plain. Songs like Something in My Eye have the predictable sort of words concerning a man with tears in his eyes who claims that he really isn't crying. The band has the

Twotone Punks Invade Airwave

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

The Specials' second album on Twotone Records, their own label, erupts with contradiction. More Specials is more enriched by dark humor than their first release, and this appears to be the band's main thrust even though the variety of styles (spicy horns, reggae, 50's rock) makes it difficult to determine any single direction.

The Specials are Jerry Dammers' band. He is credited with writing, either alone or in collaboration with other Specials, over half the titles on their first two albums. His clear, jaunty keyboard playing continually permeates the sound with good-natured ambience, and especially swirls with excitement in Sock It To 'Em JB, I Can't Stand It, and International Jet Set.

Bassist Sir Horace Gentleman [illegible] another special Special. Reggae often requires the bass to play melody while the rhythm guitar keeps time, and Horace responds to this spotlight with the powr of a true virtuoso. The Specials are primarily a dance band, and Horace on bass most often makes it shake.

The contradictions arise when one notices that this musical equivalent of happy feet backs lyrics that are almost unrelentingly bleak. Do Nothing hides a tremendously bouncy chorus kicked along by SHG. But, by adapting such an upbeat melody to the lyric, "I'm just living in a world without . . . meaning," the Specials paint their generation as dancing, not happily under the stars, but into the teeth of a void, and this makes all the difference in the world. Pearl's Cafe is an even more extreme example. On tope of Christmastime muzak played on an xylophone, Rhoda Dakar of the Bodysnatchers, along with Neville Staples, back Terry's lead vocals with a chorus of, "It's all a load of bullocks/ and bullocks to it all."

But the flashes of brilliance sure get to the feet. Rhoda sings again in a song that cops its riff from Zeppelin's The Rover, and is titled (appropriately enough) I Can't Stand It. Sock It To 'Em JB recites the litany of titles from James Bond films on top of the West Indian rhythm the Specials explore on their BBC hit Gangsters. International Jet Set showcases Dammers' keyboard wizardry, and contrasts its energy with lounge-lizard backing moans straight from Bowie's The Man Who Sold The World.

Both Bowie's Scary Monsters and the Specials More Specials close with muted versions of their energetic openings: Bowie with It's No Game and the Specials with Enjoy Yourself. This could be for the same reason. Bowie promised at the end of Ledger's Fantastic Voyage that, "I'll never say anything nice again, how can I?" and hasn't looked back. The Specials view society from this same craggy hilltop.

Chrysalis Records has just begun to distribute More Specials in the U.S., and its media blitz accompanying the album's release is best described as low-key. Maybe this lack of appreciation is the reason the Specials are such angry young men. This reviewer shares this frustration. To quote from the band's first album: "Just because you're nobody/ It doesn't mean that your're no good."

"In Time" You Fall Asleep

By AMY MacLACHLAN

Somewhere In Time, starring Christopher Reeves and Jane Seymour, exemplifies the definition of a mediocre movie. Both of the actors are undeniably very attractive, but unfortunately also very boring. Actually this film deserves an Oscar for trying. The basic premise is so completely unbelievable that no matter how great the actors or director might be, it is totally impossible and almost offensive to try to convince the audience of its authenticity.

Reeves plays an attractive single playwright named Richard Collier, who upon seeing Elise McKenna (Jane Seymour) at an opening of one of his plays, becomes obsessed with seeing her again. Unfortunately, this is quite impossible. because she has been dead for almost 20 years. Sound mysterious? Well, after lots of research Collier forms a plan where he will actually go back in time to see her again. His method and final success are totally unbelievable. It is so far-fetched that not for a second did it convince this reviewer that he was actually doing it.

Now it would be too severe to say that this movie is without its good points. Though they are few and far between, they do exist. For instance: Reeves and Seymour are definitely fun to look at; it's fun to see if something really convincing is going to happen; it helps to hope that the end will be more worthwhile than the rest of the movie. Unfortunately none of these things are what make a great movie great.

have the Ramones, the Rentals, the Raincoats, the Revlons, the Records and the Romantics.

Many of the more established bands feature creative names. The Talking Heads named their band after television news anchormen, visible only from the neck up. The B-52's got their name from the southern slang for the bouffant hairdos popular in the sixties.

But what about the Fabulous Poodles? Is there such a species as the fabulous poodle? How about a Flaming Groovie? Is your grandmother a Flaming Groovie? Or even a Fabulous Groovie? How about a Flaming Poodle? What's the point?

The point is that we have past the point of no return. There is a group of young men out there who call themselves the Psychedelic Furs. This is serious.

But there is really no need to worry. Most of these groups will fade quietly into the twilight zone, and the good bands will stick around. So we can look forward to more from Elvis Costello and Graham Parker and the Clash, Cars, Police and Pretenders. Many others, however, will go the way of the Groovies — up in smoke.

'Private Benjamin'

By ALICE FISHER

Private Benjamin, produced by and starring Goldie Hawn, is a film for fashion minded socially elite, young ladies sporting three inch spiked heels and designer tweeds, who feel they need a change in their lives. Judy Benjamin, Goldie Hawn, was such a person: rich, beautiful, loved by everyone and whose only concern in life was that she have mushroom colored ottomans to match her den walls.

Suddenly she is left a widow, and unable to identify with The Unmarried Woman, Judy makes an appointment with her recruiting officer. Promised $480 a month, food and expenses paid, yachts, condominiums, and an annual trip to Europe, what else could Judy do except join the Army?

Although Private Benjamin seems like an attempt to make Army life and Army women look ridiculous, it is actually a caricature of the women of the '80s who are lost and confused and trying to be self-made and "complete." Goldie Hawn is suberb in portraying the roles from "daddy's little girl" to the "macho" paratrooper and finally the sophisticated independent woman equal to a man at any level.

What might have been a slapstick, Laverne and Shirley type absurdity, was gracefully turned into an extremely funny, yet moving, portrayal of someone who managed to completely mess up her life. One seldom hears an audience cheer for a dizzy blonde, but Hawn's presence gives anyone confidence that if she can make basic training, anyone can.

The supporting cast is equally as effective in carrying out this comedy. Eilleen Brennen is especially good as the sexually frustrated captain and Robert Webbes is the perfect domineering Frenchman. The screen play was co-written and produced by a local Philadelphian, Nancy Myers and the film was directed by Howard Zieff.

'Girlfriends'

By SHARON WINTERS

Girlfriends was a sharing experience for the characters in the movie as well as the audience. The

ON CAMPUS

Sunday Connelly Center film presented contemporary images, stereotypes, of our microcosm.

The friends in the film were accessible people. They appeared to be people that we've all met. Also, at times, they seemed as if they could be us. The two young women, Sue and Ann, portrayed characters whose experiences and feelings are universal.

The film offered a multidimensional feel of young life. When one of the friends married, the other felt an emotional void. Also, the single woman became more concerned with having the means to pay for the rent alone. The film, thus, presented modern reality on several levels.

The unmarried Sue was subject to peripheral issues: trying to build a friendly relationship with Ann's husband; coping with Ann's new, affluent life and her own desire to be a success. Sue's desire to gain recognition in her profession intensified in her solitude adding dimension to her character.

Ann seemed to adept well to her marriage, at least through Sue's eyes. As time passed, Sue realised that her friend still had strong needs that were not fulfilled in her union. The interaction between the women, as their relationship changed, was presented in a believeable manner.

The movie is entertaining and the material is presented well. The film maker provided the audience with social processes in a form that is easy for the viewer to understand.

The topic of friendship could have easily been a bore or an ordinary situation comedy. However, the movie injected life through the use of multidimensional characters. Sue allowed the viewer to better understand her by telling an anecdote in one scene; the same story also served the purpose of bringing her emotionally closer to another. The viewer can see Sue reaching out for understanding and friendship. Reactions of the character listening show the other's perception of Sue as well as reflect the attitudes of the listener.

Girlfriends is the third film in the cultural film series that is currently running on Sunday evenings at the Connelly Center. Future films are; Madame Rosa; The Great Dictator; Bread and Chocolate; Nashville; Nosferatu and Jules and Jim.

The films are in the cultural series because the film makers have the ability to utilise the medium very well. They protray emotions, people and events with flair while maintaining a high level of entertainment throughout their efforts.

The Connelly Center cinema is a lovely place to see a movie. The audience member hardly feels that he or she is in school. It is like seeing a film at a pleasant, local theater. The smell of popcorn fills the atmosphere adding to the movie-house-feel.

Tickets for the film series can be purchased at the Connelly Center ticket window ahead of time or at the cinema ticket booth immediately prior to the performance.

knack for dressing up the lyrics with nice sounds. Also the words, to be fair, are not irritable; the band does not go for the obvious, contrived rhymes, rather they tend to express their feelings through natural-sounding speech. This might be their talent. They say easily accessible phrases, cliches, that ring true enough for their listeners.

The and has certainly evolved to the point of being able to succeed in the rock arena today. They have a capacity to enliven and entertain, something that many bands lack. 3-D has that nebulous quality, the undefinable, "sound" that pleases the senses like salted peanuts. What they do isn't high art, but it plays so well on vinyl that it's a nice way to end an evening of studying. Let's hope that they retain the ability to be a band that someone would like to hear a second as well as a third time: that's the way this reviewer felt.

Play 3-D's See It Loud several times at least. The band is polished, energetic and has an infectious sound.

El Becko Sets Spectrum Afire

Master Guitarist Tours

By SUE BREHM

It has been three and one-half years since guitarist Jeff Beck toured the United States Finally, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 8, 1980, the Jeff Beck Group performed in Philadelphia at the Spectrum to promote the release of his long-awaited album There and Back. This ended his lengthiest period of inactivity.

Beck gained recognition as a master guitarist in the mid-60's. In 1964 he became the guitar showpiece for the Yardbirds, the well-known British rock and blues band that also introduced Eric Clapton and Jimmy Page. In 1976 Beck went into seclusion in an attempt "to find out what he was about." At that time he appeared to be at the peak of his career. Blow by Blow, Wired, and Jeff Beck with Jan Hammer Live had been his most successful efforts by far. Beck became one of the most widely emulated and respected guitarists of the time. He was critically acclaimed for being the only instrumentalist ever to win top awards, first as a rock and then as a jazz musician.

The majority of There and Back was written by keyboardist Tony Hymas, who along with drummer Simon Phillips and bassist Mo Foster compose Beck's current touring ensemble. Beck consistently selects musicians with extraordinary talent. Together they create a sophisticated and complex style of heavy fusion music, eschewing vocals, and rhythmically and harmonically combine equal parts of rock, jazz and blues music.

The Jeff Beck Group offered a variety of songs highlighting his last four albums. They opened with four tunes from There and Back: Star Cycle, El Becko; which contains some of Beck's most metallic improvising to date; Too Much to Lose and The Pump. They then performed flawlessly some old favorites such as the rapidly paced Scatterbrain and Freeway Jam, with Beck displaying his bulletlike flurries and crisp intonations. These songs contrast dynamically with the gracefully melodic tunes such as Cause We've Parted as Lovers, Diamond Dust, and the set closing Blue Wind. The sound quality and mix was superb.

Beck has the ability to implement his guitar as an extension of himself through which he releases his emotions. After 15 years, it is amazing that at age 36 Beck is still accorded respect by fellow musicians and remains an influential genius of tremendous significance.

Booters Boost Winning Streak

By JERRY VENTRESCA

Goalie Pete Jirak chalked up his sixth straight win against one loss and lowered his goals-against-average to 1.00 Saturday in the Wildcats 2-1 victory over Rutgers-Camden on the turf. Previous to that Jirak shutout Temple last Wednesday, 1-0.

While Jirak, a sophomore, is posting a 6-1 record, Villanova is 6-2, dropping their first two games and winning six in a row since.

Against Rutgers, the Wildcats are now 3-0. However, the Temple victory was more significant, not that it lowered the Owls record to 3-2-1, but, according to forward Steve Frey, "Temple is second to Textile in the Philadelphia Soccer Seven League." Earlier this season the Cats suffered a 7-1 loss to Textile. Also, the victory was the Cats first against Temple, who came into the game 6-0 in the series.

The lone score in the Temple game came from Dave McHugh midway through the second half. Frey's assist on the play tied him at leading scorer in the league (six goals, two assists). Frey's play has been instrumental in the Cats success this season ever since the squad's leading scorer in 1979, McHugh, was moved from halfback to sweeper, to tighten up the defense after the Cats allowed 12 goals in the first two games of the season.

In Frey's words, "So far, this is the best year for Villanova soccer. Our possibilities of making the NCAA post-season tournament are good; we must win eight of the remaining nine games." Frey gave much credit to Assistant Coach Karl Moehlmann for improving the player's ball skills and keeping them in good physical shape. Unfortunately the attendance at home games hasn't been one to boast about, agreed both Jirak and Frey.

For those interested, the Cats face Georgetown tomorrow on the turf and will try to take the upper hand in the 4-4-1 series. Last year the Cats beat Georgetown, 3-1.

Volliers are Victorious

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

While most Wildcat fans were cheering the football team onto victory over Cincinnati or supporting the Villanova rugby and soccer teams this past Saturday, the volleyball team placed second at the Rutgers/Newark Volleyball Tournament. They may not be as glamorous, but they have a very respectable 12-3 record.

The Wildcats tallied scores of 3-15 and 15-8 in their first meeting with the Syracuse team. They went on to dominate Rutgers 15-3 and 15-0. The U.S. Military Academy was the last team to fall at the hands of Villanova, 15-10 and 15-4. Syracuse and Villanova, the two teams having the best overall record in the tournament, met for the finals. The New York team outplayed V.U. for tallies of 15-9 and 15-12.

Freshmen Mary Fisher and Nancy Patrick and junior veteran Lisa Ortlip were named to the All-Star team of the tournament and received silver discs.

In regular season play the volliers ousted Lehigh with ease as the Engineers fell 15-12, 15-6 and 15-12.

Women Booters Tie Penn

By KATHY MAHER

The Villanova women's soccer team battled to a 1-1 tie with rival Penn on October 8. The score, however, is not indicative of the quality of the game played by the Wildcats. Villanova had possession of the ball 43 of the first 45 minutes of the game.

At the end of the first half, Penn had only one shot on goal, but that shot gave them a 1-0 lead. The goal was scored when the rebound from a weak shot inside the six-yard line was not picked up by Villanova goalie Patti Nowlan.

The only Wildcat goal came 12 minutes into the second half when junior Karen Clabbers scored on her second penalty kick of the day. The fullback had missed an earlier penalty shot 10 minutes into the first half.

According to Coach Lee Stevens fullback Katie Graney and left inner Denise Finn (until she was injured in the second half with a badly sprained ankle) both played essential roles in last Wednesday's match-up.

"Many key players were missing from the Penn game however," stated Stevens. "Denise Reid has a head injury, Beth Reid has mononucleosis, Lu-Ann Krothe has a broken leg and Carol Boyle has a strained Achilles' tendon," he continued. "We dominated the game, but just couldn't get the ball in the goal," Stevens reflected.

Field Hockey Shuts Out Eastern

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Field Hockey team recorded a 3-0 shutout victory over Eastern College Saturday in what was expected to be a much closer contest. Powered by a two-goal output from senior co-captain Debbie Smith, the Wildcats upped their record to 7-2-2. Co-captain Lisa Alderfer came up with the other goal in the winning effort.

The game served as a tune-up for the Wildcat squad, which will travel to Swarthmore tomorrow to compete in the All-College Tournament. Eleven teams from the Philadelphia area are entered, with Villanova ranked as the top-seeded team.

First-year Head Coach Debbie Havrilla was very pleased by the team's performance on Saturday. "All of the girls put forth a good team effort, especially on offense, where putting pressure on the opposing goalie has become our strong point."

The defense was led by senior goalie "MacBeth" Campanella, who turned aside three shots to get credit for the shutout.

Looking ahead the Wildcats will face four tough opponents in succession at home on the Astroturf. "Playing on the Astroturf makes the game much faster paced," noted Havrilla, "but this is to our advantage since we practice on it and are now very accustomed to the faster game tempo."

The team's ultimate goal for this year is to qualify for the Division II Regional Finals which will be held at the end of the season in Baltimore, MD.

Runners Finish Fifth

By KYLE GOTHNER

The Villanova women's cross country team has continued to show their constant improvement as their times dropped in the Temple Invitational held at Belmont Plateau last Saturday.

Villanova placed fifth in the 10-team meet behind West Chester, Rutgers, West Virginia and Penn. Carol Gilsinger led the women by placing seventh with a time of 17:49. The second finisher for the Cats was Eva Marie Discenza with a time of 18:06. Strong performances also came from Amelia Cain with a time of 18:24 and Beverly Reilly and Eileen Costello with close times of 18:48 and 18:50, respectively.

Tomorrow Villanova will be defending their Big Five Cross Country Championship.

NOVA DE-CLAWS BEARCATS

By KERRY LYNCH

In a game dominated by the Wildcat's offense, the Villanova football squad romped to a 23-6 win over the Cincinnati Bearcats. The victory came after a week of inaction and puts the Wildcat record at 2-3.

While Villanova played a rushing game which allowed them to gain 357 yards, the Cincinnati offense was checked in their passing efforts by an aggressive Villanova defense. Coach Bedesem says the 1980 squad is "the best defensive team since I've been here."

Freshman Kevin Ingram started at quarterback and directed the offense through the first three quarters and the scoring of the first two touchdowns. Villanova's scoring began in the second quarter after the Bearcats had scored with two field goals. Good ground control from the wishbone allowed the Wildcats to rush 63 yards for a first and goal at the nine when fullback Don Ziesel carried over the center for a gain of six yards. It was second down and three yards to go when right halfback Shawn Passman took the pitchout to the right and scored on an end around sweep. Bushbeck's kick was good for the extra point, putting the Wildcats on the board and ahead of Cincinnati; 7-6.

A series of quick and methodical carries over 67 yards was responsible for the second Wildcat touchdown. Junior fullback Craig Dunn controlled the ball for four consecutive plays, rushing a total of 31 yards and scoring on a one yard carry over the left tackle. The snap for the extra point was high, which caused Joe Borajkiewicz to attempt a two point conversion. However, his pass into the end zone was intercepted by the Bearcats.

With O'Brien at the quarterback position, the Wildcats hit paydirt early in the fourth quarter despite a 15-yard clipping penalty. Ziesel scored at 2:53 with a one yard run up the middle.

Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck had a successful kicking game with two extra points and a 42-yard field goal which completed Villanova's scoring.

The defensive line has kept their opponents from scoring a touchdown for nine consecutive quarters and this week wrecked havoc with the Bearcat passing game; tallying four interceptions and four quarterback sacks. In the words of Coach Bedesem, "the defense played extremely well, we were aggressive."

The Cincinnati offensive played eleven minutes of the first quarter but couldn't capitalize on their possession. They made steady progress toward the Villanova goal line and had first down and ten to go at the 26, when Wildcat safety Chris Yurkow intercepted Barrett's pass and downed it for a touchback.

Right cornerback Tom Anthony had two interceptions, the first coming at 1:44 of the second quarter on Cincinnati's first play after the touchback. A final interception was executed by roverback Tom Leonard, grabbing the ball at the Villanova 13-yard line during a 60-yard drive by the desperate Cincinnati offense.

There were moments of tense play early in the second quarter when Cincinnati recovered their own kick-off on the Villanova 14. Linebacker Al Harris sacked the Cincinnati quarterback for a loss of 17 yards and the Bearcats had to settle for a field goal. Harris had another sack and a total of 12 tackles to lead the Cat's defense.

Paul Phillipy and Howie Long each had a sack while Anthony Griggs matched Harris with 12 tackles.

In the words of senior quarterback Pat O'Brien, the Villanova squad is "playing better as a team." The Wildcats hope to take this new found momentum and their winning streak to Annapolis tomorrow where they will meet Navy who's defensive line is ranked number one in the country.

Running back Craig Dunn recovers his own fumble in the end zone after crashing the Bearcat defensive line for a touchdown.

Are Phillies Fans Really Fanatics?

By PATRICK FLYNN

Sure, there were celebrations last Sunday. Of course, the guys in the maroon were heroes then. Yes, Don Tollefson was offering a tribute "to a team we love."

That was just a matter of consequences. A few breaks, a few clutch hits, and all of a sudden the Phils were in the World Series and Philadelphia "loved" them.

But how about when they lost two-of-three at home to a great Expos team? "Chokers," said the local newsmen.

How about after coming back dramatically to overtake the Expos, when the Phils fell behind, two games to one, to a great Astros team? The headlines read: "Phillies aren't choking. They're just not that good."

The fans are the same way. Certainly, they show up in great numbers, but the Vet always seems to be filled with just so many nasty Robert Conrads, holding up expectations of victorious glory and daring the Phillies to knock them off. Waiting for a scapegoat. Waiting for someone to boo.

It's no coincidence that the Phillies won the division by losing two of three at home, then winning two of three on the road. It's the same reason that they won the pennant in Houston, calmly taking a pair of games when their backs were to the wall.

The pressure is simply greater for that team at home. So great that Larry Bowa felt the urge to say something about it three weeks ago. So great that the first thing Garry Maddox said after the pennant-clincher in Houston was to caution, "We'll all be playing our hearts out (when the Series starts). There'll be no reason to boo us."

It's hard to tell who starts it all. Does the media create this attitude in the fans' minds? Or are they just saying what the people want to hear?

But one thing is for sure. Regardless of what happens the rest of the way, if the Phillies were the kind of team to give up as easily as their fans do, the series would have started in Houston or Montreal. And the alibis would have started here.

Wildcats Post Successful Exhibition Season

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova baseball team is resting comfortably after posting a 16-5 record during the fall exhibition season. Manager Larry Shane was pleased with the results. "We were very successful because of the great attitude on the part of the players."

Last spring the Wildcats posted a 21-7 mark, which included a berth into the ECAC Regional Tournament, Villanova's first post-season baseball tournament in 18 years. Shane lost only three starters of last year's team to graduation.

Shane's goals for the fall season, "is to find out who can play. It's really an exhibition season. We want to win, but I must look at all the players." Shane thinks he has a couple of freshmen hurlers who will help to insure Villanova's new found success. Shane said, "Pitchers Randy Robinson and Kevin Stevens both had fine seasons. Those two frosh coupled with returning pitchers Charlie McDermott (6-2 last spring) and Steve Skammer (7-2 last spring) will keep us in the game."

As long as the Cats are kept in the game the odds are in their favor. Villanova's offense, which last year had a composite team average of .320, and ranked fifth in the NCAA Division I should be better this spring. Shane has the big bats of Bill Duryea (.369), Dante Santoni (.342), and Don Casey (.314) returning. Shane is also counting on freshman Dennis Barth. Shane said, "Barth stepped into the outfield and showed he can play."

Larry Shane's squad will play 35 games this spring. "I want to have a successful season, make the play-offs and go farther than we did last year."

Al Harris and Paul Phillipy lay in on the University of Cincinnati quarterback in last Saturday's 23-6 win over the Bearcats.

Pete Jirak, the men's soccer goalie, is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Jirak has recorded five shutouts, made 54 saves and allowed only seven goals in the last seven games. Jirak was also named the Co-Player of the Week in the Philadelphia Soccer Seven League. Jirak, a sophomore, was nominated by the Sports Editors.

Professor Before Grand Jury

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

A Villanova faculty member has been called to testify before a federal grand jury concerning the confidentiality of information given to him concerning the perpetration of a crime.

Dr. William Waegel, associate professor of sociology, said in an interview that he followed legal channels to get this information to the appropriate government agencies on the conditions that neither would he be revealed as a source, nor would he have to divulge his source of information.

Since that time, Waegel said he has been subpoenaed four times to appear before an investigative federal grand jury to divulge his source of information. Each time, Waegel has refused to reveal this information, on the grounds of jury Tuesday ended in a continuance of the trial.

The following is a statement Waegel has released to the press:

Early in the semester a person came to me and sought my advice and counsel regarding a legal matter. He had come across information concerning a serious crime, but was very frightened that if he passed this information on to authorities and was subsequently identified or called to testify that his life would be in danger. I agreed to act as an intermediary between this person who was attempting to do what he believed to be the right thing and the authorities. I received promises from the government official that the information would be confidential and that the identity of the source would neither be sought or disclosed.

At the advice of counsel, I am not in a position to discuss in detail the nature of the incident or what has transpired subsequent to my initial involvement. For me to disclose further information at this time, might jeopardize the interests I am trying to protect. Suffice it to say, that I have been subpoenaed on several occasions since October 1st, and have been threatened with a prison sentence in an effort to force me to reveal the identity of the source. I have not, and under no circumstances will I do this. Public disclosure of the government's treatment of me is the one trump-card I hold in this matter, and at the advice of counsel, I must presently refrain from making such disclosure as they might compromise the interests that I am trying to protect.

> "I received promises from the government official that the information would be confidential and that the identity of the source would neither be sought or disclosed."
> Dr. William Waegel.

In his defense, Waegel has so far incurred $2,900 in legal fees. Several Villanova faculty members have inaugurated a legal defense fund to aid in offsetting these costs.

Reagan Picked In Student Poll

By BILL ROCK

Ronald Reagan was the easy winner in a poll of over 500 Villanova students conducted last week by The Villanovan.

Reagan was supported by over 41 percent of those polled. President Carter followed with over 20 percent, and John Anderson garnered almost 16 percent.

In response to the question, "Whom are you going to vote for, or, if not registered, whom do you support?," the results were:

Carter 20.5%
Anderson 15.9%
Clark 1%
Commoner .5%
Undecided 20.7%

Committee Reports On Appointment

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

A Senate Faculty Assembly committee investigating the unusual Presidential appointment of a faculty member last spring has issued a report finding that "outside sources, including a major donor," influenced President John Driscoll's decision.

The report, which had been made available to faculty members only last week, also found that Driscoll's "failure to communicate the magnitude of the external pressures being applied" to faculty and administration resulted in the ensuing controversy.

In January, Father Driscoll appointed Dr. Vincent Sherry to a full-time teaching position in the English department, breaking with tradition of adhering to department faculty recommendations in selecting new faculty.

A Toronto University graduate, Sherry is a member of the Keating family. Daniel J. Keating, who sits on the University Development Council, is a member of the Keating contracting firm which was recently employed in the construction of the Connelly Center.

Sherry was sent a rejection letter by the search committee which was signed by the department head. Sherry was not among the top 150 candidates in a search process which used teaching experience and publication material as criteria for over 500 candidates.

He later received notification of his appointment and accepted a position entering a crowded field (Modern British Literature) and was expected to teach freshmen composition.

The report, compiled by committee chairman Michael Burke, Rev. Lawrence Gallen, and Edward McAssey, maintains "that the rejection of the Candidate (Sherry) as an applicant was not a full committee decision and did not represent an evaluation of his qualifications other than the fact that he was not judged to be among the top qualifiers according to the committee criteria."

The Faculty Assembly committee also reports on the ambiguous circumstances surrounding the Presidential appointment: "Late in December, 1979, the President became interested in the appointment of the Candidate-in-Question (Sherry) as a result of conversations with influential outside sources, in-

Delay in Graduation Approved

ANNE MARIE URBINATO

The University Senate voted Friday in favor of holding graduation ceremonies at least a week from the last day of final exams to allow for Senior week activities.

Before the final voting, the senate rejected Faculty Senator William Rice's proposal to schedule the two day graduation ceremony on weekdays. He pointed out that holding graduation on Friday forced an inconvenience on faculty since they are required to attend and the students are not.

Nursing Senator Ivy Tischler and Arts and Science Senator Jean O'Leary explained that it would be more of an inconvenience to parents and family since 92 percent of the seniors favored a delay for activities. Faculty Senator Joyce Longman also added that since it was the seniors' graduation, an inconvenience on the faculty would be enough to justify the change.

Before voting on the delay, Faculty Senator Theodore Kondolean asked what students planned for that week. Student senators stated that they would plan events based on a survey the Student Government Association had taken to determine what activities seniors would like to have. More than 80 percent said they favored a three-day party, a picnic, and an outdoor concert in the mall.

Senator Tischler also emphasized that senior weeks in the past lacked strong organization and this year they would have more time and more student participation to overcome the problem.

Senator Rice questioned the costs involved for the week, and Father Deegan who abstained from voting for the proposal, pointed out that the $40 graduation fee included in the tuition would not be enough to cover the costs of keeping the Connolly Center opened that week and hiring maintenance workers to work during graduation weekend. According to the survey, however, 96 percent of the seniors agreed to pay any excess nominal charge.

The vote on the senior week motion was 17 in favor, 8 opposed, and 5 abstentions.

Also on the agenda was Father President Driscoll's annual address to the Senate. He stated that last year was a financially strong and profitable year. Previous fund raising, he continued, primarily attributed to the asset. Last week, for example, John Connelly sent $815,000 to cover the rest of the construction costs for the Connelly Center.

The proposal giving sole priority in use of monies from over-enrollment to academic equipment was tabled by a vote of 14 to 13 until more information concerning its expenditure becomes available. Faculty Senator Jeffrey Hahn asked whether the money would supplement faculty salaries. Law Senator Jerry Brogan also pointed out that if the $363,000 allotment was to be distributed to each department, what would be the chance of its success?

Economic Policies Analyzed

Inconsistency Marks Carter Record

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

President Jimmy Carter has had early four years to diminish the "misery index" he inherited from is predecessor. This measure is arter's way of defining the com-ined rates of inflation and unem-oyment.

Professor Joseph L. Lucia of the epartment of economics points at the President's policies have, fact, increased the percentage employment in the total labor rce; the unemployment rate is ightly lower now than when Car-r was inaugurated in 1977.

The inflation rate, as Ameri-ns are painfully aware, is a dif-rent story.

Lucia explains that the Presi-nt "has not stuck with any conomic policy." The result of is inconsistency is the lack of y consistent fiscal or monetary olicy.

Fiscal policy refers to the way at the government taxes the blic and to the allocation when ending these receipts. Monetary olicy is the power of the Federal eserve to regulate the supply of oney. Taken together, these in-ruments are used to realize the onomic goals of our society.

If President Carter is reelected next month, his ability to attack inflation will depend on the caliber of the people he chooses for his staff and for key government positions. Lucia feels that the President's selection of Paul Volcker as chairman of the Federal Reserve — the nation's central bank — is an example of choosing "a good man."

Many people have been comparing the Democratic President's performance with the propositions put forth by his Republican opponent in the presidential race, Governor Ronald Reagan. Lucia notes that as wanting as President Carter has been in the area of fiscal policy, Reagan's ideas of increasing spending on defense measures, coupled with his plans for tax reduction, are quite worrisome.

President Carter has been more successful in reducing unemployment than in reducing inflation. The late British economist A. W. Phillips in 1958 described an inverse relationship between inflation and unemployment: as one increases, the other necessarily decreases. But over a long period of time this relationship breaks down, and Lucia contends that in fairness to President Carter, the circumstances precipitating this malfunction are not his fault.

Jimmy Carter — Arthur Grace / Time

John Anderson — Rodney E. Mims / Time

These circumstances are the result of years of increased government spending without a corresponding rise in government receipts from taxes.

The situation is on the President's lap, however, and Lucia says he would do well to define his plans for improvement, and to carry out his policies without vacillation, even if the results are politically damaging.

If he is reelected, Lucia believes politics might cease to exert as much force in economic decision making as is currently the case, since Carter will be constitutionally ineligible to serve another term as President.

Anderson Stresses Fiscal Restraint

By CAROL ALKONS

With the focus of Americans on the problem of the economy, the proposals of the Presidential candidates for improvements in the American economic system may be the deciding factor of the Presidential race. Dr. Charles E. Zech, of Villanova's department of economics, supports John Anderson as "the candidate who will best restore the economy and cut inflation."

"The other candidates plan to cut the income tax, but the immediate effect of lowering it is a higher rate of inflation. Carter and Reagan suggest that workers will be more productive for their employers, and consequently, that prices will not increase, but in actuality, productivity will not go up immediately. Therefore there will be no restraining effect on prices, and inflation will remain on the rise," Zech explained.

"Reagan's 10 percent decrease of the income tax would help the rich more than the poor; since the rich pay more taxes, they will get the better break. Reagan's plans include the increase of the defense budget. The only way that he can balance the budget under the circumstances of rising government expenditures and reduced taxes would be to cut back on programs.

"Anderson proposes to decrease the social security tax in order to encourage employment. Companies are reluctant to pay workers more than the worker's production is worth, but with reduced social security taxes, the employer's cost of hiring untrained workers is decreased, thereby giving them the incentive to hire these relatively unproductive workers. At the same time, the worker's take-home pay is not adversely affected," Zech stated.

"Anderson also plans a tax incentive program to control wages and prices. Instead of asking for voluntary cooperation, Anderson, offers incentives — a tax break — for businesses that follow the wage and price guidelines."

"Anderson's $.50 per gallon gasoline tax increase will discourage gasoline consumption and decrease our dependence on the Middle-Eastern countries. Additionally, it would offset the reduction of social security taxes, so that the overall amount of taxes collected will not decrease. To control inflation by balancing the federal budget first — make government expenditures equal the amount of tax coming in — and then to lower taxes, is Anderson's plan," continued Zech.

"I support John Anderson not for what he will do, but for what he will not do. His program will not lead to the rise of inflation."

Reagan Offers Tax Reduction

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Ronald Reagan's economic olicies have been variously scribed in such terms as "in-riguing," "vague" and "un-alistic" during the course of the 80 Presidential campaign. But tting aside such rhetoric, what actly does the Reagan economic ogram call for, and what effects uld it have over the next four ars, should Reagan be elected esident?

Dr. James J. Clarke, an onomics professor and sup-rter of the Reagan candidacy, e asked to explain the Reagan onomic plan, its rationale, and possible ramifications.

The cornerstone of the Reagan onomics is a proposed 30 per-nt reduction in personal income es rates over the next three ars — 10 percent a year; this n is referred to as the Kemp-th formula, after the two law-kers who introduced it as a bill Congress. Business taxes are o to be lowered through ac-eration of corporate write-offs modernization of plants and ipment.

Commenting on charges that h a tax cut would result in a rp decrease in Federal venues, Clarke asserted that, on the contrary, it would actually increase them.

Clarke bases this belief on the "Laffer Curve," a theory which states that there exists an optimal point of taxation at which revenues are maximized. "Reagan believes we're beyond that point — taxes are too high." He explained that the Laffer's theory holds that beyond the optimal point, the taxpayer is overburdened, he saves less and works less, contributing less to revenues. "A decrease in taxes will increase revenues," Clarke repeated.

Under the Reagan economic formula a reduction in Federal spending is tied to the tax cut. Reagan of late has conceded that spending cuts will be needed to make up for decreased revenues in 1981 and 1982. Clarke does not, however, see this as the prime motive for the proposed budgetary constrainments — which begin with a proposed 2 percent cut below current 1981 expected levels and foresee a 7 percent reduction by 1985. He attributes this provision more to Reagan's philosophy, which stresses reduced government. "The way to control government is through its spending," Clarke stated, adding that Reagan would do this by "trying to put a cap on government spending."

Turning to the all-important issue of inflation, Clarke said that the thrust of Reagan's approach would lie in the area of government spending, with reductions being aimed at putting more demand in people's hands. Asked if this approach would not fuel even higher inflation, as the Carter campaign has charged, Clarke replied, "Private spending is no worse than government spending. The government can print money, private persons can't."

The Reagan economic formula anticipates a balanced Federal budget by 1983. Clarke commented that the budget could not be balanced before this time because "1981 and 1982 (budgets) are too out of line." When asked if he believes Reagan can achieve this goal, in light of possibly higher than expected deficits in the next few years, Clarke responding, said, "I expect him to do it. He comes from a political philosophy that believes in a balanced budget."

A lessening of government regulation is another provision of the Republican challenger's program. Clarke indicated that Reagan would employ different tactics than President Carter in this regard. "Carter has been going after specific industries — trucking, airlines, communications. Reagan is talking more about the elimination of paperwork, the costs of agency demands. He wants to get business people to devote more time to business," Clarke commented.

Regarding the cities, Reagan proposes the establishment of "free trade zones," urban areas in which tax advantages would be given to small businesses. "These tax advantages would be on the production of basic goods, allowing one to compete with the Japanese and the Taiwanese."

Most political experts predict that the Democrats will retain control of the Congress in the upcoming election. Clarke was asked how Reagan could get his economic program through a Democratic Congress intact.

"He has to do what Ford did: use the veto. He may have enough support to do this." Clarke expects Reagan in this way to defend his program by blocking some "humanitarian" measures. "The most important thing this country can do is stop inflation; it's the most humanitarian thing we can do."

Voter Apathy Studied

By SHARON WINTERS

most 40% of those eligible to in presidential elections do according to government tics. The last election that over 70% of the electorate 1900, Republican William inley won over his Demo-opponent William Jennings term "voter apathy" is used scribe why people do not vote. eans that citizens lack n at election-time.

y people do not vote "politics is marginal in their lives," according to Dr. Jeffrey W. Hahn, associate professor of political science at Villanova. Many do not take part in elections because they don't see any connection to their daily lives said Hahn.

Hahn views apathy as a "rejection of politics as usual" as well as a move away from conventional modes of conduct like voting.

There are four major reasons why citizens don't vote according to Hahn. The first is Watergate and corruption. The various scandals over the past two decades have made many less supportive of government, said Hahn.

Another reason is the "inability of government to solve problems like inflation," said Hahn.

A third cause of apathy is "confrontation politics," according to Dr. Hahn, "The legacy of Vietnam has led to single issue politics. People feel that things can't be accomplished through the system so they march or protest, said Hahn.

The last major reason for apathy is the decline in political parties Hahn stated. He sees the erosion of the parties' role particularly among the younger voters. They are independent and reject parties, said Hahn. He equates an individual's interest and willingness to participate in politics with an interest in a party.

The solution to apathy is that "the electorate needs to be educated," said Hahn. "People underestimate the impact that they can have." Once people learn the skills of the system and understand the link that politics has with their lives they will be more likely to vote according to Hahn.

Political Union Debates N.A.T.O. Future

By DREW MERRICK

The policies and responsibilities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were the topic of a debate sponsored by the Villanova Political Union on Monday, October 20th, at 7 p.m. in Dougherty Hall.

The resolution: "This House Favors a Reduction in the Level of N.A.T.O. Armaments," was rejected by a vote of 6-3. There were five abstentions.

Mr. James Joyce, world-known author and member of the English Bar Association was the guest speaker. Joyce is a graduate of the London School of Economics, and was Senior Research Associate at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

Joyce believes that N.A.T.O. is indifferent toward more important global problems such as starvation, poverty, and economic stagnation. "N.A.T.O is needlessly spending billions of dollars each year on fiendish nuclear weapons, many of which become obsolete by the time of production. That monstrous sum devoted to killing the earth's people is growing, yet multinational companies thrive. Inflation in wealthy countries continues to soar. Poor countries have tanks, missiles, and military aircraft dumped on their land, when they desperately need tractors, schools and hospitals. More arms do not make us safer, only poorer."

"N.A.T.O. should be disbanded and dissolved, for it is the cause of much political strife and unrest in Europe," continued Joyce. "When N.A.T.O. was first founded in 1949, the United States asserted that West Germany should remain neutral, and would not be permitted to join N.A.T.O.

"In 1954, when West Germany joined N.A.T.O., the Soviet Union formulated the Warsaw Pact in retaliation. The Soviets had no alternative, for they believed that they are being unjustly 'ganged up' upon by the nations of N.A.T.O. Europe has been divided ever since. N.A.T.O. should be replaced by an All European Security Pact."

Robert A. Montserrat, chairman of the Conservative Party, disagreed with the reasoning used by Joyce. Montserrat believes that disbandment of N.A.T.O. right now would have catastrophic consequences. "N.A.T.O. should increase its level of armaments, because the world balance of power has shifted toward the Soviet Union. The Soviets intend to force Europe into a situation of suicide or surrender. N.A.T.O. must confront Russian aggression by arming itself and facing the Soviet challenge."

Patrick O'Neill, chairman of the Moderate Party, asserted that any increase in nuclear or conventional arms should be done in a rational manner. O'Neill also believes that the U.S. should not be that involved in European affairs. "Europe no longer needs protection of the U.S. to the ex... that the U.S. thinks it does."

Jeff Markowitz, chairman of t... Liberal Party, stated that only ... level of conventional armam... should be increased. "It is p... sible to check Soviet aggress... into Third World countries wit... strong conventional army. T... nuclear armaments level ... N.A.T.O. need not be increased.

Trip Offered

This spring the Honors Program will sponsor a course/trip focusing on the Grand Canyon. The purpose of the course will be to provide, through both study and experience, an appreciation of one of the most spectacular wilderness environments — the Grand Canyon.

Readings and course meetings will focus on the wide variety of appreciations of the desert, the wilderness, and of life "in nature." Historical, literary, anthropological, philosophical and scientific prospectives will be explored. The Grand Canyon is a veritable natural history museum, providing unequalled glimpses at geologic formations, vegetation varying from alpine meadow to desert brush, and uniquely iso... lated animal life. In addition, the Canyon environment has been home to ancient and contemporary native American civilizations, and ample evidence remains of their tenure there.

No matter how much in... formation one acculumlates one must be in the wilderness to know the wilderness. To this end the group will spend the spring semester break (February 28-March 8) in the field: at the bottom of the Grand Canyon.

Anyone interested in this ex... perience should contact the Honors Office, Corr Hall 10... as soon as possible.

Economist Visits Campus

By SHARON WINTERS

"We haven't done so well with the problem of inflation," said Charles L. Schultze (chairman) of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. However, Schultze feels that the Carter administration has a "highly credible record" as well as a "high batting average" in their economic policy. Schultze lectured University students in the Connelly Center Cinema on October 22. He talked on the subject of Carter's economic policy for about 35 minutes and then answered questions from the audience.

The inflation rate in 1976 was 6% to 7%; now it 9% and "that's not good" according to Schultze, although "you do not judge a doctor by the seriousness of the illness." He advocates a "moderate, cautious approach" to curbing inflation.

Schultze said that more resources must be used for investment purposes. Half of Carter's proposed tax reduction would be used to stimulate business with an orientation towards public investment. Schultze used the example of weather-proofing buildings as a public area of investment.

Another 15% of the proposed tax relief would go to the reduction of payroll costs.

The final 35% would benefit individuals.

The rationale of this tax-cut proposal, according to Schultze, is that the country needs more capital investment to deal with energy and productivity problems. Individuals, on the other hand, are primarily consumers. Any personal tax relief would be used for goods rather than capital, a type of "primary" good that is used to produce consumer goods.

Schultze said that the Carter administration resisted the idea of a large tax cut for individuals in an election year because it could not take the "chance" of "quick, massive spending." He said that we can't afford to make big mistakes with inflation; therefore, he prefers to do a little bit at a time. Schultze believes that the economy cannot be pushed too hard. Inflation is difficult to get rid of since it has an asymmetrical nature: it goes up easily but it is difficult to reduce.

Schultze cited four sets of facts concerning the economic condition of this country. First, we are just recovering from a recession and the process is likely to be "sluggish."

Secondly, he said we have three problems with deep roots: inflation; energy and productivity. "Inflation is still high; we are still vulnerable to outside shocks, from foreign oil producing nations, for example, and our productivity has declined to zero."

The third fact Schultze cited is that our economy has done well in other areas. "The position of the United States in respect to providing jobs is incredible," said Schultze. He cited that we have opened up jobs for millions of people in the past 10 year period.

Kane Postponed

By BILL CLARK

Larry Kane cancelled his October 22 lecture at Villanova in order to make a special program about the Philadelphia Phillies' World Series victory. Kane will speak at Villanova on November 11.

According to Mike Logue of the Villanova Union, the Union knew about the possibility of the cancellation. "We were given a preliminary warning the week before about the possibility of the World Series interfering with Kane's schedule. If the Series went to seven games, he would be busy with coverage of the game itself.

"If the Series went to six games, we were told he would be making a special program that night," said Logue.

"When we first booked him, they (WCAU-TV) told us that there was a 99.9% chance that he would be able to attend, but if anything came up he would be forced to cancel," said Chris Cherry, lecture chairperson of the Major Events Committee of the Villanova Union.

According to Cherry, approximately 20 tickets had been sold for the lecture. Tickets will be on sale until the day of the lecture.

Hunger Week

By MICHAEL SCHOCH

Hunger Awareness Preparations have been the main concern for many people on the Villanova campus for many weeks. With Hunger Awareness Week beginning with the 6 p.m. Mass on Sunday November 16, and lasting until Saturday November 22, we want to remind all of the students that Hunger Awareness Week is approaching.

Much time and effort has been put forth by the chairmen of Hunger Awareness Committees who still need members to sign-up in the Campus Ministry office in the basement of St. Rita's. Hunger Awareness is a worthwhile cause that can use the help of everyone who wants to get involved.

More information will be published in future Villanovans concerning Hunger Awareness Week. If you have any questions please stop in at Campus Ministry where they will be answered.

polled indicated that they are registered to vote, and 72 percent stated that they intended to vote.

Of those who plan to vote, the breakdown was as follows:

Reagan 44.7%
Carter 19%
Anderson 14.5%
Clark 1%

Reagan's support proved greater among men than among women. Forty-seven percent of the male... questioned preferred Reagan, with 20.4 percent favoring Carter, and 15.3 percent choosing Anderson.

Among women, Reagan was the favorite of 37.9 percent; Carter was picked by 20.4 percent; and Anderson was selected by 14.9 percent. Over 15 percent of the men interviewed indicated that they were undecided as to a candidate, while better than 26 percent of the women noted the same.

Among the four colleges,

Villanovan representative administers poll.

Reagan's support was greatest in the College of Commerce and Finance, where he was selected by 48 percent of the participants. He received the least support in the College of Nursing, where 30.9 percent picked him.

Carter, with 23.6 percent, also got his largest percentage of support from the College of Commerce and Finance. The 10.9 percent he received from the Nursing college was his poorest showing.

Anderson had his strongest support in the Nursing school, where he garnered 18.1 percent. He received his lowest percentage of support in the College of Engineering, with 11.9 percent.

The largest percentage of undecided voters was in the College of Nursing, 40 percent. The smallest percentage of undecided voters was in the Commerce and Finance College, 15 percent.

Appointment

cluding a major donor." The President then forwarded a dossier, including a letter from an outside source, to Dr. James J. Cleary, vice-president of academic affairs, with instructions to give the candidate's application "due consideration."

The report then goes on to detail the facts which eventually led to the incident which sparked disagreement between faculty and administration:

"As the President's special interest in this Candidate (Sherry) was communicated from the VPPA (Cleary) to the Dean (Father Joseph O'Malley) and from the Dean and VPAA to the department chairman (Dr. Joseph P. McGowan), any intimation of urgency or gravity seemed to disappear ... no one intimated that any extraordinary action was expected or imminent; rather, the Department, Dean, and VPPA agreed upon the top choices of the English Search Committee (Dr. Kirschke and Dr. Thomas)."

An account of the time period between Sherry's receiving a rejection letter and his later appointment is also given by the report: "By late January ... the President felt increasingly obligated to find a position for the Candidate-in-Question (Sherry) in accordance with the wishes of the outside influences."

However, the two positions had been already filled and the candidates were notified.

In a meeting with Dr. Cleary, the committee reports, Father Driscoll discussed what other solutions might be available in obtaining a position for Sherry. A third full-time position was then offered to Sherry following the Driscoll/Cleary meeting. However, neither Cleary nor the English Department head were aware that the President went ahead and "decided to proceed with the appointment, and so notified the outside sources." Both Cleary and the Department head thought the third position alternative "a bad idea," according to the report.

The President's view of the incident is also presented in the report: "From the President's point of view," the report states, "the problem was solved. He had not deprived the faculty of its advisory role, he felt, since the English department had had the opportunity to evaluate Sherry."

This contradicts the report's claim that Sherry was not 'evaluated': "The English department had never made any evaluation of the candidate's qualifications other than stating a preference for a number of others."

The report claims that the controversy and disagreement that arose was the result of a lack of communication: "The President," continues the report, "did not communicate the magnitude of the external pressures being applied."

The Department committee had been willing to cooperate with the President, states the report, but his concerns and decisions were not made available to them: "After the action of the President there was no attempt made to discuss the case with the search committee until the case became public knowledge."

The committee report also discussed faculty input in the hiring process. Using common points of agreement among those interviewed, the faculty portion of the Middle States Self Evaluation Report, the Faculty Handbook, and the Chairman's job description, the report presented the following summary:

"The normal hiring process at Villanova involves substantial faculty consultation. Although not required by the procedures of the University, this input by the faculty has in most cases become the major criterion for selecting an individual for an appointment. The standard hiring procedure at Villanova has evolved so that today, with the exception of the case in question, the process follows very closely the statement on government of colleges and universities. Unfortunately, the written procedures have not progressed as rapidly as actual practice with respect to the role of the faculty."

Some concerns voiced at the time of the controversy were not investigated in the report. For example, one search committee member last year expressed concern that Title IX and affirmative action obligations were not being fulfilled and that the University may have risked lawsuits by the Association of American University Professors (AAUP) in the appointment.

Dr. Kirschke, a Vietnam veteran, and Dr. Thomas, a woman, satisfy Title IX and affirmative action obligations.

The ad-hoc Faculty Assembly committee will present its report to the Faculty Assembly at its November 25 meeting.

As Old Liberalism Fades

The Students' Choice for President

. . . In 1968, there were mere contenders for the office — McCarthy, Kennedy, even George Wallace — to whose causes intelligent, caring people were willing to devote a year of their lives. By 1972, there seemed no political figure capable of holding a significant following through thirty minutes of "Meet the Press" . . .

Joe McGinniss
Heroes

The man we elect as our political leader Tuesday will preside these next four years, as we college students graduate class by class into the working world.

To which candidate will college students turn in 1980? Most students who attend Villanova University, the school where the Commerce and Finance college overflows, the school so conservative that it has not even a college democrats organization — most students here might want Ronald Reagan to lead them into the effusive world of dollars, big business, and success. Ronald Reagan will cut their taxes; Ronald Reagan will let their marketplace run freely.

If the concerns of college students today are indeed so shallow, then indeed, they will vote for Mr. Reagan.

Perhaps, though, there is some element that while still in their drive for success, appreciate the need for a true leader. They do not want to elect a man whose vision of America ranges only from his comfortable sofa in his warm living room, to his gently burning fireplace.

These college students, themselves leaders of tomorrow, want a man who sees the position and difficulties of all Americans. Ronald Reagan is not that man. Nothing could be more explicit, more perfect than Tony Auth's caricature for the Philadelphia Inquirer, of Mr. Reagan standing in a garbage-strewn street surrounded by decrepi t buildings, perhaps the South Bronx, insisting that "that government is best which governs least," while the ghetto dwellers listening to him can't stop laughing. They can't stop laughing.

College students today are also at the point in history where they can be aware of the effect of the media on an election, and they can demand discussion of the issues to counter its effect. They can demand that a candidate answer questions with facts and data, rather than with an attractive smile and a buzz-word. And these college students will not elect for an actor for president.

Can, then, the students who are dedicated to ideals of honesty and justice vote for the candidate of the traditional "people's" party, the Democrats, Jimmy Carter? The liberal New Republic put it best when it said, "In four years as president he (Carter) has failed by both the general standards of competent administration and the special standards of the liberal agenda. He has made our society less prosperous without making it more generous. He has made this country less respected and feared abroad without making it more loved."

And who could embody the words "media candidate" more perfectly than Jimmy Carter? His every opinion, worse yet, every decision is influenced by every changing poll. It has been asked what Jimmy Carter stands for. It has been said he stands for getting re-elected.

College students, ready to enter the working world, should not be satisfied with either of these two candidates, nor should they be satisfied with their vapid oratory and rhetoric.

College students should not, and do not want a god to lead them. They are, somewhat happily, and somewhat sadly, more practical today than the students of perhaps 12 years ago. But financial security matters to them, energy security matters, and so do the hopes that the United States can promote a more happy and humane life for its citizens, and a more peaceful life to the citizens of the world.

At a time when the values of the left and right seem to be merging in our society, the students, the people just about ready to enter society, should want a leader who can both stabilize their economy, and maintain and promote peace in the world.

In 1980, college students can vote for someone who comes close to meeting these criterion. They can vote for someone who is conservative in economics, but liberal when it comes to defense and social issues. They can vote for John Anderson.

It has been said that Anderson, too, is a media candidate. But there is a difference between a man like Jimmy Carter, who has taken the media to use as his tool — and John Anderson, who impressed the media by articulating so closely the brand new goals of liberals in America.

It is a new type of liberalism, though. Those who vote for John Anderson will do it perhaps not so much enthusiastically as rationally.

The old type of liberalism died this year. It died as Sen. Edward Kennedy, who only one year ago had seemed so certainly the Democratic nominee, lost that, and was left to Hyannis Port to watch his party endorse draft registration and tax cuts.

And a sad sort of death toll sounded last week as Sen. Eugene McCarthy, the students' candidate of 1968, who had moved so many to give up a year of their lives to his causes of peace and justice in Vietnam — Eugene McCarthy, whose surprise victory that cold winter in New Hampshire had seemed to throw Lyndon Johnson and all he stood for out of the White House for good — old liberal Gene McCarthy last week endorsed Ronald Reagan for president in 1980.

Morally, If Not Legally Acceptable

Protecting an Anonomous Source

Perhaps once in a lifetime, perhaps never at all, a person may be forced into the situation of weighing the importance of doing what is correct, moral, and humane, against the importance of his own life.

Most often, and most understandably, the desire for safety tips the scales, and the individual may return to normal, daily living. But sometimes — sometimes the scales balance. What does one do then?

One such person in such a situation decided to strike a compromise between what he felt was his moral obligation and his own safety.

That individual had information concerning a serious crime, but was too frightened for his own life to hand the information to legal authorities. He chose, instead, to give the information to a Villanova professor of sociology, Dr. William Waegel.

Waegel took this information to legal authorities on the condition that he not be forced to reveal his source. But the authorities, unable to solve the case otherwise, have come back to Waegel, and called him to testify before a federal grand jury to reveal the name of his source. Waegel refused to endanger the life of the informant by revealing his name.

Under the investigative grand jury system, Waegel could be jailed until he divulges the information.

This, Waegel refuses to do.

Sometimes, souces must remain anonymous so that important information might be obtained. We wouldn't know about Watergate if it weren't for anonymous sources. And in Philadelphia, District Attorney Edward Rendell and United States Attorney Peter Vaira are finding the importance of these souces in the case of murders at the Richard Allen Homes. In a letter to the Philadelphia Inquirer, they contend that it would be advantageous if "others came forward to give direct evidence of some of the criminality they have seen."

But potential sources of information are afraid. Law enforcement officials cannot, in practicality, protect these individuals' lives. They must sometimes have other channels through which they can work.

Some channels still legally available to them are clergy, doctors, and lawyers, who, when working within their fields of profession, cannot be subpoenaed by grand juries to reveal their sources.

Unfortunately, professors do not fall within this legal purvue. The person who spoke to Dr. Waegel obviously did not know that.

Nor did Dr. Waegel know that the promises of government officials that his information would be kept confidential and that the identity of the source would not be sought or disclosed would be broken.

Although it is not legislated, the University professor, as an informed and responsible individual, can and should be there for the community, students, and others who have an interest in justice and believe that standing by and watching is morally equivalent to committing the crime.

Dr. Waegel's decision to not reveal his souce is a moral, courageous act. Even if it may not be acceptable legally.

Several faculty members have initiated a legal defense fund to aid Dr. Waegel in handling the current and projected legal expenses which at present total $2900.

Dr. Brian Jones and Dr. George Murphy have formulated a letter which has been sent to each faculty person. Donations will be accepted through the Sociology department.

Liddy's Comic Masterpiece

The New York Times' Book Review called G. Gordon Liddy's autobiography and Watergate story, Will, a "comic masterpiece."

Liddy's whole story could conceivably be thought of as humorous, perhaps. It's the story of a man convicted on nine counts of felony, stripped of his professional ranking, but still able to fill a concert hall.

Just eight years after the illegal activities which marred Richard Nixon's second presidential campaign, the Times can describe one of the prime movers as a man harmless as a bragging child. Gordon Liddy takes the I'm-glad-we-did-it-and-we-should-have-done-more-of-it approach, says the review.

Just eight years after Watergate, the Times can describe the break-in, which Liddy engineered, as a keystone kops kaper.

Perhaps Americans had been so jarred by such blatant corruption and meanness in their highest authority figures that, when confronted with them again, instead of shrinking in disgust, they have chosen to meet them with nervous laughter, even cynical admiration.

After all, if political leaders are going to be bad, they might as well be really bad. And who could be worse than Gordon Liddy — a man who overcame his childhood fears by forcing himself to eat rats, to climb trees in thunderstorms. So unafraid was Liddy by the time he grew up, that he would cheat, steal, murder, even kill himself for the True Cause of Richard Nixon.

There's a fascinating man. The people buy his books, give him rave reviews (he has the best prose style of all the Watergate defendants, exclaims the New Republic), and college students clamour for his lectures.

Pretty failure, eh? One can bet that even the stoic Liddy has trouble suppressing a snicker or two over that. It probably brings a smile to many of the familiar faces of the Nixon era — because although Liddy may have served the most time in prison, he certainly hasn't made the most money of them, with John Dean's book being made into a TV movie, and with John Ehrlichman lecturing the Bible circuit.

Gordon will do alright, though. Villanova will probably crowd the fieldhouse Thursday night for a few laughs. After the election, Liddy should be hilarious. Our dismal choices for president this year, after all, could never have been possible without the media-campaign-as-an-art tactics of Liddy's old boss, Dick Nixon.

Say, even Richard Nixon must find this funny sometimes. All he has to do is walk along the sands of California, muttering to himself, "they don't have Dick Nixon to kick around anymore . . ." But they wouldn't kick him around if they had him, now. Instead, they call on him to give expert commentary on the presidential campaigns, of all things.

What would really be funny is if Liddy, Ehrlichman, Nixon, and the others all pooled together their book royalties, and lecture stipends (Liddy could throw in the $3000 he'll be getting from Villanova), if they all would pool their resources together and give it just one more run for the money in 1984. It would be a comic masterpiece.

And Gordon Liddy, he could campaign, or do whatever he does, wearing a wildcat t-shirt! It would be great publicity!

Economics - Carter Style

By ROBERT A. MONTSERRAT
CHAIRMAN, CONSERVATIVE PARTY

The biggest difficulty America faces today is a disintegrating economy. The major issue in this election year is whether the President is capable of solving our current problems or whether new leadership is necessary. Even the most cursory examination of this administration's record bears out the incontrovertable conclusion that Jimmy Carter is debilitating our economic ability to produce goods and services.

What does Jimmy Carter see as our current difficulties? He does not identify our problems as a record shattering inflation rate, absolutely unacceptable unemployment or our energy crisis. Instead, he perceives our problem as a "National Malaise" and a "Crisis of Confidence." He seems to put the cart before the horse. A National Malaise is not our problem, rather it is the result of our problems. When Carter does address a real situation such as the inflation rate, he erroneously identifies its cause. Carter has called the inflation rate OPEC induced. This false premise is easily refutable on economic grounds, but one simple fact should suffice: Germany and Japan import twice as much of their oil as we do yet have a fraction of our inflation rate.

When Gerald Ford left the oval office in the beginning of 1977 he left us with the "intolerable" inflation rate of 4.8 percent. Under President Carter's economic leadership, that figure has quite nearly trebled to 14.3 percent. Where has it come from?

Government spending, deficit spending in particular has fueled the growth of the inflation rate and its cancerous implications. The last Republican budget of 1946 called for $377 billion in expenditures. Fiscal 1981's "balanced budget" is in excess of $646 billion. Moreover, it is another $30 billion in deficit. Apart from the fact that the tax payer has gained very little in terms of goods and services for a 60 percent increase in Federal spending, the financing of this uncontrolled increase in government spending is the root cause of inflation and far from stimulating the economy, is bankrupting it.

Massive growth in federal spending accompanied by heavy deficits is the legacy of the Carter administration. The public debt has grown from $620 billion in 1976 to well over $870 billion in 1980. The monetization of the $250 billion difference in four years is the direct cause of our historic inflation rate. Further, Federal borrowing of such unprecedented proportions directly competes with business for capital resources and destimulates the economy.

Such large increases in deficit spending represent the siphoning off of potential investment funds from industry as the Carter Administration "crowds out" the private sector from the capital markets. Under the pressure of such massive borrowing the average interest rate paid the public debt has risen from 6.9 percent in 1976 to 9.2 percent in 1980. Meanwhile business, faced by declining sales and increasing costs, both due to the inflationary spiral, must borrow to survive. Business, however, cannot afford the rise in interest rates imposed by government borrowing. This is the major factor behind the $11,800 business failings in 1979.

The facts bear out the costs to the nation of unreasonable Federal deficit spending by the Carter administration. In 1977 with an industrial capacity utilization rate of well over 80 percent, there was no need for such deficit spending. Carter must have realized that pumping up an already stimulated economy would overheat it. Deficit spending by the Carter administration has over-extended the boundaries of the production possibilities of the economy. The increases in the money supply have greatly exceeded the slight increase in the production of goods and services. The resulting situation today is an unbelievable inflation rate that evades the national economic base.

The Carter administration has responded with nearly $100 billion in budgetal stimulative deficits in 1979 and 1980 alone. The direct costs to the taxpayers have increased as well. Debt service, $43 billion in 1976 has risen to just over $80 billion in 1980. That means that the cost of servicing the public debt accumulated in 200 years of government has increased from $195 to $360 for every man, woman and child in the country in just four short years. The Carter administration has demonstrated a consistent inability to appreciate the economic realities of the nation. Jimmy Carter is substituting the dead hand of public subsidy for the invisible hand of private enterprise, the political benefits of posh spending for that of the national good. He has greatly accelerated the gradual movement of the Federal government towards insolvency. To call this administration inept is simply not enough. Jimmy Carter exhibits more than incompetence; that is fiscal irresponsibility. Carter's gain at the expense of the people is the misuse of their trust, the abuse of power.

The further weakening of an already infeebled dollar is probably the last blow to any pretense of a world economy based upon the dollar. Domestic income has worsened so much under Carter that in spite of a devalued dollar and high elasticity of demand for American goods abroad, the balance of payments is in terrible straits. Until 1976 the United States had a fairly even balance of payments. Under Carter, we have experienced three straight deficits each in excess of $25 billion. If one considers the transition of American corporate ownership of foreigners, the extraction of the national wealth exceeds $100 billion under Carter. The domestic record is the cause of the decline of American international economic.

One must give Carter credit though. Not everything is down. Some things are up. The prime rate is up from 6.35 percent in 1976 (IV) to over 12 percent in 1980. Investments are operating load have been stymied pushing down growth for the future and present production. Mortgage rates have skyrocketed from 9 percent in 1976 (IV) to over 13 percent today.

What does all this mean to consumers like you and me? It means prices have increased a full 41 percent during Carter's administration. It means that if you earned $100 in December 1976, you took home $91.64 in real earnings; that figure now stands at $82.60. This represents a decline in real income of about ten percent. At the present rate, the average worker will be living 18.8 percent worse off in 1984 than he did in 1976.

The inability to forge a direction in which society will move and along what path is not something that can be blamed upon anyone else, but the man in charge. The crisis in confidence is a crisis in leadership. The economic record of the Carter administration is one of calamity. If you approve of this kind of economic leadership, if you can tolerate America's economic decline and with it your standard of living, you have the opportunity on Nov. 4 to ask for a repeat performance. Otherwise, the time has come for you an active citizen in a partcipatory democracy to consider other leadership. We simply cannot afford Jimmy Carter any longer.

The Presidential Debates

BY DR. RUSSELL T. CHURCH SPEECH COMMUNICATIONS DEPT.

It was tragic that there were only two debates between the candidates for the American presidency. While many might complain that there were only two debates or that Carter should have debated Anderson, these complaints are overshadowed by a greater tragedy.

Journalists and other critics seem not to understand the potential for the debates to allow the American public to make judgements about the candidates as policy makers in a competitive situation. Despite the drawbacks of the formats of the two debates, it did offer the American public the opportunity to judge these two men as problem solvers.

This critic believes that good journalists would have aided the public in focusing on issue oriented questions. The tragedy of the great debates and indeed the campaign of 1980 was the failure of most journalists, especially on the electronic media, to maintain a primary focus upon issues. For example, a typical analysis of the Reagan-Anderson debate was that while Anderson had the greater command of detail Reagan remained cool under fire. Such commentary was a comparison of Anderson's understanding of the issues with Reagan's demeanor. The media reaction to the Carter-Reagan debate was similar. The instant critics were most concerned with who appeared "presidential" or "subtle" or "defensive" or "mean."

Although such comments might be valid, such criticism does not focus public attention upon what should be primary — the issues. The criticism of the Anderson-Reagan debate was a comparison of knowledge with image. The beginning of any critiques might begin with a comparison of both candidates' knowledge of the issues but to compare knowledge with image is nonsensical, irrelevant and a journalistic disservice.

I am not suggesting that journalists and other critics should not seize upon an opportunity to make singular or comparative image evaluations. Such evaluations do seem to be part of relevant political commentary. However, in a process designed to help Americans choose their leaders and problem solvers, the most relevant and best commentary should focus upon their problem solving abilities.

Journalists should take the primary responsibility for the failure of their commentary to have a primary issue orientation. Perhaps contemporary critics have been too influenced by the media and communication theorists who have argued that the electronic media is best suited to handle image. Ironically, in a time long ago and in what seems a galaxy far away, the analysis of issues was once the primary focus of journalistic criticism. Candidates and campaign strategists have been in part responsible for this shift. It is clear that television can handle issues and images effectively. Indeed, the early years of commercial television and, to a certain extent contemporary public television, directly deny this conventional wisdom about issues and image.

The real tragedy of the 1980 campaign from my perspective is that the conventional wisdom has become a self-fulfilling prophecy. Recently, the tragedy was most clearly revealed by a commentary by Frank Reynolds of ABC News. He suggested that the public judgement of political candidates based on media image was both necessary and good. The American public, however, cannot hold candidates responsible for their images, but the American public can and should hold candidates responsible for their stands on the issues. Furthermore, the media can and should help in this task. It is a task fundamental to democracy.

SUBURBAN Responds

To the Editor:

Assuming that you, too, believe in fair play, I respond to your editorial on "Press Accounts Are Unbalanced."

1. "The Suburban" would like to — and does — publish everything possible that is GOOD about Villanova. The University, whether it likes it or not — and far too often it makes it quite clear that it does not! — is a part of Radnor township.

Therefore, as just one example of the "positive" news of Villanova that we have published recently, I cite the coverage of last week's "Special Olympics." Also, related coverage of "Villanovans for Life," which seems to get more support from us than from the academic community. And a host of other events thoughout the year.

2. Unfortunately, "The Suburban" also finds it necessary to publish the other side. When neighbors find their porch furniture missing each September — and some of it turns up in student dorms — they really are entitled to know where it is — and who took it. This may be considered "negative" reporting, of course, by some.

3. This newspaper has gone strongly to bat for the students and the University in connection with the railroad overpass, in order to end the threat to student life and safety. At the same time, it is difficult to overlook the idiocy of students who continue to take their lives in their hands by: A. Pacing the tracks. B. Crossing dangerous Lancaster ave. between the traffic signals. Almost like clockwork, another student gets clumped off — and we have to report the sad news. And, yes, we do not enjoy it.

4. When we report about "local resentment of the University," that is reporting, not editorializing. The fact is, there is resentment, caused by the fact that there is always a small minority on campus that won't clean up its act. This may be construed by some as negative reporting. To say that these are unflattering to the University is undoubtedly true; but to intimate that they are untrue, "because when local residents read something like this, they are convinced it is true," is a contradiction in terms. In any event, do not confuse the news stories with the editorial page, which does appear to be in danger of doing.

And so we come to "Skippy," an editorial written by the undersigned. True, I did not contact the administration — and perhaps I should. In any event I have expressed my regret to Fr. Wesson that I did not. But I still wonder whether it was necessary. The facts were all there in the letter to the relatives of the late Father "Skippy" McKee. The administration was not asking their advice; it was giving them a gun-to-the-head ultimatum. It did not seem necessary to reaffirm what was already in black and white. With reference to which bodies were interred, I confess an error. Originally, I read the letter and thought it also meant the bodies on the main campus in front of the chapel. Later in re-reading it, but after writing the editorial, I realized that only the bodies at St. Mary's hall were the subject of removal. I thought I had made the correction; obviously I did not. However, I should point out that my photographer was sent to Villanova to take a picture of the graves at St. Mary's Hall — and that is the picture that appeared, not of those on the main campus. To those who may have been misled, I apologize.

However, I do not apologize one whit for my remarks concerning the propriety of the removal of the bodies to a completely offcampus resting place, as desirable as Calvary Cemetery may be. I believe it to have been perfectly apropos that the relatives of Father McKee should come and object vigorously that those who expected to be buried on campus should remain there. I have no objection to them being moved from St. Mary's hall, nor do they. But it would appear obvious, even to the most obtuse, that the logical place to have buried them in the first place was directly opposite the old rectory, across the main walkway leading to the chapel, to provide a balance in a spot which is unlikely to be built on for years, if ever. There, in the company of their peers, they could have rested eternally at peace.

One would not expect the Augustinians to voice their agreement with Fr. McKee's relatives publicly. The late Fr. John F. Burns would be able to quote, chapter and verse, what happens to those who dissent from the top brass, and to what "Siberias" they are dispatched. In this respect, human nature does not change.

Is the editor unfriendly toward Villanova? Not at all. As a pre-war student at Villanova, I remember "Skippy" McKee and a host of other teachers with rather fond memories. And I did send my daughter to Villanova; she graduated in 1980.

I might suggest, however, that communication with the University has always been difficult, mostly because it has considered itself an enclave which really is not part of Radnor township — except when it is necessary to get a building permit or a variance. I do not blame the Villanova Public Relations Office for this; on the contrary, I have nothing but great respect for Gene Ruane, whom I have known for more than 30 years. I have also known Gene to be left in ignorance, by higher authority, of events of which he should have been informed, and which made his job, at times, impossible.

I do consider this all a "tempest in a teapot." If you wanted to see a real contest, go back to your files for 1969, when I became engaged in a contest of veracity with no less than the University President. Interestingly, at that time I received considerable faculty support, albeit it "underground." You'd better believe it was "underground!"

And yet I remember, rather fondly, those words of the "Alma Mater" which, it appears, few if any freshmen are forced — as we were — to learn: "Villanova! Villanova! Sing a hymn of praise. To our dear old Alma Mater — and our college days!"

Most Cordially,

American Morality

Dear Editor:

"If everyone in this country took your attitude, this country would be taken over tomorrow." Those of us who resisted draft registration have heard this argument many times. But what most people fail to see, as they hide behind their flag, is that all the peoples of the world have more in common as human beings (a mind, a heart and a soul) than we as Americans have in common (we were born within the same national boundaries); therefore, there would be a much greater chance of all the peoples in the world sharing an anti-war attitude. If that were so, there would be no wars and this world would be a lot more beautiful place to live in.

All of those who listen to this argument scream that this is an impossibility, but as human beings we must live up to our moral and ethical values, and our responsibility to our fellow man outweighs our responsibility to our country. Ask yourself this; if a friend were to come up and to ask you to kill someone for him so that you may enjoy the privilege of his friendship, would the worse evil be in betraying your friends or in killing another human being? I think that you know the answer.

It has been argued that we need "raw military muscle to defend our interests abroad." What about the interests of other human beings? To defend people such as the Shah of Iran, whom we aided while he tortured countless thousands to death, so that we could get his oil. Would it not have been easier for people to drive Datsuns instead of El Doradoes? Was that big car comfort really worth all of those lives? What of other governments we aid "in the name of national security" who destroy the meaning of the words "human rights." In these countries we see an army defending governments responsible for countless murders. "Wrong!", you scream at me, "We have a new human rights policy." I would once have argued the same point, however, upon a visit to the State Dept. this summer I was advised that the human rights policy would be dropped if it was deemed necessary for national security. That is a very broad term which seems to reduce the issue to a show-piece.

Freedom of choice, whatever happened to it? Does a man no longer have a choice on whether or not to enter the army? Can a man no longer decide whether or not to follow his own convictions? You can register and later declare yourself a conscientious objector, but a true objector to war would show no support for the military establishment. To register for the draft is to show a de facto support.

A great man once said "All men are created equal." No statement could be truer. Resistance to the draft is not done by a man out of his hate for his country, but rather, it is done out of a love for his world and for his fellow man. His fellow man includes his countrymen; he shows his love for his country by trying to save him the horrors of war.

V.F.L. Complaint

Dear Editor,

We, of the Villanovans for Life, believe the students of the University should be made aware of certain announcements being made on WIFI Stereo 92 FM. These announcements are from NARAL Foundation (National Abortion Rights Action League) and concern the very controversial issue of abortion.

The announcements are dramatically opposed to the philosophy of our pro-life oriented organization, and while we respect the right of NARAL to air their beliefs, we believe that WIFI is not the proper medium through which to express these opinions.

The announcements involve an interview with a rape victim. Following this interview the announcer says:

"Should she be forced to remain pregnant? Many say yes. Every woman pregnant from rape should be forced to remain pregnant . . ."

WIFI is mainly a top-40 station and therefore it's listening audience consists of people ranging from 12 to 40 years of age. Surely NARAL advocates, as well as WIFI Staff members, cannot believe that 12 to 16 year old girls and boys have sufficient knowledge of the abortion issue to make responsible decisions.

Therefore we are making an effort to prevent the broadcasting of these announcements.

We would greatly appreciate help from any student or faculty member who would be willing to write a letter of objection to WIFI 92.

The address of WIFI 92 is as follows:
Stereo WIFI 92 FM
Business office
1 Bala Cynwyd Plaza
Bala Cynwyd, PA 19004

Thank you for your cooperation.

Response

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Dr. H. Malik's evaluation of Iraq and Iran (October 3, 1980). I think the evaluation was weak and superficial, and it failed to mention the crucial aspects of the hostilities between the two countries.

According to Dr. Malik, the dispute started "when Iraq protested the fact that the Iranian navy took control of the three islands in the entrance of the straits of Hormuz." If Iraq's main purpose of the war was to settle the "island dispute" then, I believe the war should have been centered in the Persian Gulf, not along the Shaat Al Arab Waterway.

According to Dr. Malik, the Iraqis had "threatened to blockade the strait of Hormuz and stop all Iranian exports" if the three islands were not given back. I believe that the idea of an Iraqi blockade of the Persian Gulf (or the strait of Hormuz) to stop Iranian exports is absurd when one fails to realize that Iran can, in its turn, blockade the Persian Gulf (or the Strait) to stop all Iraqi exports.

Having argued with Dr. Malik's evaluation, I believe I should now present my personal evaluation of the situation. I think Iraq tried to do to Iran what U.S.S.R. did to Afganistan. Iraq, which has the second highest shiite population (Iran having the highest), started to fear that the chaotic Islamic revoluntionary ideology of Iran might spread to its country. Saddam Hussein, realizing that he might be overthrown like the Shah, decided to go on the offensive and attack the dilapitated and what seemed to be "weak" Iran. To start a war with Iran was beneficial to Iraq and some other countries. Iraq would hopefully be able to regain the power over the Shaat Al Arab waterway (something Iraq wouldn't have dared doing, while the Shah ruled) and meanwhile try to overthrow the despotic Khomeini.

Respectfully yours,
Pakrad Markarian

Quad Incident

To the Editor,

I am writing in reaction to a seemingly insignificant happening that occurred in the Quad last Monday night. While most of us were either studying or watching Monday Night Football, a disturbance broke the monotony and drew between 25-50 Sullivan residents outside.

As it turned out, someone on the second floor of Sullivan was blaring a recording out his window that was, to say the very least, quite graphic. The noise, however, was made by some girls from Sheehan who were voicing comments across to the guys. As a small crowd formed in front of Sullivan, a yelling match ensued. No sooner had it started, then it was broken up by several Sullivan R.A.'s. They came out and told the guys to go back to their rooms. I haven't been sent back to my room since second grade! To quote one, "If you aren't back in your room in two minutes, I'm going to take your I.D. and write you up."

Now the yelling match switched from guys and girls to guys and R.A.'s. I personally asked, "What are we doing that's so wrong? This is the most excitement this campus has seen in two months." An R.A. looked at me and said, "That's the rule;" nothing else! Now I want to ask someone, (anyone) "What is the rule?" What rule(s) have we broken by hanging out in the Quad and having a little fun? Granted, this incident is not exactly my definition of a great time at college, but it was a change of pace from the same old dull routine around here, thanks to the newly enforced alcohol policy.

We weren't hurting anyone; we didn't intend to hurt anyone. We just went out for a few laughs. I think it's a bit ridiculous for the R.A.'s to have to come out there and act like parents disciplining pre-school children, and I don't think they deserve the bulk of the blame. They (the R.A.'s) get pressure from the Administration and are forced to act as Patrol Monitors on the recess ground for ten-year olds. Hey, we're all twenty-year olds here, we're all in college and we don't need people telling us not to drink, not to smoke, etc. An R.A. is a resident assistant let him/her assist, not baby sit. Restricting the social life on campus in one thing, but remember this, anything too extreme can cause severe problems . . .

Where's John?

To the Editor:

I hate being the person that has to break the news to everyone, but the song "(Just Like) Starting Over" is not the latest release by John Lennon. It is only the latest in a series of cleverly master-minded bootlegs by Neil Innes, the Monty Python player who recorded "Cheese and Onions" as part of a Beatles parody on Saturday Night Live several years ago.

In order to avoid any further disillusionments, let me tell you what John's up to. He hasn't even been near a recording studio in seven years (Yes, that's right, seven. You'll understand when you listen to Walls and Bridges all the way through, backwards.), he's been letting his hair grow and the cows are doing fine. Oh yeah, Yoko says hello.

That's it. Stay tuned, more clues to follow.

G. Gordon Liddy, Watergate conspirator, will speak on campus, Thursday, Nov. 6, at the Fieldhouse.

This event has prompted the Villanovan to ask students: Do you know who G. Gordon Liddy is? Will you go to see him speak? What do you think of a convicted felon, Liddy, making money lecturing and writing about his criminal activities?

I know who he is. I had planned on seeing him. I think that what he is doing is good. He's letting the people know how corrupt government can be; I'm not saying that he was right in what he did.
Mike Baker
Senior

Yes, I know who he is. I would go to see him. I'm with the Union, so I should. I think that what he did was wrong, but everybody in Watergate made money. They were all wrong too.
Lisa McLindon
Freshman

Yes, he was indicted in Watergate. Yes, I want to see him. I think that it's sort of ludicrous that he's making money from being a criminal; but, he's giving the American people an inside story on what happened.
Mary Lank
Senior

Yes, he was involved in the Watergate scandal. He's a sick, carzy man. Yeah, I'd probably go to see him. Everybody else does it; all those politicians are convicted felons.
Lou Nastasi
Senior

No, I don't know who he is, but would do the same thing, lecturi and writing books. If people a willing to listen, I would take a vantage of the situation.
Lisa Garbarino

Yes, he was in Watergate. I'd like to see him if I have the free time. I don't see anything wrong with what he's doing.

Student Government Introduces Grievance Form

By LOU CASANI
COMMERCE AND FINANCE SENATOR

In a constant effort to ascertain student ideas, concerns and complaints, the Student Government introduces the Grievance Form. The form itself is of simple composition, yet it has a proven record as an efficient method of communication between students and elected representatives. Unfortunately, there was a time span before us when the form was unused and student communication remained silent. It is our intention to put an end to such silence.

The Student Government seeks total, not partial, student participation. To achieve this objective, the distribution process will provide each respective Dean's office, the Connelly Center and Resident Assistant with blank forms. At this point, we rely on simple student action: stop by, pick up a form, voice your opinion, and return it to the Grievance box in the Student Government office, room 204 Dougherty Hall, between 9:00 and 5:00, Monday through Friday. Grievance Forms will be available starting Monday, November 3rd. Remember, student input is the paramount impetus needed not only for the quest of responsible student government, but also for effective student legislation.

Update

The Student Government is currently focusing on a variety of concerns:

Alcohol Information Committee. This undertaking involves a two-part effort in addressing the alcohol policy at Villanova. Phase one is the accumulation of alcohol related information. This includes researching in-ner/outer state schools' policies, state laws, and correspondence with Pennsylvania representatives, and alcohol related statistics at local, state and national levels. Once the study is completed, phase two will induce legislation in the Pennsylvania assembly to lower drinking ages. Projected completion of this process is three years.

Student Bill of Rights. This idea is an attempt to update and consolidate student rights that are currently published in the Blue Book. Research over the past year has prompted some amendments which are based on three sources: other universities in comparable conditions, American Association of University Professor publications, and past rights of Villanovans. Our goal is to channel the Bill of Rights through the Student Life Committee with eventual passage by the University Senate in the spring of 1981.

Green Acres Proposal. Likewise, this motion will originate in the Student Life Committee with the expectation of senatorial approval in the spring of 1981. The thrust of this proposal will be not only to maintain, but to enhance the aesthetic appearance of our campus.

Student Life Survey. This survey has been prepared and will probably start circulation by early November. This survey will aid the Student Government from both an informational and prospective legislational standpoint.

Sidelines.

The Facilitating Committee is smoothing out its early organizational sluggishness. Senior Week is pending approval by Fr. President Driscoll. To the senior class, from the Student Government; thanks for your support of Senior Week! Check FYI for our Recruitment meeting on November 5th.

Alumnus Battles Town, Courts

By DAVE COSKEY

The dust had just begun to set-e from the latest spurt from Mt. . Helens last summer as Tom evin camped in its shadow. Little d the 1968 Villanova Political cience graduate know that his n mountain was ready to rum-e back in his home town of oodbine, N.J., in Cape May ounty.

Levin came to Villanova in 1964 t of Wildwood Catholic High chool. The Delurey resident who ter would become known for his tspoken personality toned his lents here by writing for Con-ts, then a magazine of student nions.

Upon graduation and fulfilment graduate studies at Glassboro llege, Levin began a teaching career that made several stops before ending today in Cape May City.

The events that would force Levin into the limelight began in 1978. Seven days before the local primary election he received a sample ballot in the mail listing possible candidates for various municipal positions.

The upsetting factor for Levin was the inclusion of a local businessman named Ted DiSantis. Levin felt that it was impossible to hold the job of treasurer for a company that had business dealings with the city and still sit on the city council. When Levin noticed the lack of a mayoralty candidate on the Democratic side of the ticket; that did it. "I just didn't think he should be able to have the position he was running for with the job he had," says Levin.

The next morning Tom Levin was written in on the Democratic side after a party affiliation change. "I did everything I could, door to door, loudspeakers in my car and I only spent $78.00 on my whole campaign," says Levin.

The prospect for a decisive win by a Democrat looked bleak. Cape May County has long been a Republican stronghold, a fact Levin's father realized long ago when he disbanded his Democratic party for that of the Republicans. At the polls Levin tried to act as a challenger, yet no one would even let him approach them. Instead they flocked around his Republican counterparts who acknowledged their supporters with an open bar reception.

Later that evening the shock hit, Tom Levin had won, by 21 votes! According to Levin, "I feel no matter what a person displays outwardly, when he enters the polling box there is no one left to impress, he votes from his heart. I think people felt it was time to clean things up and I was the one they chose to do it."

The majority agreed. There was no honeymoon with his Republican city council, war broke out January 2, 1979, the day he was sworn in.

Levin spoke out on problems he felt needed immediate solutions and corrections. For example, he felt the salary of $1000 was too great for the librarian, especially since Woodbine has no library. Along the lines he felt that the borough clerk of a town of only 2200 of middle to lower middle class families didn't need to be paid $22,000. Especially since she had an assistant paid $15,000.

Tom Levin broke the camels back though when he questioned Mr. DiSantis' firm of Foundations and Structures. The corporation held contract on supervision and use of the city landfill, one of the few left in the entire county. They paid Woodbine $12,000 annually and in return had reported incomes of over $250,000 from the fill. In fact some of that revenue came from Woodbine itself, who paid to use the facility. Mr. DiSantis and his brother-in-law both sat on the city council and this outraged Levin.

Levin drew first blood and not it was the councils move. Monthly meetings were changed for the first time in the towns history to bimonthly meetings, even though population has been on a steady decrease in Woodbine. Some of these meetings were held in the afternoon in case anyone worked evenings and could not attend. Being an elementary school teacher Levin found it impossible to attend these meetings. Following over the next several months Levin suffered wage cuts, reduction of powers and finally a recall attempt.

The recall attempt supported by Mr. DiSantis was thrown out of court because the form of government Woodbine had did not have a provision for recalls.

Finally this past summer Levin fulfilled a lifelong dream, to travel through all fifty states. It was while Levin camped out in the wilderness of the West that the Woodbine city council found the loophole they needed. If any mayor misses a certain number of meetings he could be ousted. So on August 8, 1980 the motion was carried and Tom Levin became an ex-mayor.

The story spread from Florida radio talk shows to west coast newspapers instantly. One newspaper that passed on the story was

Columnist Speaks of Literature

Zen and the Art of Flight

BY MARIANNE LAVELLE

Paul Heinz is not a Sunday ilot.

He believes the title of the eekly column he has written for he Philadelphia Bulletin for 12 ears, "Sunday Pilot," is a mis-omer.

"What I'm trying to do is not ivolous, and it is such a strange olumn, that it reaches many ypes of people, more than those ho just read the paper on Sun-ay, or those who just read the orts section," he said.

Heinz is not only an active pilot nd member of the board of di-ectors of the Aircraft Owners and ilots Association and aviation olumnist but is also a lawyer ith the Philadelphia firm of bermayer, Rebmann, Maxwell & ippel. A quarter of his practice s to do with aviation cases. einz also was instrumental in ob-aining the Boeing 707 exhibit at e Benjamin Franklin Institute Philadelphia.

Last week, he spoke in Dr. obert Kantra's Honors course iterature of Flying, about the pe of literature he writes every eek, and about great flight liter-ure.

"I don't think of myself as a od writer," said Heinz. I think I ve the love of aviation, and the otivation to convey it," he said. Heinz shows he is not just a unday pilot in his attitude to-ard flying. "Flying is within me. 's a part of me. When flying, I ant to know all about it, to roughly understand it, just as u want to know more about meone you love," he said.

Heinz spoke about the problems literature of flight today.

"The superhuman, daredevil, aggressive pilot that predominated in the early teens and 1920s is of the era no longer ours," explained Heinz. "Today, anyone can fly. An airline pilot goes up there and plugs into automatic pilot and sits there. They can be button pushers.

"What happens is the characters of the best, most interesting literature of flight are not there anymore. The hairy stories don't happen anymore. Technology has changed that, and the literature we read must also change.

"I think there are two levels of understanding literature and of flying," said Heinz.

"The first level is superficial. You are there flying because it's thrilling; it's escape; it has nothing to do with technology yet.

"But the second stage is crucial," he said. It has to do with the perfection of technique and total control. Flying is not totally technical, there is a certain transformation of totality. The pilot is no longer earthy, he dares the ultimate, he reaches, for lack of a better word, a nirvana.

"You and your aircraft are considered one. The pilot says 'We are at . . . 'so many feet, referring to the airplane and himself. When asked what aircraft you are flying, you say, 'We are a Cessna 205.' That is the language used by pilots.

"There is a great difficulty expressing this, but the best literature about flying talks about both these aspects, the technological and the spiritual," he said.

Some authors studied in the Literature of Flying course, Heinz noted, fulfilled this requirement: novels of the French Antione de St.-Exupery, and of Richard Bach (A Gift of Wings, Biplane) and the book Stick and Rudder by Wolfgang Langewiesche, for example.

"When I was an undergraduate (at Kenyon University), the humanities buildings were on one side of the campus, and the science buildings were on the other side — and it seemed that one couldn't cross the path comfortably. My thought is that good literature and good pilots have to be able to bridge that kind of gap."

Seminar Defines Position

By MARY ANNE BILZ AND VICKY PARENTE

The Student Activities Office recently sponsored a series of alcohol seminars designed to familiarize student leaders, R.A.'s and hall representatives with the present alcohol policy. According to Dean of Student Activities, Father Robert Martin, "Though the policy is basically the same as last year, there are more restrictions on drinking in dorms than in the past."

These seminars come at a time when the use of alcohol on campus is a controversial issue among students and administrators. Students feel much more "restricted" and claim they can't have a good time with friends because of the recent crackdowns on kegs and parties. According to Father Martin, one of the purposes of the seminars are "to encourage students to have a good time at events without drinking."

The two hour programs were divided into four segments — policy, primary prevention, alcohol as a drug and liability. Along with Father Martin, a panel of administrators composed of Lucy Gorski, Chris Mueller, Kathy Cart, Steve Steckler and Matt Christensen contributed information concerning alcohol consumption and its effects.

During each program, a questionnaire was passed out to the students describing the drinking behavior of eight fictional people. Students were asked to rate them on a scale of one through eight — one being the person with the most responsible drinking habits, eight being the person who uses alcohol in the most irresponsible way.

This questionnaire, along with other literature distributed at the seminars outlined the effects of alcohol as well as some of the pressures to drink imposed on students by their peers. One of the points which was frequently stressed during the seminars was the ability to have fun at a party or dance while exercising self-control about drinking. Another important aspect of the programs was to inform students of the liabilities that they would incur as a result of serving alcohol at a party on campus.

Each seminar drew to a close with a discussion of the history of alcohol and the effects of various forms of drink as well as the kind of drinking behavior that results from using various forms of alcohol. Newsletters were distributed explaining how the body responds to the intake of alcohol, how the body goes through the process of sobering up and why a drinking binge often results in that dreaded affliction — the hangover.

Ithan Bridge 'Legend' Examined

By MIKE GIAMMARCO

A boring little trestle it was, weatherbeaten and doomed to rust with age, serving no purpose but to support the P&W as it chugged over Ithan Avenue.

One dark and peaceful night, when the residents of Villanova were fast asleep, shadowy figures gathered beneath the overpass, heavily armed and prepared for the long tedious hours ahead.

They planned their work, distributed their tools, and toiled throughout the night. At the break of dawn, no one expected the transformation that had taken place.

"Legend" has it that the first mysterious paint-dousing took place long beyond the memories of the oldest residents. It is commonly believed that the local fraternities devised this practice in preparation for a homecoming long ago. The old rusty girders and bare grey slabs of concrete had literally changed overnight into a colorful array of drawings, slogans, and an endless list of frat "brothers."

The art work was much more subtle then, never needing an entire backsplash of color, and as time went on, those who did the decorating considered it no less than a work of art.

As of late, the trend to "refinish" the overpass has been accepted by most as a representation of Villanova spirit and tradition. The Administration has, however, announced that it categorizes the art work as "grafitti," continuing that "this will not be tolerated on campus." A decision is pending on how to deter the painters, but as of yet, no actual conclusion has been reached.

The fate of the bridge-painting tradition is in question. A long-lived "venture" initiated by students seeking something "different" to do, may be soon ended. Those bold individuals who dared to sign their work and those who instead elected to hide behind pseudonyms, may become a thing of the past.

Pre-Med Day Held

By DEIRDRE FLANAGAN

Pre-med Day isn't for "pre-meddlers" only. The Alpha Epsilon Delta Society is holding their annual Pre-med Day on November 8, 1980, and they invite all who have an interest in the health-related fields.

The special feature of Pre-med Day will be in the presence of medical professors from surrounding graduate schools who will discuss the available programs offered, the newest curriculum, and admission requirements. Also present will be some Villanova seniors and biomajors who will reveal their experiences as pre-health professionals and inform underclassmen on career alternatives.

Apart from planning Pre-med Days, the AED Club holds a variety of other activities. They function as an honor society, but they have social activities also. These members have social events on Friday afternoons, T.G.'s when the occasion arises, and various sports activities. Every semester the AED Club sponsors a Student/Faculty Social which gives students an opportunity to discuss grades and other topics of mutual interest.

Along with their social functions, the society plans tours to various medical institutes, schedule speakers on health careers, and travels to national conventions.

To become a member of this honor society, the student must be in his or her third semester at Villanova, have a 3.25 cum, and hold some interest in a medical or health related career.

HALLOWEEN: a time for legends, customs

By LAURIE ALMEDA

"Halloween is the night the evil wanders the earth, when graves open and the dead rise forth and walk. The night of Halloween is the night when all evil things of the earth, air and water delight in causing mischief."

The Hobgoblin of Halloween, who is quite old and not in the proper condition to stand for great lengths of time, situated his marled body on the dank ground. Looking into the disappearing sun, his beady eyes glimmered a slight red in the gloom. In a raspy, yet mesmerizing voice, he began relating the story of how Halloween came to be.

"The ancient Druids had this important festival which began at midnight, October 31, and lasted all through the next day. These Druids weren't really bad sorts of creatures. The Druids thought of themselves as priests; the peasants thought they were prophets and sorcerers. Well, the Druids believed that on the night of October 31, the Lord of Death, Saman, called together all the wicked souls that had been condemned to death in the past 12 months, in order to inhabit the bodies of animals. So the Druids would light huge bonfires and they would keep a sharp lookout all through the night for evil spirited animals.

"The Romans also had an autumn festival which took place on Nov. 1. Nuts and apples symbolized the winter store of fruits, and they were roasted before large bonfires. A combination of the Druidic and Roman ceremonies became the more modern Halloween."

"Originally, the Halloween festival was a simple and almost totally confined religious holiday of the church. But the lower classes of peasants began spreading tales of spirits, witches, and they even said the devil himself was seen walking abroad on Halloween night. On the eve of October 31, all the peasants would gather together and build bonfires to keep all the spooks away."

"A well known fact among the spirits is that witches are acutely afraid of fire. Those poor old hags have never gotten over their terrible memories of the days of flogging and burning. The sight and heat of the fire, the smoke, the ominous crackling of the flames, fills any witch with horror as she recalls how many of her own kind were destroyed. The sight of a bonfire sends a witch flying."

The Hobgoblin readjusted his position and examined the darkening sky.

"Also, in the old days, it was believed that witches rode broomsticks through the air, or prowled the earth on black cats which they transferred into black stallions. The peasants would roll burning hoops down hills, and fling flaming discs into the air. Any witches flying overhead or riding by on their cat stallions would be zapped by these fiery destructors.

"A concern of those people back in those times was that evil spirits would ruin the following year's crops by polluting the ground. Good luck charms were carried on Halloween after dark. Nuts and apples were always in the houses because it was believed that evil spirits stayed away from where the wholesome fruits of the earth were stored.

"For people nowadays, Halloween is a time to soap windows, to put shaving cream in a person's hair, and to pull all sorts of mischievous pranks that we spirits approve of. People are smarter now too than the ancient peoples," the Hobgoblin continued making his eyes into tiny slits. "Now there's trick or treating, costume parties, why, all the modern people do is dress up like spirits. Sometimes I think evil spirits aren't as frightening as they used to be. Modern people remind me of fairies, gnomes, and elves when they go abroad at night. Generally, the fellows make sure to create pandemonium wherever they go.

"The human servants of Satan meet on Halloween night too. They go to their sabbaths and conventions in the secret hiding places of the wood. For good people this creates a serious situation. When wickedness combines with all the evil forces of hell, a powerful adversary to good is created. Insulting a ghost won't do a person any good though, insults just bring out a ghost's vindictiveness. I recommend the use of tact when dealing with a ghost. But on the other hand, witches and evil spirits of the world are openly at war with good folk, so the good will have to fight unseen evils.

"Some people believed that on Halloween, the dead that rose from their graves would go to the houses of their friends and sit by the fires. These spirits of the dead were unseen except by those who were to die within the coming year."

The Hobgoblin let out a snicker and his body squirmed to the rhythm of it. As his body wrigged, it seemed to scrunch closer to the ground.

"I call that really putting the fear of death into a person."

The Hobgoblin blinked and snickered once again, his eyes flashing a brighter red in the blanketing gloom.

"The evil spirits are present everywhere on Halloween night. The ancient people might not have been so silly when they tried to protect themselves against us. Evil can be a strong and dominating force.

"There's an old belief that if a man meets a spirit face to face on Halloween night, he will fall dead on the spot. The belief warns that under no circumstances should a person turn or look behind if he hears footsteps. Just remember, on Halloween night, if somebody is walking at your heels, close, so close that you can hear breathing, near enough to touch you, don't turn around because it will be one of my kind."

The Hobgoblin chortled and wriggled continuously as he scrunched closer and closer to the darkening ground. Soon, the Hobgoblin had disappeared into the depths of darkness, but his laughter remained.

Intramural Football Opens to Women

By MARY ANNE BILZ

Who are the Skins, Ray's Rig, M&M's and Moriarity Mates? No, these are not the new game shows on T.V.; rather, these are the names of football teams. Women's intramural football teams comprise a totally new intramural program concept on campus designed to get more women involved in the intramural program. There has been a positive reaction on campus among the girls.

Just watching a practice one day myself, on Mendel Field, I could sense the enthusiasm generated by the players. What better way to relieve those pent-up frustrations from studying than a game of football?

Okay, so there are a few chuckles among you guys who still believe in the old motto, "A woman's place is on the sidelines." Well, stop chuckling. There is intramural volleyball and basketball for girls, so why not football? The rules of the game, however, are slightly different. As to the rules for scoring; the first down is not counted. Players compete for six downs for a touchdown.

A team consists of six players, three on offense and three on defense. A smaller football is used.

Cindy Coughlin, who is director of intramurals, sums up the new program, and the girls' enthusiasm, in these words, "They love it." She continues, "They also come up with some unusual plays. In one game the girls faked a pass with a football and pretended she was holding it while her teammate ran for the touchdown." Cindy coaches the games and is able to see these rookies firsthand.

The games are held in the stadium on Sunday afternoons, so come and cheer on your friends or girlfriends or, choose to cheer the team with whatever unusual name strikes your fancy. "Pack it in there Keggetts." "Destroy-em M&M's!"

the one Levin was reading the next day in Montana. He found out the news from a neighbor when he arrived home.

Since his ouster, several newspapers have taken an editorial stance in his favor. One such is The Cape May County Gazette Leader which has had threats against their reporters and loss of advertising. City Editor Lorraine Bowers states, "Tom Levin is a very honest, great guy. It's really a shame what has happened to him. He scares a lot of people with his honesty and today that is unusual."

The August 20, 1980 issue of The Cape May County Gazette Leader, took an editorial stance in favor of Levin listing the following: "Something is shady in Woodbine and it is not the trees which line this quaint little borough . . . We think that much more a motive exists behind these proceedings then council members are attesting to . . . The recall effort, like the ousting, are in our estimation, uncalled for and represent the unprofessionalism which has plagued the council for years now . . . The Gazette Leader questions the validity of a council's action when the motives behind those actions are so obviously political in nature . . ."

"Honest politicians may or may not be unusual, I just know that I can't be bought," says Levin. His case is slated to be heard this week in New Jersey Superior Court in Cape May Court House. His battle will be long and tough. Court costs are high and his defense fund is fueled by cake, yard and hoagie sales.

When the dust settles in Woodbine later this month, Tom Levin again may have his chance to complete the job he started two years ago.

Perform your civic duty and vote on November 4th. If you don't, then you have nothing to complain about!

Jersey Jukes Nuke Fieldhouse

Southside Hosts a 'Party'

By SHARON WINTERS

"I think I've been drafted," said Southside Johnny good-naturedly as he posed for photographs and signed autographs after his October 17 show at the Villanova Fieldhouse.

"We're just going to keep playing forever," Southside proclaimed heading for the waiting red, white and blue band bus. We'll be playing New Hampshire next, he said.

Earlier that evening, Southside and the Jukes assailed the Fieldhouse audience with an ear-splattering, vigorous performance.

An animated Southside hit the stage, amid thunderous applause, wearing slacks, a white shirt and a tie. "I need a lovin' that won't drive me crazy," he belted.

The audience exploded when Johnny launched into Talk to Me. He danced around the stage, his light-colored hair flipping with his movements. "Talk to me . . . come on honey," he sang, soaked with perspiration.

Southside's powerful vocals continued throughout the show. He sang seemingly without strain. The Jukes were great; their brass solos during the night captivated the Villanova crowd.

One of the highlights of the show was cued by the line, "Reach up and touch the sky." Nine blinding light flashed above center stage every time that line was sung. The effect was stunning. Everyone raised their hands to touch the sky in unison.

Restless Heart proved to be another show-stopper, naturally!

Fever featured Southside on a harmonica solo followed by a saxophone solo from the band.

Everybody had a Party and no one wanted "to go home." John hardly had a chance to leave the stage after the last number. The audience demanded an encore and after that they demanded a second. Southside gave everything to the crowd, including the shirt off his back.

The opening act was 3-D. The lead singer came on stage looking like an early, punk version of Elvis (Presley). He was dressed all in black with the exception of a red wristband.

The 3-D set featured All Night Television, There's a Sound and Flashback Baby.

Jeff Hayenga stars as John Merrick in the award-winning stage success, The Elephant Man, coming to the Forrest Theatre October 27 for four weeks through November 22. Hayenga, in the title role, comes to Philadelphia directly from the Broadway production of The Elephant Man where he delighted critics and audiences.

Currently in its second smash year on Broadway, The Elephant Man has won every major theatre award including: the Tony Award, N.Y. Drama Critics Circle Award, Outer Circle Award, Drama Desk Award and the Obie as the "Best Play of the Year."

Performances will be given Monday thru Saturday at 8 p.m., with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday at 2 p.m.

Diana is still Supreme

Talented Ross Awes Fans

By FRED PESCATORE

Diana Ross is considered by many to be the top female entertainer in America. In fact, she is one of the very few performers in the world to be cited for her accomplishments in three different entertainment fields: music, theatre and film.

With more number 1 records, 19, than any other recording artist in the history of the charts, Ross is truly one of the most important entertainers in the last decade.

As a performer, Ross constantly strives to give her audience more than they expect: whether it's a dialogue, nostalgic songs, or a stroll into the audience. The latter was indeed the highlight of the performance. Diana came into the audience and allowed people to sing with her, touch and kiss her and ask her anything they wanted. She did this during the performance of Reach Out and Touch which was her first big hit as a solo artist. She had everyone in the audience talking and relating to someone other than the people they came with. It was an incredible display of emotion. The warmth and chemistry that flowed between her and the audience was indescribable.

Ross is one of the few performers that has the ability to hush the audience with a whisper or rouse them to their feet in a frenzy of applause and jubilation. Diana has the uncanny ability to put across a song's emotional charge. Most of the audience was in tears during her rendition of her very popular Touch Me in the Morning.

Miss Ross opened the show with one of her number one hits from her newest album, Diana. I'm Coming Out immediately got the audience on their feet. People were dancing in the aisles and some were even allowed on stage with her. She performed many songs from her hit movie, Lady Sings the Blues. Also, she sang many songs from her days as a Supreme, including the smash, Baby Love.

Ross closed the show with The Boss, one of her many disco hits and was preceded by Upside Down, a song that is now number 1 on the charts. After two encores, the last performed in tight black leather pants, a white low cut shirt and a Phillies jacket, she exited the stage leaving her ador-

Bruce Finds Light at the River

By KIM KINGSLAND

Since 1974, Bruce Springsteen has been touted as the future of rock and roll; however, that prediction took its time in swaying the masses. But the latest fulfillment of the prophecy is The River, the long-awaited double album recently released by Columbia. A montage of 20 songs, the album manages to capture the vital essences of nearly every aspect of the spectrum that is Bruce Springsteen. If you are a fan of the Boss, this work is an expected masterpiece. If you are indifferent, The River just may be the incentive you need to join the ever-growing ranks of believers in the above prediction. But if you are a nonbeliever, sympathies are extended: you are being deprived of the enjoyment of some of the best rock and roll around today. Also, don't bother reading the rest of this article, you're not going to agree with anything else either.

The album shows signs of becoming the definitive Springsteen anthology. There are cuts that were written for the Darkness album, Independence Day and Sherry Darling, a live cut; another, Point Blank has been a part of his live repertoire for years. The Ties That Bind dates back to 1978, and was considered as the title for his last album. In addition to these older songs, Bruce surprises with Hungry Heart, which seems to be garnering the initial burst of airplay. In this song we are presented with comparatively polished vocals not heard since She's the One. And, for afficionados, the Mary saga is continued here: it seems she accepted the ride to Thunder Road, but a trip to the reservoir along the way produced rather dire repercussions, as described in the title ballad.

The album has its faults, naturally (even Born to Run had minor discrepancies). To elaborate: Drive All Night borders on acutely monotony towards the end, but is ultimately salvaged by the stellar sax of the inimitable Clarence; I Wanna Marry You trifles with the edges of triteness, but is rescued by a personal twist characterized by the last line and The Price You Pay sounds suspiciously like another tune, until the listener realizes it is, in actuality, a continuation of it. These minor imperfections notwithstanding, the overall quality of the work is in a league of its own, as was every past Springsteen release.

Much rumination has been enjoyed in order to delineate the "best" songs on this album: each is, to a devotee, special in its own way. In the "rockers" category (the songs guaranteed as high-points of December 6, 8 and 9), the gold is split between Sherry Darling and I Got a Crush on You. Insofar as slower cuts are concerned, Point Blank achieves heights only Bruce can reach

The Furs Will Curl Your Hair

The Psychedelic Furs.

By PAUL H. BERN

The Psychedelic Furs is a punk rock band that will appeal to any type of rock n roller no matter how normal he is. The opening of the album is quiet to the point of being misleading, but the rest should be played at maximum volume. Contrary to their appearance, The Psychedelic Furs show more talent than most bands of this type; their lyrics are more than "useless drivel."

Duncan Kilburn on saxophone is clearly the greatest asset to the band; his high voltage riffs supply all the power one needs to pogo. Although being obviously spaced out, The Furs have the special ability of putting out the energy and leaving you more satisfied in the end than most punk bands.

The Psychedelic Furs have an outlook on life that is depressing if not strange. India the first song on the album, reveals to us that we will dance alone and live our useless lives. If this isn't depressing enough, you'll be happy to know the Richard Butler on "words" provides all the strange you could want. Keeping in line with most other punkers, Butler can't sing save his life but the flexibility his voice puts him well above rest.

Fall is a premium quality roll tune, and Duncan Kil shows off once again. Fall mak complete mockery of marria labeling it as a "stupid dru and hits home when Butler tel "tie me down/I will be free."

The second side begins Soap Commercial and again social commentary comes "We live in the soap

The band held the stage well considering that the bulk of the audience came to see Southside. They played to the crowd and not at them. This distinction, as well as the lead singer's donning a Villanova cap at one point in the show, led to a nice rapport between the band and audience.

One problem marred both performances, unfortunately. For some the sound was too loud, almost chest-resounding. Some people listened to the show from the ticket booth area outside the hall.

Aside from the intense sound, the evening was an event to remember.

ing fans in awe, waiting for her next conquest in the entertainment filed.

Miss Diana has style, versatility, and class. She knew exactly what to do on stage and hers was the warmest and best live performance this reviewer has seen. She has a special magic that has made her the leading entertainment personality in the world.

Miss Ross is the greatest superstar to have emerged from this country in the last decade. This is reflected in her live stage shows. This reviewer would recommend her show to anyone; if she is ever in your neighborhood see her perform.

Springsteen

when releasing the captured vignette. But, all around, the most haunting, identifiable song on the album is Independence Day. Obviously written for his father, this is one song that seriously battles Jungleland in regard to the singular Asbury-Park-E-Street sentimentally.

The River is, in spite of its late release date, one of the few albums assured of being among the year's best, and with justice. For Springsteen fans, it was worth the wait, which we have come to expect. And, while we're on the subject, it's advisable to exhibit discretion and not burn this one out too fast: it's almost certain to be long time until we hear from rock and roll's future again.

Don't Expect Punks From "Times Square"

By GREG ANTON

Times Square, filmed entirely on location in New York City, provides enjoyable entertainment if one can push aside the uncredibility and the "teeny-bopper" hype which it presents.

The movie revolves around the adventures of two teenage girls who run away from a neurological hospital where they are roommates. Pamela Pearl, 13, is the daughter of a politician and feels overshadowed by her father's career. She has become withdrawn from everything. Nicky Marotta, 16, is a tough and hardened delinquent who has been abandoned and mistreated most of her life. Together, the two hole up in an abandoned warehouse and live as fugitives. The two perform outrageous pranks and misdeeds and come to call themselves the "sleaze sisters." Their antics are followed closely by a late-night disc jockey, Johnny LaGuardia, played by Tim Curry, and a cult of dedicated teen followers.

Throughout the film the actual point of the movie is not apparent. Jacob Brackman, the writer, fails to develop and explore any theme or to project exactly what he is trying to say. However, Times Square does succeed in showing the warmth and companionship between Pammy and Nicky, the two teenagers. They share their experiences and emotions and finally do some soul-searchin find their true selves. The deli teenage problem is handled sitively and convincingly. R Johnson, Nicky, and Trini varado, Pammy, superbly bri this feeling to the screen. T chemistry between the two truly genuine.

The soundtrack, with song from such great artists as T Pretenders, The Talking Hea and the Ramones, is expected go gold. The movie, though, do not depict the New Wave or pun scene, as many people hav claimed it to. The film, indeed, an entertaining one and is refreshing change from many today's films.

Jethro Tull Plays "A" Okay

Jobson Energizes Band

Jethro Tull founder Ian Anderson.

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Jethro Tull is currently touring the States in support of their latest release, 'A'. 'A' was originally conceived as leader Ian Anderson's solo effort; also, it retains, besides Anderson, only one other previous Tull musician, guitarist Martin Barre. The questions were insistent inside the Spectrum on the evening of Tull's Philadelphia show; questions quickly answered by the band's powerful demonstration that Jethro Tull is still alive, and very well, thank you.

Eddie Jobson, former UK keyboardist/violinist, brings to Tull an instrumental genius that rivals even the remarkable collective talents of Anderson and Barre.

The new rhythm section of Dave Pegg on bass and Mark Craney on drums is solid and aggressive, but dwarfed by the electric interplay between voices, acoustic and electric guitars, mandolins, organs, pianos and violins.

The new Tull show is almost all grade 'A' material. Anderson introduces new songs like Crossfire, Working John, Working Joe and Uniforms with tidbits of political commentary that highlight his political concerns behind them: quips about the takeover of the Iranian embassy in London; on the superficial multiplicity of the faceless middle and working classes, etc. The Pine Martin's Jig is a very traditional sounding instrumental tune performed with 20th century electricity. Jobson's violin and Barre's mandolin drove Anderson's flute to its crescendo, and the audience to its feet.

The older favorites were warmly performed and received. Pegg's bass paded through Bungle in the Jungle on tiger feet, while the cheering fans clapped and danced in time, and the band saved the classic Aqualung and Locomotive Breath for well-deserved encores. Each band member also played an extended solo, which converged into a jam so freewheeling and scattered, it was the highlight of the show.

Ian Anderson continues to front Tull with exquisite senses of timing, irony, humor and drama. He is a true rock artist; a genius on many levels who communicates each level through the variety of meanings in his work. Like Jeff Beck on October 8, Jethro Tull showed Spectrum fans that some bands aren't just getting older — they're getting better.

Our Anonymous Roving Reporter:

Tres Students Travel in Philly

Our story begins in dirty, dangerous Penn Center Station at 16th and Market Streets. Planning to hit the Italian Market first, we strolled down 16th Street in what we thought was the right direction. To our surprise and everyone else's loss, the streets were nearly empty on this gorgeous Saturday afternoon. What do people do in Philadelphia? (a question asked by millions before us). Our story deals with what two tres students did on their travel through the streets of the city. Allow us to be your travel guide to adventure, haute cuisine and of course, tres. You may now be wondering what "tres" is . . . Read on, if you dare.

Tres Travels

Strolling down 16th Street, we soon found several intriguing antique shops on Pine Street. Thev were tiny cubbyholes just chock full of fascinating items. Upon reaching South Street, we turned south, our only real mistake of the tour. From there to about Ninth Street, the area is just ravaged. There was nothing to see and plenty of things that you would like to miss. West Philadelphia never looked so good.

South Street Into Chase

We left South Street at Ninth and followed that to the Italian Market. The crowded menagerie of vendors, food smells and shoppers extended for many blocks. Fresh fish, every kind of fruit, many meats, and dairy items are available at an unbelievable low cost. One warning though, do not touch the plastic blow-up toys. We touched a Mickey Mouse and an agitated vendor quickly came and chased us away.

Punk Shops

Now for the juice of our travels. We found our way back onto South Street, we discovered a Haagen-Daaz ice cream parlor (Yes, it is really thicker, tastier and treser than ordinary ice cream). Continuing down the street, we ran into punk shops (for you New Wave fans), a different breed of greeting card shop (for the shopper educated in tres) and novelty boutiques selling odds and ends that you would never find in the suburbs. Greenwich Village lovers will be delighted to find a place somewhat like home (of course not as tres, but . . .) We also passed such established places of entertainment as TLA cinema and Grendel's Lair. They are located at 500 South Street and 334 South Street and something provocative is always happening there. For you nostalgia fans, there is a vintage clothing store located at Third and Bainbridge — a definite must for you tres people. Then on Second, we reached New Market at Head House Square. It is designed as an outdoor city mall area in the restored area of Society Hill. Everything is clean and modern and the best store in the whole mall is Metro. It sold punk, villagy, and unbelievably, Fiorucci clothes (a first for this city). To top this all off, a native of Greenwich Village works there (how tres can you get?). A gift shop on one of the upper levels of the mall carries many unicorn items. We splurged and bought a unicorn shopping bag for $. (It is so untres to reveal the price of anything).

By now, we were ready for dinner. However, no restaurant in that whole area of the city is ready for you until 5:30 p.m. They are busy hobnobbing it at the tres cocktail parties in the Towers. So, if you should be down there after 5:30, we recommend Tang's at 5th and South. It is a Philadelphia magazine award winner for the best Chinese restaurant outside of Chinatown. Since it was only 5:00 p.m., we had to find a restaurant in a different section of town.

It's Untres to Write

Figuring that a public phone booth with yellow pages would be of help, we set out in search of one. However, it is so untres to use a public phone, no one in Society Hill ever heard of one. Also, don't try to mail a letter — there are no mail boxes — it is so untres to write letters.

Bring Roller Skates

We finally ended up in Sechuan Garden, a restaurant on Walnut and Juniper Street — quite a walk from Society Hill. It was an excellent restaurant and the prices reasonable. We then headed back to the train station and thus ended our adventure. One more bit of advice for the tres — when in Society Hill, bring your roller skates.

Tres Is

You mean you still don't know what tres is? Then, the term certainly does not apply to you.

A column similar to this will appear at least once a month so until next time, keep thinking the TRES thoughts.

Chadds Ford Sanctuary Harbors Wyeth Talent

By JEANNE SALVATORE

Only 28 miles from the city of Philadelphia and the hectic pace of the Villanova campus is the world of tranquility and arresting natural beauty. This place is Chadds Ford, the home of the Brandywine River Museum and a caretaker of the American heritage.

The Brandywine Valley is full of history, which can be visually understood through its quaint but time worn old homes, dappled fields and farms, and historic landmarks such as the original Quaker meeting house of Chadds Ford. For it was the Quakers who, before the Revolution, originally settled here.

The Brandywine Valley was the site of the famous "Battle of the Brandywine" where the colonial forces under Generals Washington and Lafayette were defeated by the British troops under General Howe.

Chadds Ford is most noted for its natural beauty which has inspired the creative spirit of its native artists and the efforts of the Brandywine River Museum to preserve and exhibit this local talent as well as those artists whose work is representative of the American heritage and the natural beauty of our land.

The Brandywine River Museum was converted out of an old mill and was originally established to preserve the land which inspired the local artists.

The Brandywine artistic heritage began in the late 19th century with the work of artist-illustrator Howard Pyle. Pyle is also famous for his distinguished student, N.C. Wyeth, who illustrated all the original versions of Robert Lewis Stevenson's books. N.C. Wyeth is also a sort of an artistic patriarch for he is the father of Chadds Ford's most well-known artists — Andrew, and Henrietta Wyeth, and grandfather of Jamie.

These and many other artists are on display at the museum. But this fall there is a special exhibit of Henrietta's work. She is known for her poignant still lifes and her sensitive portraits of people from Helen Hayes to the official, but unveiled, portrait of Mrs. Richard M. Nixon.

A day at the Brandywine River Museum is refreshing, fun and inspirational. For directions and ticket information call them at 215-388-7601.

Sounds from Britain

By JERRY ARTH

Britain, long recognized as the birthplace of the New Wave movement in music, is known for producing bands which often record one moderately successful single and then fade into obscurity. A new album, Made in Britain, may change the situation somewhat. Highlighting the young careers of four bands, Invaders, Excel, Comsat Angels, and Protex, Made in Britain is designed to introduce American audiences to the latest happenings in the post-punk arena.

The Invaders are a likeable, catchy pop band. Magic Mirror, their first U.K. release happens to be the best of their offering on this album, though Backstreet Romeo is an equally noteworthy cut.

Excel is a riotous band from Yorkshire, none of whose members are over 18. Though best known for dynamic stage shows, which have included disrobing in order to "prove that Abba isn't the only group with legs"(?), Exel plays truly dynamic rock n' roll, especially on Tonight in the Park and I never Knew.

With influences as diverse as The Doors and Chic, one would either expect the Comsat Angels to be either very innovative or excrutiatingly horrible. Fortunately, the former turns out to be the case. Playing savage, modernistic rock, Comsat Angels cuts to the quick with music stripped to the barest essentials, especially on their critically acclaimed Independents Day.

But, as is often the way of all things, the best band on Made in Britain is featured last. Protex, an Irish band which displays a heavy, Clash-influenced sound, plays short, tough tunes, with aggressive percussion and guitar work.

merical/we are all a lie," recalls to us the electronic babysitter upbringing that many of us had while "We live in the factory/We are the same," shows us that we have never really outgrown this part of our lives.

The band returns for more pogo music with Pulse and Wedding Song to remind us that "we're useless/completely." The album ends with Flowers in which Butler reveals to us that "I know that he's so dead and gone/I think that is free."

Few groups are able to put out as much voltage as The Psychedelic Furs and leave you only wanting more. Insight, talent and capability are what put The Furs on top: this album is a must for any true punk rocker.

While most people of his time were still serfs on feudal estates, Leonardo da Vinci was designing airplanes, a mechanical car, and a tank. Now, models of inventions by the 16th century genius are on display in the Connelly Center Art Gallery through November 21. The exhibit, lent by IBM Corp. and cosponsored by Villanova's College of Engineering and Art and Art History Department, features models of such things as flying machines, a tank and advanced weaponry. His parachute is said to have been used successfully, and modern engineers say his airplane was theoretically sound. He also designed a paddle wheel ship, an idea which was not developed until the 19th century.

The models, which are based on Leonardo's notebook sketches, have been shown at museums and colleges throughout the country. Villanova has been on the waiting list to receive the exhibition for three years. The models are open to experimentation and manipulation.

A slide-tape program about Leonardo's life and inventions will be available in the gallery. In addition, the sponsoring departments are providing lectures, a film, and other special events to accompany the exhibit.

Intramural Football Winds Down

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

With only one week of regular season action remaining, eight intramural football teams, one in each division, continue play with perfect records. Joint Effort, one of the league's powerhouses and in first place overall, has rolled up 123 points in six games without yielding a point.

The final week of the season should prove important in deciding which teams will make the play-offs. According to Dino Valente, President of the Intramural Department, "There are about a half dozen games left that should solidify the team standings."

The play-off schedule is as yet undecided, but there will probably be 16 teams competing for the title. Division champions will be guaranteed a play-off berth with the remaining teams being selected by the Intramural Department on the basis of regular season performance, strength of schedule, and other considerations.

For the first time in intramural football at Villanova, there will be an all-star tournament after the league championship is played. Three all-star teams will be selected, each representing two divisions. These all-star division pairings will be North and South Division players, East and West Division players, and Central and Frat Division players.

Each league football team will select two representatives for the all-star teams, a lineman and a back, and also nominate five more players for the teams. The remaining openings on the all-star teams will be filled from the list of nominees from each team and will be chosen by an all-star selection committee consisting of Ed Geisz, Don Zabel, Dino Valente, Steve Cole, and Andy Cangeldei.

The captains of each divisional champion team will become co-captains on the all-star teams and certificates will be presented to the participants. A coin toss will determine which two of the three all-star teams will play first and the winner of this game will play the third team for the championship. Because an all-star format is an innovation in intramural football at Villanova, Valente stated, "There will be some bugs to be worked out, obviously, but we hope to make it run pretty smoothly."

Coaches Herald Winning Season for Field Hockey

By HELEN CAREY and JULES SEBELIN

The Villanova women's field hockey team has taken on a new look under the direction of the new coaches, Debbie Havarilla and Julie Keaveny. The 1980 season has thus far proved very rewarding with big wins against Kutztown (2-0), La Salle (1-0), Lafayette (2-1), Eastern (4-0) and St. Joe's (3-1).

Providing the impetus for Villanova's offensive punch and leading the team in goals this season are senior co-captain "Debbie Byrd Smith" and Lisa Alderfer. Both Alderfer and Smith, along with junior Susie Comely, have in the past played for the Philadelphia sectional team in the National Field Hockey Tournament.

Outstanding defensive efforts have also been a big factor in several wins, most notably in the LaSalle game. After Nova took a one-goal lead early in the game, a hungry LaSalle team took the field in the second half looking for a victory. LaSalle pressured the Wildcat's goal for most of the second half, but senior goalie Mary Beth Campanella and sophomore sweeper Beth Moyer, kept the ball out of the cage and came away winners.

The weekend of October 18 and 19 showed more of the Wildcats' spirit when they traveled to Swarthmore College to play in the All-College Tournament. They won their first two games against Textile (5-3) and Eastern (1-0) which advanced them into the finals against Drexel. Unfortunately, Drexel scored in the last few minutes to come away with a 1-0 victory.

With two-thirds of the season over, the team faces no easy task in attempting to gain a bid in the regional post-season playoffs. They face two tough opponents: Trenton State and Widener College.

SOFTBALL TOURNAMENT

By JERRY VENTRESCA

On the weekend of October 18 and 19 the Villanova Intramural Department held its first Fall Softball Tournament in which 20 teams participated and proceeded to play two days of non-stop double-elimination softball. By Sunday afternoon, the field of 20 had been cut down to three — SPE, FTB (Follow That Ball) and the Doors.

SPE and FTB both had suffered one defeat and thus played each other to determine who would play the undefeated Doors in the finals. Rallying in a come-from-behind victory, 7-4, FTB won the honor to face the Doors Wednesday afternoon on Austin Field.

FTB, having lost once in the tournament, had to defeat the Doors twice to win the championship while the Doors needed one victory to claim the championship.

A 23-3 FTB romp over the Doors set the stage for a second Wednesday game immediately following the first one. In the second game the Doors regrouped to overcome FTB, 9-6, to win the intramural championship.

In the words of Intramural Department President Dino Valente, "The tournament's one-pitch approach was well taken by all participants and there is talk that a similar tournament will take place in the spring."

Women's Football Thrives

There may be no grunts or groans coming from Villanova Stadium on Sundays but the women's intramural football league is in action and thriving on consistency and excitement.

In the round robin so far, no team had played more than three games but no one has forfeited out of the league either. According to women's coordinator Cindy Coughlin, playoffs begin Sunday, November 9, with the four top teams entered.

As of last Sunday's actions, Ray's Regulars and Moriarty Mates have 2-0 records and rounding off the top five with 2-1 records are M & M's, Demolition Squad and Keggettes.

Daryl Mu[illegible] member of the men's team, Fan's Terror, and coach of the Demolition Squad, summed up the league saying, "It's a lot rougher than people expected. You'd be surprised how rough the girls can get." One of Murphy's prospects includes co-captain Jennifer Whitfield, who has scored six touchdowns and intercepted three passes.

Synchro Swimming Starts

Senior Laura Proske Rises From Swimmer To Coach

By JULIE ROBERTS

The season begins on Sunday and continues until the second week in July. The team will practice for three and one half months before it has any competition. Team members must run, swim and lift weights. Sound like a tough sport?

It is. Synchronized swimming requires dedicated people to participate in one of the longest seasons on the sports calendar.

What is synchonized swimming? It can be compared to figure skating or floor exercises- only it is done under water. It is not a water ballet but a competive sport.

Villanova's women's team has placed in the top ten in the national Championships for the past two years. Last year the women finished second in the Eastern Championships.

In addition to competing with top national teams, the synchonized team has also participated on an international level. Last year the women attend Puerto Rico's Invitational International Synchronized Swim Meet. Villanova and the University of Arizona were the only two colleges in the country to participate.

In Puerto Rico, the women gave an exhibition of synchonized swimming to help establish international rules on judging. When scoring is a routine, a judge must take into consideratoin the difficulty of the moves, the synchronization, variety and originality of the moves, the synchronization, variety and originality, fluidity, control and execution and the use of the music.

Puerto Rico has extended another invitation to the women's team but plans to attend have not been finalized.

Returning from last year's team will be Sue Giordano, one of Villanova's top performers. However, Coach Laura Proske states the team is lacking depth. "We only have eight women on the team so we are really looking for underclassmen with a strong background in swimming."

Proske, a senior at Villanova, is the only female student to coach a varsity sport. She has been a member of Villanova's team and has been coaching various swim clubs for the past five years.

Proske is already looking forward to the National Championships which will be held at Stanford, California. "It's tough," she commented, "to compete with the top teams such as Arizona, Ohio and Michigan, who give out 16 scholarships each for synchronized swimming while Villanova offers none. We really need more recruits."

Synchronized swimming coach Laura Proske.

Anyone who is interested in trying out for the team is invited to a general meeting Monday at 6:00 p.m. at the Field House pool.

Netters Post Win Record

By KYLE GOTHNER

The women's tennis team boosted their record to an impressive 9-1 last week. St. Joe's and La Salle were the latest victims of the team's winning streak both being easily defeated by the score of 5-0.

Last Sunday, October 26, the women competed in the PAIAW Division II A Tournament and finished second to Lafayette by only one point. Out of a possible 20 points Lafayette had 18; Villanova 17, Kutztown seven, St. Joe's five and Bryn Mawr three. The tournament came down to a Villanova-Lafayette match. First and second doubles were taken by Lafayette and Trish Stairiker took second singles and Dawn Fisher took third singles for Villanova. The deciding match of the tournament was the final match between Villanova's first singles, Carol Harrison, and Lafayette's first singles. Harrison was defeated by a score of 8-6.

Lafayette is Villanova's only competition in their division and next year they will be moving up to Division I. The coach of the women's team, Dr. Langran, would like to see a general revamping of all the divisions, and revised schedules including more schools as well as tougher competition to help improve the quality of the already respected Villanova tennis team.

CROSS COUNTRY CLAIMS FIRST

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova Women's Cross Country Team brought home thier first victory Sunday, October 19. Individual performances as well as a team title were recognized at the meet sponsored by Shore Athletic Club.

The Villanova women led by Junior Sue , swept the first seven places and finished two more in the top ten. Shea ran the 3.1 mile course in 17:24, followed by classmates Carol Gilsinger and Amelia Cain. The course was fast and flat, as reflected by each girl running her fastest time of the season.

With awards going to the top ten finishers and the winning team, the Villanova women returned with fourteen trophies.

The team, led by co-captains Carol Gilsinger and Bev Reilly, will run at Indiana, PA in the EAIAW's tomorrow hoping to earn a berth in the national competition later this month.

CATS SPLIT ROAD GAMES

By BETH WHITE

The Fighting Blue Hens of the University of Delaware have always provided a challenge to the Villanova Wildcats and more often than not, the turning point of the football season. Last year, Delaware defeated the Cats 21-20 before a capacity home crowd, prohibiting Villanova from a winning season (the Cats finished with a 5-6 record). Nova led the Blue Hens 20-7 halfway into the third quarter of that game, then failed to rack up another first down as the Blue Hens scored two more touchdowns and claimed the victory.

Head Coach Dick Bedesem explains that, "Last year they (the Blue Hens) came out with nine men up front to challenge our ground attack and we were forced to throw." Bedesem continues that, "If they do that again, we'll be prepared to go to the air."

In the previous week, the Wildcats fell to Navy 24-15, but the bright spot on the horizon for the Cats was that they scored all of their points in the second half.

Villanova relied on its ground game for 229 of the 270 yards gained in the Wildcats' 17-6 win over the Keydets of Virginia Military Institute (VMI). Temperatures of 45 degrees and wind gusts of 40 mph inhibited the Wildcats from utilizing their aerial attack. Bedesem commented that, "We expected a tough game at VMI and that's what we got. We were very pleased, however," continued Bedesem, "number one, because it was our first road victory. Secondly, with the weather conditions like they were, we were happy to get away with a win."

And that road victory will be very important, since it has been 10 years since Villanova has beaten Delaware in an away game.

Referring to the VMI game, Bedesem expressed special pleasure with the performance of the specialty teams, which gave the Wildcats consistent good field position and scored a touchdown. The touchdown came from senior Dave Martin on a 75-yard punt return in the second quarter to send the Wildcats into the locker room at the half with a 14-0 advantage. Villanova's first score was set up by a fumble recovery by junior linebacker Anthony Griggs on the Keydet 28-yard line. The Wildcats then took six plays, including a 14-yard sideline sprint by senior Bill Connors, before halfback Shawn Passman plowed the four yards into the VMI endzone.

The Cats cushioned their lead with a 37-yard field goal by placekicker Chuck Bushbeck, after failing to convert on a fourth-and-eight situation.

In his first start of the last three games, senior quarterback Pat O'Brien completed just half of his six passing attempts, due largely to the gusty winds at Alumni Memorial Field.

Defensively, the absence of defensive tackle Howie Long proved to be a sore point on the defensive line, allowing VMI's Floyd Allen to gain 158 yards in 32 attempts and the Keydets' sole score of the day. Allen's one-yard plunge through the middle capped a 12-play, 44-yard scoring drive by the Keydets in the fourth quarter.

Volliers Extend Winning Record

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova women's volleyball team rolled to a three-game sweep over Swarthmore College Thursday, which advanced their team record to 16-7. The Wildcats are currently the number two team in the eight-team Philadelphia Area Division I Volleyball League.

"We have come a long way," said Rose Selby, who coaches the team with Bob Covell. "We may be inexperienced but we're improving each week. There's a bright future ahead for this team," explained Selby.

Optimism for the future is definitely the mood on the team. Three of the six Wildcat starters are freshmen, with two juniors and a senior performing the other starting roles.

Their 16-7 record belies the team's total improvement from last year because they have a much tougher schedule this season. One particularly heartbreaking defeat came at the hands of rival La Salle. The match was hard fought down to the wire; each game hung in the balance right up until the last point. But fate was not on Villanova's side this time as the LaSalle squad won three out of the five games to take the match victory. The rest of the regular season schedule seems relatively easy for the Cats. During the upcoming week, the team is entered in the La Salle Invitational Tournament, which should prove to be a real test. With a successful showing there, the squad may possibly be extended an invitation to the AIAW Regionals, which is their final goal this season.

Women Booters Avenge Loss

By KYLE GOTHNER

On October 15 the women's soccer team avenged their early season loss to Swarthmore by winning 2-1 in overtime. Villanova was down 1-0 at the half when Lori Stasco scored sending the game into overtime. The winning goal was by Nina Wieszorek off an indirect free kick from Annie Kempf.

The team traveled to Bethlehem on October 18 and played Slippery Rock and Lehigh. Villanova was down 2-0 at the half against Slippery Rock but goals by Annie Kempf and Nina Wieszorek in the second half tied the score at 2-2 where it remained even after overtime. Lehigh however was no match for the Villanova squad, only having 3 shots on goal compared to Villanova's 32. Goals by Denise Finn, Annie Kempf, Nina Wieszorek and Katie Graney made it a 4-0 victory for Villanova, and gave goalie Patti Nowlan her third shutout of the season.

Patti Nowlan's fourth shutout came on October 22 when the women faced Rutgers. Nowlan recorded an impressive 25 saves while Nina Wieszorek scored two minutes into the first half and Denise Finn scored twelve and a half minutes into the half.

The women have brought their season to a close with a 6-2-3 record.

Icecats Shutout Duquesne in Season Opener

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats opened their season crushing Duquesne University, 11-0. The Cats bombarded the Duquesne goal with 60 shots in an awesome display of offensive power. Eight players tallied goals while goaltender Tom Margiotti kicked aside 20 shots for the shutout.

The game was all Villanova from the opening faceoff. Last year's defenseman-of-the-Year Paul Lafond opened the scoring for the Wildcats midway through the first period drilling a slapshot into the upper corner of the Duquesne net to give the Cats a quick 1-0 lead. Before the period ended, "Killer" Whitaker and Ken Downey connected for goals and the Cats skated off the ice after the first period with a 3-0 lead.

The Icecats came out flying in the second period scoring three quick goals. Lafond opened the scoring with his second goal of the game, followed by goals from sophomores Chris Mancuso and John Lammers.

The third period was no different from the previous two as the Cats continued their onslaught on the Duquesne goal. Third period goals were scored from last year's Most Valuable Player Tom Curran, Kevin Kelly, Jim Ragold, Mancuso and Lammers.

Coach S.J.O. Probst was most impressed with the play of the defensive units. Juniors Jim Femia and Bill Quinlan collected two assists a piece while John Huffman and Brian Emmerich also played strong games.

Other strong performances were shown by freshmen Mike Bufano, "Cyrus" Carey, Jeff Beck, Frank Segreto and "Nukes" Grennon.

The Icecats have a pair of back-to-back games this weekend. On Saturday at 4:30, the Cats travel to the University of Pennsylvania to take on the Quakers and on Sunday the Cats hook up against the Dragons from Drexel. Game time on Sunday is 12:00 noon. Villanova's home games will be played at the Skatium (Darby Rd., Havertown, Pa.) this season.

Wildcat Harriers Defend Titles

Runners Relinquish IC4A Title but Dominate Big Five

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova Men's Cross Country team's second place finish at the IC4A's was partially avenged by their victory on Monday at the Big 5 Championships. The Wildcat Harriers lost their IC4A title to a surprisingly talented Bucknell team. Forty teams competed in the race which was held Monday, October 20 at Van Cortland Park, NY.

Senior Sydney Maree peeks over graveyard hill in last week's IC4A Cross Country Championship won by Bucknell University.

Amos Korir, for the second consecutive year, finished in second place. He ran all out to finish in 24:13 just one second behind the winner.

The next Villanova finishers were the junior duo Kevin Dillon and John Hunter. They finished fourteenth and nineteenth respectively. Both have been running well throughout the season. Villanova scoring at the IC4A's was completed by Sydney Maree in twenty-first and Marcus O'Sullivan in twenty-third to secure a Wildcat finish at second place with seventy-nine points to Bucknell's fifty-five. The third place team, Boston University, was out of the competition with One Hundred seventy-three points.

This past Monday on the familiar course at Belmont Plateau, the Wildcats ran for their first victory of the season. The win was an easy one in which Villanova scored a low nineteen points to second place LaSalle's fifty-four.

Amos Korir, defending champion lead the way to a Villanova sweep of the first three places. Korir finished in 25:32, and said, "I surprised myself, time-wise." He also spoke of his teammates performance, "Everyone did so well."

This was evident in freshman Marcus O'Sullivan's second place run in 26:47. The run earned him second place in the Villanova record books as well with the second fastest freshman time ever at Belmont. O'Sullivan attributes his fine performance to his strong finish. He said, "A Temple runner was up at me till a mile to go, but I felt good the last mile and pulled away."

Once again, the steady man John Hunter pulled through for the Wildcats. His third place finish was only four seconds behind O'Sullivan. Scoring was completed by Brian O'Keefe and Kevin Dillon both of whom finished in the top ten. There was a surprise in Villanova's sixth and seventh place runners. Ken Lucks, a freshman, finished sixth for Villanova and eighth overall, running his best time of the season. Dermot Anderson broke the varsity for the first time also this year.

Although individual placing has been inconsistent, there has been a consistent drop in times throughout the season. This team is getting into shape and will be ready for the tough competition that awaits them on November 15, at the District II's held at Lehigh.

Booters Ride On Winning Streak

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova men's soccer team is getting their kicks out of winning this season. The team has a 10-2 record, and are riding the crest of a ten-game winning streak.

The soccer team opened their season on the wrong foot as they lost their first two contests. After those defeats Coach Howard Graff made a change that proved the difference between winning and losing. Coach Graff moved Dave McHugh to the sweeper position. This position is designed so that he is the last player before the goalie. Since that move the team has been unbeatable.

Senior Dave McHugh "never makes a mistake," said Manager Kevin Conner. McHugh, who also plays the outfield for the baseball team seems to have a knack for the ball.

Goalie Pete Jirak is the only player behind McHugh. Jirak has already set one record which is three consecutive shutouts. He has six shutouts in the eleven games he has played and has allowed only four goals in the last ten games. His goal-against-average is low .818.

While Jirak and McHugh are busy holding opponents from scoring their teammates are busy scoring goals. During the ten-game winning streak Villanova has scored 24 goals while giving up four.

The leading scorer is senior Steve Frey. Sophomore Brian Barr also adds scoring punch. Kevin Conner says, "Barr is the fastest player on the team."

Other players who have helped Villanova to their winning streak are John Gallagher, John Leitner and John Warsksa. "Gallagher gets the job done. He is always in the right place at the right time," said Connor. Leitner is a spirited player who scored a big goal against Temple that helped Villanova to continue their winning streak.

The Villanova soccer team does not have one player receiving a scholarship. Their success is amazing. The team has three games remaining. How they do in the three games will determine whether they will get into the NCAA's.

The Politics of Sports

By PATRICK FLYNN

It's amazing how alike politics and sports are coming to be. Newscasts describe the presidential candidates as "battling it out to the wire" in the "race for the money." And don't forget the vice-president, the Constitution's version of the wild-card playoffs.

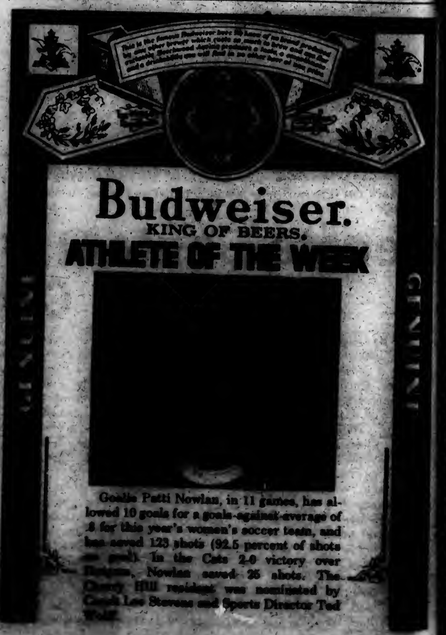
And then there's scandal. The longer the ABSCAM novel drags itself out, the more apparent it is to most that "all politicians are crooked." Enter the Pac-10.

The full impact of that conference's exploration of athletic wrongdoings at its member schools has not yet been felt, but is already worth nothing. For the first time, the little fish, like Nevada-Las Vegas and Southwest Louisiana are not the whipping boys for an institution of fraud. Major schools, like USC, are being slapped with irrefutable charges of mismanagement. And it seems reasonable to believe that if those schools are guilty, a good investigation of the Big-10, the Southeast Conference, and any other league might just uncover some more grisly truths.

Last week, USC issued a report on its own investigation of its athletic program. It found no less than 330 student-athletes enrolled with credentials lower than the school's normal acceptable standards. These are not isolated cases of bad judgment or dishonesty — rather, examples of an over-riding policy of disregard for the rules and morals that give college sports the prestige that they enjoy in this country.

The USC report paints a gloomy picture of a system gone wild. Fans and alumni are exploited, but so are the players. Often is written the story of the athlete who is carried through his academic life by his coaches while being told that his future is in bruises, not in books. Then, all of a sudden, his eligibility is up and he comes to the realization that there is no room for him in the pros, that he is a has-been on the field and a "never-was" in the classroom. He's been used.

But college sports remain popular, indeed justifiably so. Let's just keep our fingers crossed that the current problems are ironed out before the public loses confidence.



Goalie Patti Nowlan, in 11 games, has allowed 10 goals for a goals-against-average of .9 for this year's women's soccer team, and has saved 123 shots (92.5 percent of shots on goal). In the Cats 2-0 victory over Rutgers, Nowlan saved 25 shots. The Cherry Hill resident was nominated by Coach Lee Stevens and Sports Director Ted Wolf.

Grid Players Suspended

Two Dismissed Following Off-Campus Altercation

By BILL CLARK and MARY ANNE GRANGER

An "off-campus incident" which occurred early on October 5 has resulted in disciplinary actions being taken against four Villanova football players.

Senior Paul Phillippy and sophomore Jim McCarthy have been suspended from the University. Senior Howie Long and junior Jim Still have been put on disciplinary probation and are not able to represent the University in intercollegiate athletic competition.

This decision was reached by the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for Student Life. His decision was reached on the basis of a recommendation from Villanova's Disciplinary Review Board, a fact-finding group composed of five members: the Dean of Men, the Dean of Women, a faculty member recommended by the Student Life Committee of the Senate, and two students.

A complaint was filed with the Dean of Men by five girls, who hosted a party October 5 at the Bryn Mawr Courts Apartments.

"If someone wishes to file a complaint against a Villanova student, the complaint is brought before the appropriate judicial board," said Anthony Martin, acting dean of men. "If a complaint is a more serious one, it is brought before the Disciplinary Review Board."

According to Deegan, "We have to react only to charges brought to our attention. We cannot go on hearsay," said Deegan.

Two of the girls who filed the complaint, however, said, "After the party, there was damage to our apartment. We wanted to be paid for the damage and get a written apology from the football players. We went to talk to Tony Martin about the incident to see what could be done.

"He was not sure what could be done about the incident since it occurred off-campus, but he told us we could write a report. We did not file a report because we felt that nothing would come of it," said the girls.

"About a week later, we received a call from Tony Martin. He told us he had been given a police report of the incident and felt that something should be done about it," the girls continued.

"When we got into that office, we felt there was no turning back."

On October 21, the Disciplinary Review Board heard two conflicting sides of the incident that occurred that night.

According to the girls, three men "were ravaging through" their refrigerator. One of the girl's boyfriends asked them to leave and there was a slight altercation.

"There were no punches thrown and no violence. A little while later, one of the guys came back to get his jacket and apologized," said the girls.

"At approximately 2:30 a.m., we heard this pounding on the door. Jim McCarthy and Paul Phillippy walked in carrying a lead pipe and a broomstick, claiming that their friend got beat up. They could have been at the party earlier, but we don't think so. I'm sure we would have noticed someone that big," said the girls.

"McCarthy was screaming some nonsense and was swinging the pipe. At that time there were about five guys and ten girls left at the party. One of my girlfriends grabbed onto the pipe and a tug of war ensued. Paul Phillippy somehow got into the bathroom and locked himself in," said the girls.

"My girlfriend was literally hanging onto the pipe in McCarthy's hand and was thrown against the railing on the landing and passed out in the kitchen. Phillippy actually rounded off and punched one of our roommates in the stomach," she said.

The side presented by the football players contradicts this information.

According to Paul Phillippy, he and Jim McCarthy were at the party earlier but had left.

"We returned to the party at about 2:30 a.m. Jim McCarthy had gone in before me. When I came in, Jimmy was already on the floor. There were about twelve people on top of him. Some were hitting him with bottles," said Phillippy.

"I have absolutely no idea why anyone was fighting at all," he continued. "All that I know was that when I walked in, people started hitting me too."

Phillippy said he was trying to pull McCarthy out of the pile. "I definitely was not carrying a broomstick or anything else," he said.

"People began grabbing my hair and beating on me. My shoes came off and my shirt was ripped. It was like a nightmare," said Phillippy.

"I somehow got into the bathroom and shut the door. There was another girl in there. She must have been scared and tried to get away. The first thing she said was, 'Look at your face!' When I looked in the mirror, I saw that I was bleeding from the eyes, nose and mouth. I didn't really realize how bad it was," he said.

"When I stepped out of the bathroom, a kid was running up to me saying that he wanted to get the other one.

After that, people began beating me again. Jimmy was at the end of the hall saying 'I want my friend out of here." he continued.

"As we were leaving, people were throwing bottles down the stairwell," said Phillippy.

Phillippy said that after he left the party, he realized that he had lost a watch and chain.

"We went back to campus to get some friends because we didn't want to go back there alone," said Phillippy. "We came back with Howie Long and Jim Still."

"I was awakened out of bed in the middle of the night," said Howie Long. "Jimmy's shirt had been ripped at the party and Paul said that someone took his Tangerine Bowl watch and a chain his grandmother gave him."

The girls continued their side of the story by saying that people came back to the party about an hour later. "About an hour after they (Phillippy and McCarthy) left, I looked out of the bedroom window and saw about fifteen or twenty people standing there with clubs and bats. We called the police again and locked the door. When the police came into the courtyard, everyone scattered," said the girls.

"The policeman was talking to the four of them (Phillippy, McCarthy, Long, and Still) in the courtyard. By this time, they must have dropped whatever they were holding."

According to Long, however, there were no other people besides the four football players. "The four of us came down in a little Toyota. We didn't see anyone else there," said Long.

Downpayment Put On Liquor License

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Villanova University, under the auspices of a corporation set up to hold the license, "entered into an agreemant to purchase a commercial liquor license," according to Fr. John Deegan, vice president for Student Life. This license would allow for sales of beer, wine and liquor.

The Belle Air Corporation was formed for the purpose of buying the license, because a private University cannot hold such a license. A downpayment was put on the license from a restaurant in Radnor Township which is no longer in business, the "Achilles Violas."

The transferral of the license must now be approved by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board, a process which takes an average of four to five months, said Deegan.

During this time, the LCB will investigate such factors as the physical location before approving or declining the application, he said.

Application to the LCB has been posted and made public to allow time for any appeals to be made against the University's obtaining the license.

"We don't anticipate much objection from the commercial people in the area," said Deegan. "We won't be competing with local pubs like Kelly's."

The procedure for serving alcohol, if a liquor license is obtained, has not yet been determined, according to Deegan.

"We might be able to resurrect the Cat's Eye, or Monday night football kind of thing," said Deegan.

He added that the license "does not grant us the authority to violate the laws of the Commonwealth, and the drinking age of 21 would have to be observed."

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, and secretary of the Belle Air Corporation, said that the license would be "an important improvement to the whole alcohol program, and would be used in conjunction with it. It is a natural outgrowth of the program."

Graffiti Marks Connelly Center

Vandals caused $400-$500 damage to the Connelly Center last week on Thursday night, the eve of Halloween, according to center director Marc Tuchman.

The vandals used what appeared to be oil-based spray paint to deface the side of the building facing Kennedy Mall.

Tuchman said the vandalism must have occured in the early hours of the morning, since he saw the building undamaged at approximately 11:30 p.m. Thursday.

Because chemicals would not remove the paint stains, Tuchman said the side of the building would need to be sand-blasted next week and then refinished.

Fr. John Deegan, vice-president for Student Life, noted that "as far as buildings are concerned, we've not been plagued with that type of vandalism in the past."

"Most students, I think, would be outraged at something like that," he said.

"If it is a member of the Villanova community who vandalized the building," said Deegan, "we hope others will put pressure to them so that we can come to terms with the people."

ACS Meeting

On Wednesday, Nov. 12 at 7:00 p.m. the ACS will meet to plan events for the coming semester. Any member is invited to attend and to give input for events they would like during the second semester. The meeting will be held in the ACS office located in 213 Dougherty.

Baby Food Drive

The Association of Commuter Students in conjunction with Campus Ministry will be running a baby food drive during Hunger Awareness Week for November 16-22. Bins will be placed in Dougherty and Bartley cafeterias. Any donation of baby food would be appreciated.

Connelly Cntr. Regulations

At the September, 1980, meeting of the Connelly Center Board of Directors, the Board approved the "Connelly Center Space Reservations Policies and Procedures" document. This document is the basis for reserving all space within the Connelly Center. During the October, 1980, meeting of the Connelly Center Board of Directors, the "Connelly Center Building Rules and Regulations" document was approved. Information contained within this document describes the general building rules related to the use of the Connelly Center. Both documents together represent major policy decisions that have been made by the Board this year. Students, faculty, staff and alumni who are interested in receiving copies of these documents should make their request to Mr. Marc E. Tuchman, Director of the Connelly Center, at extension 7270.

Geography Lecture

On Tues., Nov. 11, the Geographical Society will present a lecture by Mr. Thomas R. Hickey entitled: "Geographers and Transportation Planning." The meeting will be held at 12:30 p.m. in Room 305 Tolentine. Mr. Hickey graduated from Villanova in 1978, with a major in geography. He is currently a transportation planner for the Montgomery County Planning Commission.

Graterford Trip

All those interested in a trip to Graterford State Prison with the pre-law society: There will be a meeting Tuesday, Nov. 11th. You must be there or contact an officer of the society to go. The trip will be on Nov. 19th.

Exam Choking?

Don't choke on your exams. If you find yourself forgetting material on your midterms that you were sure of while you were studying, you may be a victim of TEST ANXIETY! Come to the Counseling Center in 106 Corr Hall and find out. If you are we can help you score higher on your finals.

Villanovans for Life

The Villanovans for Life cordially invite you to the 1980 Villanova premiere of the film "assignment: Life" on Tuesday, Nov. 11, at 7:30 p.m. in the West Lounge. This is a film so powerful, so compelling, every student and faculty member should see it. A short discussion with refreshments will follow the film.

Senior House

The yearbook is sponsoring a contest for the best senior house picture. Gather up your friends — your house, your apartment, your carpool, and even your dorm — and submit your picture by Nov. 14 for a cash prize. All pictures will be in the senior section of the yearbook. Send your picture to Belle Air, Box 209 Tolentine, or to the Belle Air mail box on the 2nd floor of Dougherty or drop off in the yearbook office in St. Mary's.

Give Blood

IF you were hospitalized and needed a transfusion, you'd certainly expect blood to be available. But did you ever stop to think where this supply of blood came from? The Red Cross doesn't supply blood — nor do hospitals. Only other people can produce and supply blood for other people.

Next week Alpha Phi Omega, Villanova's National Service Fraternity, will be running a 350-pint bloodmobile. Without our donations and those from other civic groups, businesses, churches, and schools, blood won't be available for hospital patients.

Giving blood is a simple thing to do. It takes about 60 minutes of your time and is no big deal for the donor. However it's a very big deal for the person on the receiving end of the transfusion. Did you know that the Penn-Jersey Region of hospitals NEEDS over 1300 pints of blood every day? Help maintain our public blood supply. It won't be there for any of us unless people like us put it there.

Film Course

The Theatre Dept. is offering a new course in film studies for the Spring, 1981, semester. The course is entitled Film Genre (Theatre 2013) and will focus next term on Science-Fiction film. The class meets Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 until 2:45 p.m. and is taught by Professor Christopher Sharrett.

Gift Drive

Project: Sunshine's Christmas Gift Drive
Benefit patients in local State Hospitals
Ways in which YOU can help:

1. General Gift — approximately $5.00 value; either wrapped or unwrapped; egs. toiletries, scarves, neckties, books, etc.
2. Personalized Gift — gift selected to fill a patient's specific request; approximate value: $5-$10; (please contact Social Action Office to reserve a gift to be given).
3. Monetary Donation — any amount; if a check, make payable to: Patients Rehabilitation Fund, Haverford State Hospital, OR Patients Rehabilitation Fund, Norristown Hospital.

The Office for Social Action Programs will receive all gifts up until December 5th.

For any additional information regarding the Gift Drive, please contact: Office for Social Action Programs, 121 Tolentine Hall, Ext. 4075.

Thank you for your consideration and generosity!

S.C.O.D. is back! Watch for a series of new leadership training seminars sponsored by the Student Activities Office and the Student Committee for Organizational Development. Training for the 80's.

Engineering Careers Lecture

The Engineering Joint Council will hold Phase II of its Career Development Program, Insight to Industry, on Thursday, Nov. 20, at 7:00 p.m. in Tolentine 310. Speakers will discuss the pros and cons of an engineering career in big business, small business, or government. All engineering students are strongly urged to attend. Refreshments will be served afterwards.

Ecology Club

There will be a meeting of the Ecology Club on Thursday, Nov. 13, at 12:45, in Room G-17 of Mendel Hall. At this meeting plans for a speaker for the club will be finalized. Anyone with an interest or concern about the environment in which we live is invited to attend.

Pre-Law Society

There will be a pre-law society meeting Thursday, Nov. 13th. Dr. Reimone will speak on his intern program in law for undergraduates. All members should attend.

Bicycling Club

The V.U. Bicycling club will hold a 25 mile ride this Sunday leaving from the front of the Connelly Center at 1 p.m. Students and faculty are invited to participate.

Accounting

The Accounting Society will hold its last scheduled meeting on Thursday, Nov. 13, at 12:45, in Bartley Room 209. The speaker will be a representative from Girard Bank and the topic will be "Accounting in the Banking Industry." All members are urged to attend, as the topic allows you to learn about another opportunity within the accounting profession.

Auditions

Auditions for "Six Characters in Search of an Author," the famous comedy-drama by Luigi Pirandello, will be held on Nov. 15, 1-5 p.m., and on Nov. 16, 1-5 p.m. and 7-10:30 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Actors are requested to give two-minute presentations of dramatic material, using characters similar to their own age and type. Please wear comfortable clothing. Actors of all ages and types are needed. Please call 645-4760 for an appointment.

Discount Vasey Tickets

Student discount tickets will be available for Villanova Theatre's production of Bertolt Brecht's "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" which runs Nov. 12-15 and Nov. 19-22 at 8 p.m. Ticket prices for students are $4.00 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $5.00 on Fridays and Saturdays.

Students rush tickets will again be available. Tickets unsold by 7:50 p.m. on the nights of performance will go on sale to students for $2.00 apiece.

A valid 1980-81 student I.D. will be necessary for all student discounts.

Student Art Contest

World Research, Inc., the San Diego, California-based non-profit, non-partisan educational and research group, has announced that it's sponsoring a nationwide art competition among high school and college students to find a new, bold, identifiable logo design, according to Barbara Stevens, promotion director for World Research. All entries must be received by midnight, Dec. 30, 1980, to be eligible for the $500 First Prize. The art competition is open to all high school and collage students. Students interested in submitting a logo design should write Art Contest, World Research Institute, San Diego, California 92121 for entrant requirements and contest details.

Lynx Magazine

Last call. All poems and short stories for publication in the Lynx literary magazine must be submitted to the English Office (201 Vasey) by Tuesday, November 11.

Space Research Scholarship

The National Space Club will award a $3,500 scholarship for the academic year 1981-1982. The scholarship is in memory of Dr. Robert H. Goddard, America's rocket pioneer. The award is given to stimulate the interest of talented students in the opportunity to advance scientific knowledge through space research and exploration. The 1981 Award Winner will be introduced to the nation's leaders in science, government and industry at the Goddard Memorial Dinner to be held March 27, 1981.

The terms of the scholarship are as follows:

1. The applicant must be a U.S. citizen, in at least the junior year of an accredited university, and have the intention of pursuing undergraduate or graduate studies in science or engineering during the interval of the scholarship.
2. The selection for the Award is made by the NSC Committee on Scholarships on the basis of the following:
   a. official transcript of college record;
   b. letters of recommendation from faculty;
   c. accomplishments demonstrating personal qualities of creativity and leadership;
   d. scholastic plans that would lead to future participation in some phase of the aerospace sciences and technology;
   e. personal need is considered, but is not controlling.
3. Applicants should apply by letter and provide the necessary data requested in a, b, c, d, and e, above no later than January 12, 1981, to:

   National Space Club
   c/o Dr. Benjamin N. Early
   1629 K Street, N.W., Suite 700
   Washington, DC 20006

   Dr. Early is Chairman of the Scholarship Committee.
4. Upon final completion of his work, the Winner shall prepare a brief report on a topic of his selection to be presented to the National Space Club.

Funds awarded are paid to the Winner through his university before the new academic year begins. The Winner is eligible to compete for a second year if the circumstances and his accomplishments are warranted.

German Lit Course

This course will open up to non-German students an opportunity to read and discuss some of the truly great writings in German literature: Goethe's Faust I, Part I and his world-famous Werther, Schiller's portrayal of the struggle between Queen Elizabeth I and Mary, Queen of Scots, in his Mary Stuart; Heinrich von Kleist's dislodging The Earthquake in Chile and his drama of the disobedience of a young leader in battle, Prince Friedrich von Homburg.

We shall also read, among others, E.T.A. Hoffmann's master detective story, Mademoiselle de Scudery, Gottfried Keller's hilarious Clothes Make the Man, Chamisso's story of the young man who sells his shadow to the devil in The Strange Story of Peter Schlemihl and Thomas Mann's "artist versus life" searching The Child Prodigy.

If you like to read, if you can reason logically, and feel that you can handle literary and cultural facts, and a fair amount of note-taking, then contact Dr. Mulligan in St. Thomas Hall, room 202. Prior permission by Dr. Mulligan is a prerequisite. Maximum number of students: 20. No auditors.

The Villanovan publishes FYI as a service to the Villanova community. We regret that we can only print as many as space will allow and we can only guarantee publication of paid classified ads.

Funds Raised for Professor

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

A defense fund to pay for the legal expenses incurred by Dr. William Waegel, a Villanova faculty member who has been subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury, has been coordinated by two Villanova sociology professors.

Dr. Brian Jones

Waegel's legal expenses currently total $2,900, of which $700.00 had been raised at the beginning of this week.

Waegel, an associate professor of sociology, gave information to government agencies concerning a criminal offense on the conditions that he would not have to reveal his source or be revealed as a source himself. Waegel has since been subpoenaed four times to divulge the name of his source, and each time has refused to identify the person involved.

A letter signed by Dr. George Murphy of the English department was sent to over 900 Villanova faculty and staff members at the end of last week, asking that contributions to the fund be sent to the sociology department. In his letter, Murphy notes that "It is very rare when the claims of legality and morality are diametrically opposed . . . it has happened in the case of Bill Waegel."

The defense fund for Waegel has been coordinated by Dr. Brian Jones and Dr. Barry Young, both of the sociology department. Jones said he expects a "substantial amount" of money to start coming into the fund.

Explaining his involvement in the fund, Jones said, "A number of us who are colleagues of Bill's got together after we learned the details of this incident and tried to discuss the appropriate way to respond. Since one of the main issues of our legal system is economic we thought we would at least take that off Bill's mind if we could. We're coordinating the fund, but there are a large number of faculty members who have expressed desire to help."

Asked how much money is expected to be raised through the fund, Jones said, "A lot depends on how long the case remains in litigation. At this point we have no way of knowing since he can be subpoenaed any time by the grand jury. This is why we need a continuing fund rather than just a bill we can pay at this stage. To date it looks like it will cost $3,000.00, but it could easily be higher." Jones is planning to keep a record of who has contributed money in the event that more money is raised than will be needed.

The issue is important to Jones "because it represents an important moral decision which is also related to matters such as confidentiality of a faculty member. This is a fund for someone actively defending a moral issue."

According to co-coordinator Young, a rally will be held at the end of November if the funds raised fall short of what is needed.

Discussing his involvement with the fund, Young said, "I think we have to share each other's burdens. He is of course a colleague and a friend." Young also noted that the case involves "both the persuasive and legal power over a citizen."

Murphy, who wrote the letter asking for contributions, explained, "He (Waegel) is in a situation not of his own making that conceivably any citizen could get into and I think he deserves help. He is caught between legality and morality." Asked how he thinks the campus community will respond to the case, Murphy said, "I have no idea what sort of support will be generated, but even very small contributions will help."

Checks for the fund should be made out to the Bill Waegel Defense Fund. According to Jones, "If people, including students, have smaller contributions, they can be put in an envelope and dropped off to the secretary in the sociology department."

New Stadium Lighting Delayed By Ordinance

By BILL CLARK

The installation of lights at Villanova's Goodreau Stadium is being blocked by a Radnor Township ordinance.

According to Joseph Sousa, director of community relations for Radnor Township, "The zoning ordinance for institutional districts in Radnor limits the height of any structure to fifty feet."

"There seems to be a disagreement over whether the lights are structures or an addition to the stadium," said Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance.

"We were under the impression from the township that the lights were considered to be an addition to the stadium. In that case, no permit was required and they are perfectly within the Township code.

"Now, they (Radnor Township) are saying that the lighting standards are considered structures," said Trucks.

Villanova University plans to request a zoning variance from the township at the November 20 meeting of the Zoning Commission.

"Right now, it looks like we'll get the variance," said Trucks. "In that case, we'll begin immediately to put up the lights."

According to maintenance estimates, the installation of the lights will cost between $117,000 to $125,000.

There will be six lighting standards placed around the stadium, which will be one hundred feet high. Two of the poles will contain twelve lighting fixtures, with the other four standards having ten fixtures.

The athletic department has set aside the field each night from 6:00-10:00 p.m. for intramural use.

The lights can also be adjusted to various levels of intensity for different types of usage. This permits the University to save on energy costs.

The new lighting is the next step in the improvement of Villanova's athletic facilities.

Faculty Debates Economic Policy

By BILL ROCK

Three Villanova professors from the economics department participated in a debate on the economic policies of this year's three major presidential candidates. The debate, sponsored by the Economics Society, took place on Wednesday, October 29.

Dr. Joseph Lucia represented the positions of President Carter; Dr. James Clarke defended the proposals of Ronald Reagan; and Dr. Charles Zech supported John Anderson's economic ideas.

Lucia opened by explaining that he was not completely enthused with Jimmy Carter, but that he felt the other two candidates could only do worse.

"Inflation is definitely a problem, but other countries do have it worse," claimed Lucia. "The unemployment picture here is pretty good. We seem to be making a very quick recovery from the recession. Things just aren't that bad."

Lucia does believe they could be "that bad," with Ronald Reagan as president. He expressed doubt over Reagan's claim that he will cut taxes, while at the same time increase spending on arms.

Clarke opened his argument by professing his enthusiastic support for Reagan and placing most of the blame for this country's economic woes on the democratic Congress of the last two years.

"The problems are obvious," Clarke said. "Productivity is down, growth rates are stagnant, unemployment rates are spiraling upward, interest rates are unbelievable. But all these are symptomatic of the biggest problem — inflation."

Clarke stated that Americans are wrong in blaming inflation on the Arabs or on labor unions. The true cause of the problem, he believes, is government spending. "If a government won't balance the budget, it will have inflation problems," he declared.

Clarke believes that the most important thing about a Reagan presidency will be "a change in tone," a new way of approaching these problems.

Zech opened his argument by charging that Carter and Reagan are either both ignorant of economics or liars. He attacked their policies of tax cuts. "This will only increase aggregate demand and hence increase inflation," Zech argued.

He stated that the stimulation of productivity is too far "down the line," and that the immediate problem is inflation.

According to Zech, Reagan and Carter ignore employment, while "Anderson wishes to reduce social security taxes so an employer can afford to lure the worker." Zech also praised Anderson's proposed gasoline tax, saying that "if we raise the price, we will cut consumption. We've seen that already."

Presidential Election Analyzed

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

A conservative mood prevalent throughout the United States is responsible for the victory of Ronald Reagan in the race for the highest office in the land, according to Dr. Priscilla G. Hopkirk, chairman of the political science department.

The Republican two-term former governor of California swept the country in part due to a negative vote against Democratic President Jimmy Carter. Dr. Hopkirk believes that this significant protest vote was "a reflection of the lack of jobs, a decline in the standard of living, and frustration with foreign policy."

At the same time, Mr. Reagan's "macho approach" of decrying the inability of the United States to dominate the world, coupled with his appealing predictions for the future and with his optimism, persuaded a substantial bloc of voters to propel him into the White House.

Dr. Hopkirk observed that during the campaign the message of the now-President-elect Reagan evoked a feeling of "no belt tightening," whereas the President was still remembered for his exhortation to "alter life styles." The professor is of the opinion that President Carter was probably being more realistic here; his repudiation at the polls suggests that the public does not care to be told that the United States "can't always be on top of the world."

Foreign relations notwithstanding, Dr. Hopkirk feels that Mr. Reagan won the election primarily on domestic issues, including help from "right-wing evangelical groups."

On the Congressional level, the Republicans eked out a razor-thin majority in the Senate after Tuesday's elections. Ordinarily it is gratifying for a party to see that at least one House in the legislative branch contains a majority party the same as the president's affiliation; however, Dr. Hopkirk notes with caution that President Carter has had a solid Democratic majority in both houses — Senate and House of Representatives — and yet encountered substantial difficulty in having his programs approved by Congress.

Dr. Hopkirk compared the current era with that of the 1930's, which saw huge members of voters switching their political party registrations from Republican to Democratic. She firmly asserted that there will not be a similar crossing over of Democrats to Republicans in the near future, for today we have the independent factor: people are voting for a person rather than for a party today, in contrast to the situation of a half century ago.

Twenty years ago a Republican president, Dwight D. Eisenhower, was leaving office, to be succeeded by eight years of Democratic presidencies under John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson; this in turn was followed by eight years of more Republicans under Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford; next came the Democratic Jimmy Carter, and now another Republican. The reason for such change in political preference is that dissatisfied voters will let their feelings be known; clearly, an adverse reaction against the entering Administration will be felt if the domestic issues responsible for Mr. Reagan's election are not resolved.

The other factors leading to President Carter's defeat included the hostage issue, which Dr. Hopkirk feels was at first helpful to the President, but then resulted in his being unfairly cashiered for alleged manipulation of the crisis. Also, "extreme statements" made about the Republican nominee's purported desire for war doubtlessly backfired.

Dr. Hopkirk expects President Reagan to broaden his base of appeal, particularly to moderates. She imagines that one or two Democrats will be given Cabinet posts; also, a woman in the Cabinet is a possibility. The key appointment is that of Secretary of State; the professor feels that Dr. Henry A. Kissinger would "ease foreign fears" in that capacity, "especially in China."

In general, the 1980 Presidential election did not give most voters grand illusions of the candidates, Dr. Hopkirk feels that "the direct primary is responsible for the mediocrity of the candidates." With the change in the ideological direction in Congress as well as in the Presidency, the final judgment of results will be postponed to a later date.

Grad Programs Offer Leadership Training

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Villanova's Graduate School is adding on three new programs to help alleviate some of the confusion in today's bureaucratic organizations. Agencies are lacking professionals who are also qualified to direct them, resulting in ineffective leadership. Villanova's new programs include instruction in leadership.

The new programs are the Master of Human Organization of Science, the Master of Science in Nursing and the Graduate Tax Program.

An interdisciplinary approach is taken in order to offer a wide choice of courses within each master. "I am very confident that in the future, more kinds of graduate programs are going to be developed in the way these fairly unique programs are," said Dean Bernard A. Downey of Villanova's Graduate School.

The Master of Human Organization of Science program is based upon five required core courses and five courses in one of the specialized areas. The core courses cover administration and management aspects. The specialized areas focus on public and quasi-public agencies related to criminal justice, public administration, and human services. Students are required to study only one of these three areas.

Courses in this master program are taught by professors from many different departments. "They are teaching students in their specific areas, and in a sense, a degree in management is also included," noted Downey.

"These new graduate programs have begun because of a displayed need in the local community," said Downey. A questionnaire, distributed to the surrounding areas, revealed a great interest in specialized and management graduate degrees.

Work experience is an important part in these specialized area. Students are placed in an organization or agency related to their field of interest.

Ninety-two students enrolled in the new program for the fall semester. "The community really wants these Masters," said Downey.

The school's Master of Science in Nursing is an advanced course designed to prepare teachers of nursing, practice for schools of nursing, staff development departments, and continuing education programs. It also prepares nurse managers for administrative positions in hospitals and related health agencies.

Villanova's School of Law and College of Finance jointly offer the Graduate Tax Program. Accountants and lawyers have similar functions and frequently overlap in business. A substantial portion of the tax laws consist of accounting concepts which are adopted and administered through the legal process.

Students entering with a law degree will be awarded an L.L.M. in taxation. Students with an accounting degree will receive Masters in taxation. The program provides an accountant with a familiarity with the legal process and gives the lawyer a working understanding of fundamental accounting concepts.

Villanova's graduate programs are basically designed to be studied on a part-time basis. Classes are scheduled in the evenings and on Saturdays for students who work full time.

Harvard Prof Lectures

By BETH WHITE

Raoul Berger, professor emeritus from Harvard University and a renowned authority on Constitutional law, spoke to a large crowd gathered at Villanova Law School last Tuesday and Wednesday.

Tuesday's lecture was centered on Executive Privilege and Professor Berger was joined by two respondents, Professor Donald Dowd and Gerald Frug (both professors of Villanova's Law School) and four panelists. Berger addressed the question of executive privilege, Dowd and Frug responded and rebutted Berger's statements, and questions were posed to the speakers by the student panelists. Berger established his credibility on the subject with his book, Executive Privilege: A Constitutional Myth, published in 1974.

Berger's presentation Wednesday was centered on "The Role of the Supreme Court in a Democratic Society" and after his lecture, Berger fielded questions from the audience. Berger claimed that he was a "constitutional scholar by default, since no one else ever studied it."

Berger was emphatic in his disagreement with the power which the Supreme Court presently poseses, which he feels that the Constitution grants to the legislative bodies alone.

After Berger annunciated some of the deficiencies of the present system, he proposed some practical solutions. He considered the areas of the ammendment process and the veto power of the executive and legislative branches.

Budget Prepared

By RICHARD Di STEFANO

Each year the Villanova University budget is revised in order to reflect changes in the cost of maintaining the University. Several drafts and proposals are made until the budget is finally acceptable to administration, faculty, student, and alumnus representatives.

Edward V. Murray, assistant to the President of the University and chairman of the Administration Budget Committee for the next year, hopes that the final rendering of the budget will be prepared by February, although he noted that sometimes, as last winter, the process takes longer to complete.

Dean Alvin A. Clay of the College of Commerce and Finance, is the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee. He observed that Villanova's enrollment is nearly at capacity, therefore revenue will be generated from the same number of students in 1981-82 as from the current academic year. Since the University's expenses are increasing, it may be expected that the cost to each student will rise.

The question of the extent to which the tuition hike will have an impact on students is a central point of contention. The student representatives have suggested a 5 percent increase to cover higher costs and expenses. The faculty delegates proposed a 13.9% increase, due in part, as Murray explains, "to make up for the lost ground of the last four years."

The first budget proposal contained a deficit of $6.1 million. This is expected to diminish with further budget proposals between now and February.

Football Players Suspended

"We parked in front of the apartments and walked into the courtyard. When we entered, Jim Still and I were about thirty feet behind Phillippy and McCarthy," continued Long. "When we got into the courtyard, there was already one police car there. Right after that, two other cruisers arrived."

Long denied that the four were either carrying any weapons. "If I was holding anything, where was it when the cops came?" he asked.

According to Lt. John Malloy of Lower Marion police, someone was stationed near the apartment after the first call by the girls. "At 1:15 a.m., an officer was keeping an eye on the party which was still going on. The two football players came back and brought friends with them. They tried to get into the party and were behaving in a disorderly manner."

Long denied that the four behaved in a disorderly manner. "When the policeman came up to us, I said, 'Officer, I'm totally coherent. I haven't been drinking. Where would you like me to go?' "

"Jim McCarthy kept saying 'yes, sir and no, sir,' " continued Long. "Paul Phillippy just raised his hands and said 'Look at my face, Look at my face.' By this time, everyone in the courtyard was looking out. They all heard what went on."

"When we got down to the police station, we pleaded guilty to the charge of disorderly conduct. We didn't have enough money for a lawyer or anything like that, so we felt that we had no choice."

Long said that the Disciplinary Review Board had mentioned at the hearing that the four of them were arrested for the incident.

Phillippy felt that the charges before the hearing were too general for him to prepare a good case. "In the letter from the Board, we were charged with fighting, endangering the safety of others, and deliberately destroying and damaging the property of others," said Phillippy.

"When we got to the hearing, the girls had a three-page typewritten statement. We had no idea that they would ever say we weren't at the party or were carrying anything into the party. How can you defend something that you never knew you were accused of?" asked Phillippy.

"I had witnesses who could have backed me up. People were at the party that could testify I was there. I also have a witness who went back to the apartment the next day. He said that the girls told him that there was no damage to the apartment. I could have proved this," said Phillippy.

"As it turned out, it was our word against theirs. They just didn't believe us," Phillippy said.

Commenting on the results of the hearing, the girls said they were very disappointed. "What we requested wasn't done at all. We didn't want them kicked out of school or have their scholarships revoked. We were threatened with eviction, so we wanted a written statement to our landlord. We can't understand the action that was taken," said the girls.

"We also said at the hearing that Jim Still had absolutely nothing to do with the incident at all," they asked.

"We were told we would be contacted within a week about the action that the Disciplinary Review Board was going to recommend. We have not heard anything from them yet. In fact, the first time we found out about this was when someone opened up the Inquirer on the train one morning," said the girls. "We feel like we were really used by the administration."

The four football players have appealed to Deegan to either reverse or lessen the punishment.

Deegan said that he was reviewing the decision, but that the case would not be reopened.

The girls said, however, that Deegan telephoned them this past Wednesday about the case.

"If the decision is changed, we will do it as fast as possible," added Deegan. "We don't want anyone to miss classes if it can be avoided."

Deegan said that the two players suspended can reapply to the Dean of Men's office to be readmitted for next semester. He added that they may be permitted to come back on probation.

"We are following the due process in this case. Our decisions can be second-guessed, but we are trying to be fair," said Deegan.

"As far as the final procedures for any disciplinary case are concerned, they end at this office. Of course, I guess anyone can go to Father President Driscoll, who is my boss," said Deegan.

College Receives Grants

By LAURIE MILLER

The College of Engineering has recently received grants totaling $16,270 from industrial and governmental organizations. These grants will aid in the effort to introduce the interactive use of computers and computer graphics into upper-level engineering design courses.

Specific grants have been received from the ALCOA Foundation ($16,500), Sun Company ($75,000) Westinghouse Educational Foundation ($75,000), Exxon ($100,000), and the National Science Foundation ($249,770). Under its Comprehensive Assistance to Undergraduate Science Foundation (CAUSE) program, the National Science Foundation chose Villanova's proposal along with 63 others from among 302 received.

According to the Dean of Engineering, Robert D. Lynch, the University is making an honest effort to expose students to the new techniques and hardware similar to the modern industrial design environment. The effort will extend over three years and began in September 1980. Funds will be used to purchase interactive analytical and graphical computer equipment and programs. New techniques, concepts and instructions will be adapted into the program.

Eventually, the project will significantly expand the facilities and capabilities of the college's Interactive Computation Center established in 1978. In addition it "will provide Villanova's engineering students with a design environment more closely resembling that of industry in the future as well as providing Villanova's engineering faculty with a valuable expertise in interdisciplinary interactive computer-aided design," said Lynch.

The use of computers in engineering and manufacturing functions is growing. The driving force behind that growth is the incentives in the United States to increase productivity. These improvements of the design education will aid Villanova's engineering graduates in the future, Lynch believes.

Award Nominees

The University Fellowship Committee has completed on-campus interviews for the 1980 competition for the Fulbright, Marshall, and Rhodes Fellowships and the Harry S. Truman Scholarship. Based on these interviews, the Committee (Drs. Earl Bader, Raymond Cummings, John Doody, chair, Charles Helmetag, and Mr. Gerhard Bonas) has nominated the following students:

For the Fulbright (providing for one year of graduate study abroad): Thomas Bevilacqua, Daniel Fleming, Vincent Hausmann, Mercedes Ildefonso, Stephen Lanshe, Robert Nungesser, Annette Telgarsky, Christina Toland, and Allyson Wilgar;

For the Marshall (providing for two years of study at any British university): William Guerin, Mr. Hausmann, Laura Proske, William Rock, Ms. Telgarsky, and Ms. Toland;

For the Rhodes (providing for two years of study at Oxford): Karen Hiznay, Ms. Ildefonso, and Ms. Proske;

For the Harry S. Truman (providing for a total of four years of study leading to a career in public service): sophomores John Mudd and Michael Senoyuit.

Faculty Appointment Controversy

Evaluating Methods is Necessary

In the Fall of 1979 an English department search committee began its work to fill two full-time teaching positions. Using teaching experience and publication material as criteria for some 500 candidates, the committee attempted to find the best among all possible choices, to evaluate and to judge who would be among the most qualified. The committee made its choices. Two professors were hired.

The committee also chose to reject a number of candidates, including Dr. Vincent Sherry. However, by an unusual Presidential appointment shrouded in secrecy and brought about by what appears to have been pressure exerted on Father Driscoll by a "major donor," Vincent Sherry is teaching at Villanova.

In his Statement on the Philosophy of Education of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, Dean O'Malley expresses the basic ideals underlying a liberal arts education. He also discusses the liberal arts instructor: "It is the teacher-educator who is the medium between curriculum and student, who is the key and central factor in the transmittal of a value-laden education."

A major donor with a great deal of influence in academic affairs has now become the medium. What values are transmitted to the student when donors with large gifts are allowed to decide matters of academic affairs and teacher selection?

Dr. Sherry is not unqualified; however, 150 candidates were ranked above him, and the method of his selection is unqualifiably in direct opposition with the basic liberal arts education espoused in Father O'Malley's statement.

A Faculty Assembly committee report on Sherry's appointment made available to faculty members only was obtained by the Villanovan last week. The Faculty Assembly was to debate whether "to release the document to the Villanova community at large." The Villanovan's publishing last week of information which was contained in the report made that debate and any decision moot.

A faculty appointment is not simply the concern of faculty members or the Faculty Assembly. An investigative body as such has a responsibility to the student and to the entire Villanova community, who are also affected by the Presidential appointment. Student tuition, besides gifts from major donors, keeps the University in operation. Students are also taught by faculty, the major donors exist outside of the University. Any discussions as to whether the report should have been released to the general public smacks of the same secrecy and suppression that marked the Presidential appointment itself.

The Faculty Assembly investigative report is frought with some very disturbing information. It reveals the extent to which a University President is responsive to pressures from outside sources, namely a major donor. After the rejection of Sherry and the hiring of two full-time professors, Father Driscoll, according to the report, "felt increasingly obligated to find a position for the candidate-in-question in accordance with the wishes of the outside sources." One is justifiably shocked at the amount of influence major donors have in determining staff who will be responsible for transmitting a value-based liberal arts education to the student.

How can one reconcile the influences money has in determing position at an institution supposedly above the valueless, the banal? Somehow, people felt Villanova was above that. Last year we found out otherwise.

Perhaps equally disturbing as the Presidential appointment is the language, attitude, and conclusions expressed in the report itself.

The committee report maintains that the English department never made an evaluation of the candidate in question other than "stating a preference for a number of others."

The committee by sending a rejection letter to Dr. Sherry and many others and by choosing two candidates to recommend to the Dean, Academic Vice-President and the President undoubtedly made an evaluation, "distinguishing between the good and the better," in this case striving for excellence in teaching. Stating that a search committee's work does not involve evaluation and discrimination is absurd. Tell a rejected candidate he was not evaluated, only not preferred.

The logic of the report is also contradicted by Driscoll's insistence that an evaluation did take place.

What is most disturbing of all about the committee report itself is the acceptance of the fact that a major donor exerted a significant influence in an academic decision. The most controversial contents of the affair are contained in the summary of the report. The conclusion being that a failure to communicate the "magnitude of the pressures involved" was responsible for the ensuing controversy. The report does not conclude that the fact is that a major donor has and does influence academic decisions. The committee does not recommend any action to rectify the situation or prevent further such occurrences. A major donor's influence is almost treated as a given in the committee's failure to condemn such influence.

It is the duty of a newspaper to inform students and the Villanova community at large. In a letter to the editor today, Dr. Hahn and Dr. Burke suggest "It is customary among professional journalists who acquire unauthorized material to inform those involved prior to publication."

Clearly, professional newspapers could not exist and would not serve if they notified those who might try to circumvent the publication of such information.

The committee failed in its ascribing the appointment problem as a failure in communications. Possibly the statement on the Philosophy of Education is only that, and that a failure to communicate those ideals which we ascribe to is to blame for the affair and those who treat it lightly.

In her memoir Scoundrel Time Lillian Hellman, playwright and author, describes her personal history of the McCarthy affair, her blacklisting, and her loss of faith in the intellectual. Miss Hellman also speaks of a basic flaw in Americans regarding the past, the unjust:

"It is not true that when the bell tolls it tolls for thee; if it were true we could not have elected Richard Nixon, a man who had been closely allied with McCarthy. We are a people who do not want to keep much of the past in our heads. It is considered unhealthy in America to remember mistakes, neurotic to think about them, psychotic to dwell upon them."

It is the Villanovan's task and the responsibility of all individuals to remember, to call attention to our mistakes and the mistakes of others. Only then can we learn from those mistakes and actively pursue the purpose of a liberal arts education.

Several messages both directly and indirectly were conveyed to the Villanovan throughout this affair and one common one is the feeling that we must somehow recoup, recover, try to forget, and to go on.

It is the opinion of the Villanovan that perhaps this University must stop to reevaluate its methods before choosing to go on.

More Than Just Won-Loss Record

Fans Fail to See Whole Picture

The winds whipping through the University of Delaware football stadium last Saturday carried voices not unfamiliar for this time of year. The Villanova football team is currently 3 and 5 and at best the Wildcats can finish only 6 and 5. This was probably the main reason why several Villanova "fans" were exceptionally vocal regarding Head Coach Dick Bedesem's future coaching plans. To call them crude would be too kind.

Unfortunately, they were unable to take into consideration the overall affect of Dick Bedesem at Villanova. Calling for his ouster due to his won-loss record at this point would only do Villanova more harm than good.

Today the word amateur has all but been removed from most major college athletics. A prime example of this is The PAC-10. Five of the ten members are currently on suspension and ineligible for post-season play due to unethical operating procedures. It is a disgrace and unfortunately sometimes a part of college athletics.

Like most everything else today college sports have become big business. Their dividends are paid in wins. The coach is responsible for keeping his "company" on the black side of the ledger.

The Blue Book here at Villanova states, "Villanova stands for the values inherent in the Judeo-Christian tradition. Its purpose is to articulate those values in the framework of its Roman Catholic Augustinian history."

If this is the purpose and goals of Villanova, then an ouster of Bedesem would be removing one of this institutions finest teachers of its principles.

Aside from his coaching record, which by the way has a better winning percentage (.438) then all Wildcat teams combined for over twenty five years. In fact, from 1953 until today, which includes Villanova's football heyday of the early sixties which featured two postseason bowl appearances, the combined winning percentage is only .431. Bedesem should not be judged only on these terms though.

Coach Bedesem is known for his hard work, yet it is unfortunate many do not have enough contact with him to appreciate his most important qualities. Bedesem preaches honesty, truth and hard work, the first two are not always prevalent in today's coaching ranks.

Recently, Bedesem was faced with the loss of several of his starters to school disciplinary action. Something Woody Hayes would never had stood for. After a biting loss a reporter asked what will Dick Bedesem do to clear up the situation. His reply was, "I've instructed them to act as gentlemen and go through the proper channels. Hey, if school says they are out Dick Bedesem doesn't say that they are back in, we'll just go through the proper channels." That is the only way he does things, the right way. Bedesem is especially highly respected by knowledgeable area reporters who appreciate his straightforward honest answers, win or lose. That is also a very effective public relations tool for this university since often it's first contact with area residents are through these very reporters.

No, those fans were wrong, Dick Bedesem should not go. He is a man who has too many positives to outweigh any negatives. If a win-loss record is to dictate university policy then perhaps it's time for the board of trustees to sit down and redefine their goals. Bedesem is the kind of coach who has a refreshing approach in this day of win or else. Using Villanova's goals in all aspects of administration will mean more in twenty five years then if they won or lost in Delaware back on November 1, 1980.

Bedesem wants to win as much as anyone, he is able to keep athletics in their proper perspective and that is very important. Dick Bedesem is not only a coach but also a teacher, to lose him would be a much greater loss than any win-loss record Villanova could ever achieve.

Defense Fund

To the Members of the Villanova Community:

It is very rare when the claims of legality and morality are diametrically opposed. But it happens, and it has happened in the case of Bill Waegel, a colleague of ours who has deliberately chosen morality over legality and has thus exposed himself to severe legal jeopardy.

The details of this situation will soon be covered by the media, but here, briefly, is the basic situation: Bill, a member of the Sociology Department, is a criminologist and, in the course of his academic duties, was approached by a citizen who said that he had knowledge — innocent knowledge — about a serious crime and wished to pass this information on to the federal authorities. Bill's contact was concerned, however, that, if he were called to testify against the criminals, he would be killed.

Bill then contacted certain federal authorities and passed the information on to them after receiving their promises that the citizen would not be called to testify and that he would remain anonymous. The federal authorities later changed their mind in mid-stream and asked Bill to identify his source. Bill refused to do this because he knows that there is indeed a very real danger that the source would be killed by the criminals or their confederates if they knew his identity.

Bill has now been subpoenaed to appear before a federal investigative grand jury. He continues to refuse to give his source's name on the grounds that the federal authorities have rescinded their promises of confidentiality and, most importantly, because he wants to keep his source alive.

Bill faces up to eighteen months in jail for contempt of the grand jury, and he is prepared to serve that time if worse comes to worse. He has had to engage counsel; and his legal fees already amount to $2,900 and are growing.

I do not know what I would have done were I faced with Bill's terrible dilemma. I do know that I admire what he has done. Academics are unlikely heroes, but I think Bill Waegel is one.

I have contributed $100 to his defense fund and some of his department colleagues have contributed much more than that. May I ask you, please, to make your own contribution to his defense? Make your check out for whatever you can spare to "The Bill Waegel Defense Fund" and send it in care of:

Vandalism

To the Students of Villanova:

Every year seems to bring actions of vandalism and destruction not only on our campus, but in the surrounding community. Each year members of the community become victims of what may seem innocent pranks to some of us, but are irresponsible destruction to those to whom it is done. I ask the students of V.U. to refrain from making Villanova the surrounding community victims of our actions. We are their neighbors, this is their home, and we must respect that. In these past few weeks, one incident that has upset some of our neighbors was the stealing of the Curwen Road and Curwen Circle street signs. Some of us may feel that this does not warrant much concern, however year after year, the residents of these streets fall victim. Continued purchase of the street signs turns out to be expensive for the people of the community. I ask that whoever has stolen this sign, please return it to either the Student Government office, or to its original place. You would be doing a service to V.U., to the people of this area, but most importantly, to yourself.

Respectfully,
Henry J. Amoroso
Student Body President

Response

To the Editor:

I suppose some guy thought that he was doing someone a favor when he marked the locker room doors at Saint Marys. Say Bub, I thought any Tom, Dick or Harry knew that "lady" is considered a discriminatory term — "woman" is the word. Also, where did you receive your education? The word you used is spelled, quite correctly and simply, LADIES not LAIDES. So, do yourself the favor Mac, and stay away from and out of the Womens Locker Room.

It just goes to show you there is no such thing as a broad, dumb or otherwise.

Complaint

To the Editor:

We deeply regret the unauthorized publication of a summary of the Faculty Assembly committee report concerning the controversial appointment to the English Department. The report was prepared at the request of the Faculty Assembly for its own deliberations, not as a final statement to the public at large. The Faculty Assembly is an autonomous body not subject to the University Senate.

Although we would not expect Mr. Hausmann to reveal his source, we would expect, in fairness, that he declare that his use of the report was not authorized by its authors or by the officers of the Assembly.

We would also point out that the article as a whole is Mr. Hausmann's version of what happened; the report does not confirm everything in the article. Finally, it is customary among professional journalists who acquire unauthorized material to inform those involved prior to publication.

Michael E. Burke
Committee Chairman
Jeffrey Hahn
Chairman, Faculty Assembly

Response

Dear Editor:

I would like to take just a moment to commend the Villanovan editors and reporters for the fine investigative reporting that they have done. Particularly, I speak of Vincent Hausmann's article in last week's issue (October 31, 1980) about the "presidential appointment." It always seems when the administration does something negatively, that they try to cover it up or keep it quiet, but when the student body does something negatively, the administration expounds about it week after week. Since each student pays close to $6,000 per year (some more and some less) to attend Villanova University, they have a right to know what transpires "behind the scenes." The only way that most of the students become aware of what is going on at the school is to read the Villanovan; therefore, the Villanovan staff should not be reprimanded in the least because they are only doing their journalistic duty which is to inform the students of the university. Whenever the students do something wrong, they are always criticized by the administration; now quite frankly, "the shoe is on the other foot." The administration (namely Father President Driscoll) has acted wrong, now they deserve the criticism

APO Blood Drive

Dear Members of the Villanova community:

If you were hospitalized and needed a transfusion, you'd certainly expect blood to be available. But did you ever stop to think where this supply of blood came from? The Red Cross doesn't supply blood — nor do hospitals. Only other people can produce and supply blood for other people.

Next week Alpha Phi Omega, Villanova's National Service Fraternity, will be running a 350-pint bloodmobile. Without our donations and those from other civic groups, businesses, churches, and schools, blood won't be available for hospital patients.

Giving blood is a simple thing to do. It takes about 60 minutes of your time and is no big deal for the donor. However, it's a very big deal for the person on the receiving end of the transfusion. Did you know that the Penn-Jersey Region of hospitals NEEDS over 1300 pints of blood every day? Help maintain our public blood supply. It won't be there for any of us unless people like us put it there.

Sincerely,
Tom Wilt
Chairman, APO Blood Drive

Phillies

To the Editor:

In the past few weeks, the city of Philadelphia has erupted into a turbulent frenzy. The Phillies' victory in the World Series has brought a new definition of the word "celebration" to the "city of brotherly love." Yet, as one views the jubilation of these Philadelphia "fans", one finds difficulty in trying to understand their enthusiasm. Are these exuberant "Phillie fanatics" the same people that booed and cursed the Phillies when all looked dim? Indeed there must be some loyal fans out there. Those that remained loyal even in the face of adversity! If these apparent few do actually exist, how do we find them? These true supporters are lost among the masses. Everyone in the Philadelphia area now owns at least one Phillies' cap, two Phillies' pennants, and fantasizes about meeting the "Phillie Phanatic" in person. The Phillies' bandwagon is on the move and all of the sudden there are a great deal more passengers aboard.

This type of occurrence, however, is not foreign to this area. The typical Philadelphia athletic fan has to be one of the most "fair-weathered" fans in the country. The Philadelphia Eagles' situation is conclusive to this hypothesis. Five years ago, in view of the Eagles' losing ways, a good Eagles' ticket could be obtained without a great deal of effort on the part of the consumer. Most Philadelphians probably didn't even realize that there actually was a professional football franchise in their city. The Eagles, however, are now in contention for a play-off position and due to this potential, Philadelphia and its people have felt a metamorphosis. The Philadelphian has now found a place in his heart for "his" Eagles. The color green has taken on a new significance in the city and Dick Vermeil has enough support to run for mayor. Ron Jaworski is now everyone's favorite Polish-American and in order for someone to get a good Eagles' ticket, a person would have to sell his mother, give up his first born child, or perform any combination thereof.

Everyone loves a winner and the average Philadelphian is no exception. However, when they coined the phrase "kick 'em when they're down," a Philadelphia fan must have been in mind.

Kidnap

Dear Friends,

It's getting close to Hunger Awareness Week and the brothers of Lambdi Chi Alpha are staging their third annual "Kidnap for Hunger."

Our kidnap will run between the hours of 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. on November 21, 1980. My brothers will split up into gangs of five and one gangleader will be in touch with you to discuss the kidnap.

We are asking that each organization set a representative up for kidnapping on the 21st. A financial ransom is requested for his safe release.

All proceeds will be donated to the starving people of our world. Your hostage can be picked up in the Belle Air Terrace once the ransom is delivered.

Thank you for your cooperation. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Yours truly,
Thomas Critelli
Vice President
Lambdi Chi Alpha

Commercials

Dear Editor,

I would like to thank the Villanovans For Life political committee for making the Villanova campus aware of the recent commercials being aired on WIFI 92 FM by the NARAL Foundation.

I too feel that these commercials deal with a very controversial issue and that WIFI is not the proper medium through which to express these opinions.

I would also like to encourage students and faculty members alike to write a letter of objection to WIFI 92 and let them know that as a public service agency they should be more selective in there decisions on what their station should broadcast. Certainly young teenagers and adolescents cannot have sufficient knowledge of the rights of the unborn and WIFI 92 should present both sides if they are going to discuss such a controversial issue.

Cafeteria Problems

Dear Editor,

As a newcomer to the Villanova student body, I am very proud to be affiliated with this school. However, one thing that has bothered me, as well as other students, is the violation of the cafeteria tray policy in the pit. It has become increasingly difficult for a group of four or more students to acquire a clear space to sit. It is not only nauseating to see the remainings of someone's meal in front of you, but also inconvenient juggling trays around in order to make room for your own. I realize this problem is not of major importance, but it would make life a bit easier if people would take a few seconds before leaving the cafeteria and return their trays. As a result of everyone's cooperation, the food service staff will have excess time in which to prepare the food, therefore, the cuisine of the pit will be improved. I'm sure everyone will appreciate an improvement of this sort.

Sincerely,
Maureen Nuschke

Iran

Dear Editor,

I would like to take the opportunity to thank the many Villanova students who have shown their concern for the crisis situation in Iran. Over two thousand concerned and conscientious students took the time and effort to sign a petition asking for the release of our fifty-two hostages. The petition, which was sponsored by the Consumer Club, was forwarded to the Moslem students last Thursday, October 30.

Our effort enabled many of us to show that we are concerned and that our thoughts are with the hostages. We are encouraged by the progress of the situation and we are hoping for an immediate end to this problem.

Once again, I would like to thank the students and especially Father Deegan for all the help and support given to us. We look forward to similar help and enthusiasm from the students in our future efforts.

Sincerely,
Sharon Coffin

Americans Throw in Towel

By BILL CLARK
Ex-President, Villanovans for Anderson

Little did they know it, Americans were really choosing more than their next President in last Tuesday's election. The choice presented to us was simply what role should government play in our lives.

Ronald Reagan offered the voters a government that would not interfere in their economic lives, but would dominate their social lives. Jimmy Carter offered the voters a government that was ineffective, but steady. John Anderson offered the voters a government that was innovative, yet realistic. Americans opted for Reagan.

The implications of Ronald Reagan's election will be felt for years to come. Unfortunately, the message sent by his election was that government cannot solve our problems; in fact, the message was that government is our problem.

No one can deny that Jimmy Carter's administration had a devastating effect on this country. Our economic and foreign policies were ignored while Jimmy Carter campaigned for re-election during these last four years. This nation wanted to reject Jimmy Carter. In doing so, however, they also rejected the notion that our society can work together for everyone's benefit.

Ronald Reagan's policies and beliefs show he has little concern for solving our problems. He presented us with a tax cut that gives money disproportionately to the rich. He presented us with a government that would ensure everyone with freedom in the marketplace, but not a decent standard of living. Somehow, someway, everything would work out. And the American people bought it hook, line, and sinker.

I can understand people being disgusted with the actions our government has been taking. But, by voting for Reagan, Americans threw in the towel; they said that a government and a people can no longer make a difference.

During the campaign, John Anderson told the voters that government can still solve our problems. Granted, the solutions would be difficult and unpopular, but they would be attainable. It was not easy to understand how his proposals would help, but it was worth the time.

What about all those Americans who voted for John Anderson? Did they really draw votes away from Jimmy Carter and give the election to Ronald Reagan? Quite the contrary; Jimmy Carter lost the election all by himself.

Despite being able to go to sleep at night realizing that they did not contribute to a Reagan or Carter presidency, Anderson voters sent a message to the political parties of this nation. Anderson voters proved that there are still people out there who are intelligent enough to realize that the problems of this country cannot be solved by mudslinging or image. Anderson voters were fed up with vacuous promises, and showed it.

If democracy is to remain effective; if government is to remain effective, the two parties must nominate the best candidates for the office. Most opinion polls show that a majority of Americans did not feel that they were choosing from the best. One simple question; Why did anyone vote for them?

Now, who really wasted their vote?

By SHARON WINTERS
and MOLLY ROACH

This week The Villanovan has decided to give the students a chance to express their views on the recent Presidential election results. We asked:

Were you surprised by Ronald Reagan's landslide victory in Thursday's election?

What do you think it means for America?

I wasn't really surprised. As the election was drawing to a close, Carter was losing support. If the election was six months earlier, the results might have been different. It just happens that by the time the election came, Reagon won.

A lot of things will change. Reagan has different policies. Whether this is for the best or not, I don't know; but, I hope for the best.

Mary Anczarski — Senior

No. It was a landslide by electorial votes not popular votes. I think that there will be more control over government. He'll be more straightforward with America than Carter. Carter was deceiving in his goals and accomplishments. Besides, things can't get much worse.

Robert Dvoretsky — Junior

Yes, I thought it would be closer than it was and that Anderson would have gotten more votes. It means that they want a strong leader.

Mary Walter — Sophomore

No. Because Ronald called me on election day and told me that he was going to win big. I think that it means strong leadership both at home and abroad and thus a more unified and respected America.

Peter Cieszko — Junior

No. Because Carter was a buffoon, a joke. He should have died in office. Between having a Republican senate and Reagan, we will have more conservative policies and no more free-spending liberals.

Luke Imperatore — Junior

No. I think that the country was ready for a change besides George Bush is a DKE. There will probably be less government spending and better times ahead for America. I don't think that there will be a war.

Michael LaVilla — Junior

No. I think it's good. I think that we'll finally have a strong government. Defense has been too weak for too long. He'll make it strong.

Diane Moratti — Sophomore

I was surprised by the landslide victory. I think that he'll help our economy. His economic policy is really good.

Joan Ripoli — Sophomore

"The Great Dictator"

The Great Dictator was a milestone in Charles Chaplin's career. It was his first all-dialogue film — and it marked the final appearance of his famed tramp character. Chaplin plays a dual role — as Adenoid Hynkle (Der Fooey), and as a meek Jewish barber. When Chaplin made The Great Dictator, the United States had not yet entered World War II, and he received a lot of pressure to halt the production from various groups. Actually, Chaplin began the project because he was painfully aware of how much Adolph Hitler looked like his own universally recognized and loved tramp character — and his devastating caricature of der Fuhrer created a sensation with audiences. The Great Dictator's impact remains as great as at the time of its initial release, and it is the most popular of the Chaplin films with campus audiences.

Reporter Comments on Conditions

Community Resents Nova

By LYNDA FREDERICK

"The University is only a burden and not a benefit," states Ruth Talmadge, reporter for The Suburban and Wayne Times, community newspaper of Radnor Township.

According to Talmadge, there are two reasons for Villanova's negative image in the community; alcoholism, thievery, and noise due to students and the Administration's land use policies. Resentment was doubled two years ago by the approximate $1 million purchase of the Morris Estate because of the estimated student population and the zoning procedure followed by the University, she said.

Villanova, as a private institution, does not pay land taxes and, according to Talmadge, does not make any contributions to the Township in lieu of taxes. This contribution could be considered a fee for services rendered by the community. Talmadge states, "A negative image results because Villanova does not pay taxes, cannot afford donations in lieu of taxes, but can pay approximately $1,000,000 for a piece of land which was bought unconditionally disregarding the Township's zoning laws."

Representing the community, Talmadge feels alcohol parties on campus, sanctioned by the University, are immoral and illegal. This moral aspect is an added resentment towards the University. Radnor Township feels Villanova should make a monetary contribution to relieve the "burdens" it imposes on the community.

Talmadge goes on to state that, although students spend money in the community, it is not always spent in Radnor Township.

Villanova portrays a positive image on an individual rather than an institutional level, states Talmadge. Many Villanova faculty members serve on Radnor's Board of Commissioners and Library Board, but the number of students who contribute to the community is less noticeable. Villanova as an institution, however, is viewed negatively, because of "outright law breaking and a self-created arrogant image."

Talmadge feels communication between the University and Radnor Township could increase if Villanova shared feelings with the community by tightening security on underage drinking, boasting the University's positive aspects, and making financial payments to the Township in lieu of taxes. "The University could get a lot of mileage from a couple hundred dollars," adds Talmadge.

On the other hand, "Facts must be obtained as to what is perceived and what is actual," states Rev. John E. Deegan O.S.A., Vice President for student life at Villanova University.

Deegan argues that, "Students are not concerned about others: therefore, the community gets upset when students are not responsible students."

Concerning land use, specifically the Morris Estate,

Debate Requires Research, Work

By BOB COUREY

Whoever fears to submit any question to the test of free discussion, loves his own opinion more than the truth.
Ancient Proverb

The art of debate goes deeper than just presenting an argument. Many features go into making a good debater. A person must be able to argue intelligently. This entails taking a clear position on an issue and defending it with facts and information. A person must be able to think fast and under pressure.

"Preparation for a debate requires many hours of research and hard work," stated Dr. Russell Church, co-moderator of the debate team and speech professor. "We have to find information and compile it into 'briefs' and 'file boxes' to allow us to have access to the material readily at a debate."

Forensic debate is divided basically into two types, explains Church. One is speech and the other is debate itself. The term speech includes persuasive speaking, impromptu, dramatic and poetic interprepation and prose, among others. Some people participate in both speech and debate, although this is generally not the case.

The format of a debate is similar to that of a tennis tournament in that they are both seated competition. Each team participates in eight preliminary rounds. In four of these rounds, the team takes a negative position on the topic and in the other four rounds, they take the affirmative. Every tournament has octifinals, quarterfinals, semi-finals and then the competition for the victor. In this manner, it is conceivable to go 12 rounds in a single weekend.

The topic that is debated is chosen once a year by a national poll of debate coaches. Each team takes a different aspect of the topic and argues their point. For example, this year's topic is "Should the U.S. significantly increase its foreign military commitments?"

The nation is divided into nine geographic districts for collegiate debate teams. Villanova lies within the seventh district, which encompasses New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Washington, D.C., Virginia and West Virginia.

The debate team is a co-curricular activity funded by the Speech-Communications department. With the proper prerequisites, three credits can be earned by students who act as a member of the team for at least one year and participate in at least six tournaments.

It is led by Dr. Church and Mr. Edwin Rowley. Dr. Teresa Nance is the coach of Villanova's Speech team, which works closely with the debate team.

The Villanova debate team is somewhat handicapped in comparison to other schools in that Villanova does not offer debate scholarships. Also, most of Villanova's debaters do not have extensive high school debate experience. "Even with these handicaps, we are still very competitive. Last year, we were one of the top seven teams in our district," commented Church.

Church feels that there are positive aspects to Villanova's program. "Our program provides for people both with and without debate experience." In schools where debating is highly stressed, the competition is usually too intense for people without experience to join the team.

Some members of the team, such as Larry Maggetti and Cathy Olanich do outside work. They both coach debate teams at local high schools.

When asked how he feels the Hunger Awareness Week Nov. 16-22 is less than 10 days away. Villanova is more than ready. During that week different aspects of Hunger Awareness will be seen throughout campus.

Sunday: 10 a.m. St. Mary's and 11 a.m. Corr Masses: Monsignor Kohl, speaker. 6 p.m. Mass in Main Chapel: Diane Miller, speaker.

Monday: Political Union Debate on the Nestle's Issue, WL Dougherty Hall 7 p.m. "Run For Hunger" 3:00-6:00 p.m. in front of Falvey Library.

Tuesday: A film on Hunger Awareness will be shown in St. Rita's Chapel at 12:00 noon.

Wednesday: "Peace and Justice Day" 9:30, 10:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, films and discussion in Connelly Center. 11:30, rally at Kennedy Mall, 12:30, panel discussion with faculty in Connelly Center.

Thursday: 12:00 film in St. Rita's Chapel. "Fast from Lunch" 11:30-2:00 p.m. faculty panel discussion: Connelly Center Cinema.

Friday: 12:00 film in St. Rita's Chapel. LXA "Kidnap For Hunger."

All Week: Baby food drive, art display in Connelly Square, anti-food waste campaign, all liturgies have hunger theme, peace and justice courses. Education display in library.

With all of these expressions of hunger awareness to be made during November 16-22, it's not too late to get involved. All questions will be answered in the basement of St. Rita's.

'Art' of Sports Creates Life

By DR. JOHN DOODY

"I had a bartender friend in Philadelphia years ago, a devoted baseball fan, who told me, and he said this with tears in his eyes, that the most beautiful thing in the world, more beautiful than any blond, more beautiful than a mountain lake at sunset, was bases filled, nobody out, three and two on the batter and everybody moving with the pitch."

Mind Willie Wilson at bat.

Does Art imitate life? Does Art imitate life? Can we find meaning, purpose, redemption in Art? The answer to all three questions is yes, particularly if we are talking about the Art of Baseball.

For years now, on Saturday nights, we have heard Garrett Mellors in the guise of Chico tell us that "Baseball has been very, very good to me." Now the city of Philadelphia can stand up and say with its favorite adopted son, Frank Edwin McGraw, that baseball has been good to the new city of Champions, the city of pretzels and scrapple.

Some people would have us believe that the championship brought home to Philadelphia on Tuesday night, October 21 was won for the Pope, Paul Owens. Others have written that it was done by and for the twenty five men in red playing a boy's game for astronomical salaries. That it was their redemption, their moment of self-realization which we witnessed that historical evening. That may have been so, but more, much more, took place in Philadelphia in October in 1980.

October 31 was a day of transformation on the Villanova campus. Many people decided to dress-up for the festivities of Halloween. Pictured are just some of the people who caught the eye of our photographer.

A costume contest was held on the 31st by the RSA. To enter the contest, people had to go to dinner dressed in Halloween costumes. Preliminary judging was held in the Day Hop, Good Counsel, St. Mary's, and Stanford cafeterias. Approximately five winners from each cafeteria were sent to a lounge in Dougherty Hall for a final judging.

The winners were from Good Counsel: Mary Jane Gavenda, Rose Malloy, Gina Genzanto, Mary Curtin, Mary Anne Scharle, and Julie Going. Their costumes were the 'Fruit of the Loom' characters.

Michael Novak argues that sports is a form of religion. Sports is a natural religion. It is also an art. It is also a game. But inside those games we can find the same elements which characterize our other symbolic attempts to find and construct the meaning and purpose of life. Finally and most importantly we can seek and find in sports a sense of redemption, the same sort of redemption we struggle for during our lifetime.

Does Sports imitate life? Yes. Does Sports create life? Yes. Can Sports give us a taste of redemption? In 1980, in October, in Philadelphia, loyal Phillies fans discovered that the answer to that last question is Yes! We have concelebrated. Now as fans we celebrate. Give me a high five!

Deegan feels the facts pertaining to University occurrences need validation and the channels of communication between Villanova administrators and Township officials need development. The utilization of the Morris Estate is presently undecided.

Villanova pays Radnor Township between $50,000 to $60,000 annually for police, fire and sanitation service. The University has paid for any services rendered by the community and will continue this practice, states Deegan.

A positive image of Villanova could be enhanced, says Deegan, by having meetings and projects with the community, by welcoming community residents, and by creating rapport with the neighbors.

"The University should be a center for the community to take advantage of," says Deegan. Villanova offers plays, lectures, a free education plan for senior citizens, and an art gallery. These are some of the options made available to the public.

Although some money is spent in the general area, Deegan points out, "We also spend money in the Township. The University acknowledges the Township by allowing community functions to occur on their property.

Deegan admits that public relations need improvement and media coverage increased concerning the positive aspects of the University. Deegan concludes, "We have to cultivate the local editors and neighbors, and let them get to know us better."

Innovative Heads Take Risks

The Group Expands Musically

The Talking Heads fear music.

By JERRY ARTH

The Talking Heads is a band which is nothing if not innovative and willing to take risks. After finally gathering a large following with the tremendous success of its last release, Fear of Music, the band has altered its musical direction radically on its new album, Remain in Light. The results are surprising, sometimes annoying, but never boring.

Remain in Light marks The Talking Heads expansion into the musical realm of reggae and African-influenced sounds. Five extra musicians provide enormous support for the basic Heads' quartet of David Byrne, Tina Weymouth, Jerry Harrison and Chris Frantz. Heavy, driving percussion and a brilliant horn section add a depth and texture to The Talking Heads' music which has never before been realized.

Born Under Punches (The Heat Goes On), a dynamic, infectious song, expresses the standard Talking Heads theme of paranoia and alienation, with Byrne crying for breathing space while "the heat goes on." The best song of Remain in Light, the artistic desire for subjectivity, is Crosseyed and Painless. "Isn't it weird/Looks too obscure to me," goes the refrain, expressing the plebian view of most creativity, while the background vocal, "I'm still waiting," is the Talking Heads stance as they patiently wait for their art to be understood. The lyrics, co-written by Byrne and New Wave innovator Brian Eno, are a bit pretentious, though the reggae beat has the feet tappin' and the fingers snappin.'

The commercial hit from Remain in Light is bound to be Once in a Lifetime. Hiding a nihilistic, thoroughly depre view of the "good life" behi entirely danceable beat, Once Lifetime is sure to be a big s at the discos and rock c where no one even bothers to ten to the lyrics, anyway.

Remain in Light is certain novel venture for a band of Talking Heads reputation as break from the forms which h defined their musical esse Moving away from the b guitars and lurid Byrne sin style, on its new album, the He concentrate more on c plexifying their music and panding the artistic limits. quote Byrne, "We don't wan compromise for the sake of c merciality." EDWARDS HITS THE MAIN POINT

By AMY MacLACHLAN

"To tell you the truth the reason I haven't had an album out for a while is because I can't see giving up six months of my life to sit in a recording studio."

These were the words of Jonathan Edwards at the Main Point last Thursday night. Accompanied by Kenny White on back-up piano and vocals, Edwards lit up the Point in style. It was a rare sold out night at the starving Main Point.

Kenny White showed an infinite amount of talent with his phenomenal vocals and expertise mastery of the piano. He came on at 8 p.m. and played till 9 p.m., managing to keep the surprisingly wild crowd excited.

During the break between White and Edwards, the hostesses came on stage and gave a plea for help on behalf of the endangered age-old tradition of the Main Point to bring its public the new and fresh-up-and coming talent. Let's hope that they can go on.

Edwards appeared shortly after 9 p.m. and the audience was very receptive. Concerned primarily with his older tunes, he really put on a show. His repertoire included the old favorite Sunshine, done with style and a get-up-and-go version of Shanty. Other choices included Circus and Sugar Babe. Edwards seemed in good spirits, joking between songs. He is definitely the type of entertainer that relies on audience participation. He is constantly urging the crowd to sing along and to clap.

The one to watch, however, is Kenny White who seems to be the real hope. His talent ranged from playing accompaniment to singing duet vocals. His voice seems to resemble Edwards but we can be sure that his real talent is totally his own. Overall, the concert was a big success.

Hopefully, Edwards will decide to donate six months to his public in the near future. A new album by this entertainer would be warmly welcomed by his fans.

'Let My People' Celebrat at Grendel's Cabaret

By FRED PESCATORE

Let My People Come, a sexual musical recently celebrated its 1000th performance at Grendel's Lair Cabaret Theatre, Philadelphia's only professional off-Broadway theatre. The play deals with the sexual activities of modern-day life. It does this in a very tasteful way, allowing even the nude scenes to fit in with what was being discussed on stage without being pretentious or lewd.

The play was performed as a series of skits in two acts. These skits were both drama and comedy and there was never too much of either type; thus, it kept the show moving very well. There was no plot to this play, save that all the skits dealt with sex. The company consisted of three men, three women and a one-man orchestra.

The play concerns itself with every aspect of human sexual behavior including pornography, homosexuality, and the ultimate question of; "Doesn't Anybody Love Anymore?" The latter was a very moving song performed by Ellen Manger and the rest of the company. Another touching moment came when John Alexander and Nick DiMartino sang I'm Gay. The song dealt with the problem of telling their parents of their sexual preference and how they dealt with this problem. Pornography was handled in a very comical way. That is, Alexandra Lloyd sang, Linda, Georgina, Marilyn and me, stating how she wanted her name up in li along with these girls, the th biggest stars of x-rated films.

The highlight of the show without a doubt, Fellatio 101 Dirty Words. Fellatio 101 Alexandra teaching a group students, the rest of the wome the company and one of the m the fine art of fellatio. Kinks Capture Vivacious Crowd

Energetic Ray Davies controlled the Spectrum

By GREG ANTON

"Rock bands come and rock bands go, but rock and roll will go on forever," prophesized Ray Davies during the introduction of the hit song, All Day and All of the Night. Well, the Kinks, too, just might go on forever. Formed back in 1964, the Kinks are one of the oldest and best rock groups of all time. They closed their recent American tour at the Spectrum on Monday, October 27. Playing most of the material from their live album, One for the Road, the Kinks spanned a decade and a half of their music during the two hour show.

Ray Davies put in an absolutely amazing performance. Dressed in his usual bowtie and sportcoat, he endlessly pranced about the stage. He was either jumping wildly upon the drum set, running haphazardly about the stage or leaning into the crowd. This man of thirty-five years simply never tired and was having more fun than anyone else in the place.

He effortlessly captivated and controlled the vivacious crowd, waiting to explode with energy once again. Throughout the show, the sold-out crowd clapped and sang along. Allen Rebels in "Stardust"

New film is personal, about critics

By ALICE FISHER

There is an unwritten law in ollywood that says that comedy een-written cannot make a ious movie. Woody Allen is obly rebelling against this rule his latest film, Stardust mories.

The plot centers around Sandy es, Woody Allen, a very sucful and highly publicized filmker who is going through a midcrisis. He wanders through the continually hassled by his who "love his work, ecially his earlier funny "; charity workers who want use his name to save the whales intellectuals who "feel" his k; Sandy Bates searches for meaning of life and wonders if art is worthwhile. As a result makes a surreal film which the oducers hate. They rewrite it so critics won't pan it. Obviously n is taking his turn in getting k at those people who attacked super-serious film, Interiors.

In trying to make a point, Allen rifices his popular techniques ich would have made the film erable. Although it does have genius humor and sense of the urd, it lacks that pathetic, identifiable character forever lost in a relationship that Allen can portray so well.

Allen puts himself above us all; usually having Allen's touch of poignancy, falls flat. One must give credit to the excellent setting and Gordon Willis' superb use of

"Elephant Man" is Emotional

By ALICE FISHER

To see any play which swept the Tony and the New York Drama Critics' Circle awards here in Philadelphia would be a guaranteed good time. To see the Elephant Man, a play that has opened for a four-week engagement at the Forrest Theatre and received these awards would be a guaranteed experience.

The play is a biography of John Merrick, played by Jeff Hayenga, a victim of an inherited disorder called neurofibronatosis which causes massive fungus-like pouching of the skin and distorts the bone structures. After having been abused by a freak show barker and nearly attacked by a mob, he was rescued and taken care of by a physician, Frederick Treves, played by Ken Ruta. In time, Merrick learned to conform and to be happy. His mind, spirit and deep insight attracted the best of society. Merrick flourished under their eyes. However, the disorder spread, his head became too heavy for support and he strangled to death in his hospital bed.

The most unusual aspect of this play is that absolutely no make-up is used on Jeff Hayenga, Jack Hofsiss, the director, successfully creates for the audience the illusion of John Merrick by showing projections of photographs taken of Merrick while Jeff Hayenga simultaneously transforms himself to look like the slides. The object is to go beyond the physical deformities to the inner being to establish the fact that John Merrick, in spite of his limitations, was perhaps more human than most men could ever be.

The play is episodic in structure and is divided into 22 scenes, each scene having such titles as "The Weight of Dreams" or "Most Important Are Women." The set is an uncluttered unit suggesting the dismal London hospital, but adaptable to the street scenes as well. However, this reviewer felt that the sound effects were chaotic and detracted from the illusionary aspect of the drama, and the stage blocking in some instances was very clumsy and confusing to the audience. However this does not detract from the overall great performances and the powerful writing of Bernard Pomerance.

Perhaps the major purpose of the play was to bring back to life someone society would prefer to forget. Probably, without his freak-like disorder, John Merrick would have been forgotten; but, the play is not resurrecting the freak, rather it is memorializing the human being.

Inmates Leave that Dirty Water

Their songs are simple but good

By AMY MACLACHLAN

No more dirty water for the Inmates this time around: their new album is titled Shot in the Dark and seems to be exactly the approach that they take. An innovative attempt was made to recreate and update the sounds of the 50's. More than a dozen other performers have attempted this but with very little success. The approach is without a doubt, rock and roll, however the songs seem a bit too simple to fit into today's complex music field. The music is not New Wave in sound but the simplicity of the lyrics echo it.

Side one opens with I Thought I Heard a Heartbeat, a real rocking tune that speaks of a lost and severely missed love. This theme of rejection was a common one in the fifties and early 60s and is used a lot on this album. So Much in Love, reminds us of the common occurence of a love gone sour. Stop It Baby is reminiscent of the Inmates' last big hit Dirty Water. It seems to carry the same basic beat however different the lyrics might be. Another quality of the 50s simplicity seen in this release is the return to the practice of titling songs after the refrain. Every song on Shot in the Dark has its title in its refrain.

Side two begins with a song about gossip called Talk Talk: "My social life's a dud/ My name is really mud." Sweet Rain echos the sound of the early Rolling Stones. This song is the only slow one on the album. The Inmates used a background mix of rain and thunder which tends to give the song a more modern sound. Once again it is about a broken heart. Crime Don't Pay comes the closest to the New Wave sounds of today. The lead vocalist, Bill Hurley, speaks about "women who stick around till the money's gone." The last song and perhaps the best is the old favorite (She's) Some Kinda Wonderful. Although released a few times before by other entertainers, this version is quite worth listening to. If a hit comes off of this album it will undoubtedly be this song.

To sum up with some advice, this release will never be number one. It is however, good listening and shows a different approach which is somewhat of a vacation from today's life on planet Claire.

CECATS REMAIN UNDEFEATED

Villanova Icecats collected cond and third victories of on last weekend, edging ersity of Pennsylvania 4-2 exel University 4-1. The ve now outscored their op- 13-3 in their first three A potent offensive attack, strong goaltending and a sturdy defense has enabled the Cats to get off to their best start in the team's history.

Last Saturday, the Icecats invaded the Class of '23 Rink at the University of Pennsylvania and clawed their way from behind to take a 4-2 victory. Senior Tom Margiotti was sensational in goal stopping 40 shots which included two breakaway saves in the third period. After a scoreless first period the Cats broke on top early in period two. Sophomore Jim Ragold slammed home a Kevin Kelly rebound and the Icecats took a 1-0 lead. After two Penn goals, sophomore Chris Mancuso pulled Villanova even and at the end of two periods the game was tied at 2-2. Midway through the third period, junior Tom Curran collected the puck at center ice, beat a Penn defenseman and tucked the puck into the far corner to give the Cats a 3-2 lead. Mancuso capped off the victory scoring on a breakaway with only 30 seconds left in regulation time to give the Cats a well-deserved win. Coach S.J.O. Probst was enthusiastic about the win, "We worked hard and beat a darn good team. The play of the freshmen has helped us considerably and once again Tommy (Margiotti) came up big for us." When asked about the experienced play of the freshmen Probst added, "the freshmen have had good high school experience plus a few preseason games including an impressive outing against Delaware Community College."

On Sunday, the Icecats had to rely on a third period barrage to beat a much improved Drexel team, 4-1. At the end of two periods the score was tied 1-1, but the better-conditioned Cats came out storming in period three to gain the win. Freshman "Cyrus" Carey proved to be the difference scoring the second and third goals for the Icecats while other goal scorers were sophomore Ken Downey and junior Bill Quinlan. Margiotti was strong again in goal kicking aside all but one Drexel threat. "Nukes" Grennon passed out two assists while single assists went to Curran and Kelly.

The Icecats have a pair of away games this weekend. Tonight, Villanova travels to Princeton and tomorrow to Lehigh. The next home game for the Cats is Saturday November 15, when they have a rematch with Lehigh. Game time is 11:30 a.m.

Watercats Dethrone Queens

Villanova water polo team their first varsity season 4-7 record. This year's consisting mostly of unsmen, won their first game against Queens at the West Point tour- on the weekend of October 24.

The underclassmen performed well in this 7-3 victory over Queens with a hat trick performance by sophomore George Anderson, and a pair of goals for freshman Bill Beck. Other scores were Geoff Mana and Mike Patti with one goal a piece. However, the Watercats were defeated by Fordham University, the 8th ranked team in the nation. Villanova also had difficulty against St. Francis and R.P.I., two other Eastern powerhouses.

With only three seniors graduating (Co-captains Mike Patti, Tom Schweiger and forward Jim McDonald), the team looks forward to a more successful season next year. Continuing workouts throughout the off-season, Coach Al Fazio feels that next year's team has a great deal of potential. The Watercats will have only one returning junior, Eric Pippen. Sophomores leading next year's team will be Geoff Manna, George Anderson and Billy Ennis. Returning as the backbone of the team are freshmen Bill Beck, Kevin Powers, Joe Bobrowski, Bob Szadek and Chris Morris.

Volliers Crowned PAIAW Champs

By KATHY MAHER

The women's volleyball team ended its regular season of play home against Kutztown State on Wednesday, October 28 and defeated their opponents in straight games, 15-5, 15-5, 15-6.

The team continued its winning performance in the LaSalle Tournament on October 31 and November 1. When final play ended, Villanova placed second out of the sixteen area teams represented in the invitational.

In preliminary play, the Lady Wildcats ranked second in their pool after defeating Gallaudet and Immaculata (15-3, 14-16, 15-10 and 15-2, 15-4 respectively) and losing to Slippery Rock (4-15, 6-15).

The single elimination tournament began for Villanova with a matchup against James Madison. Winning 15-10 and 15-6, the Wildcats advanced to play Catholic University. In a three game match, Villanova came out on top 15-10, 14-16, 15-4. This second victory placed them in the finals with Cortland, who had previously defeated Lehigh and Slippery Rock. Cortland however, provided too much competition for Villanova. Losing 10-15, 13-15, the Wildcats held their own throughout most of the match.

The volleyball team, under the direction of Coaches Bob Covell and Rose Selby and Captain Joanne Canuso, ended their season with a total of 16 wins and 5 losses excluding the LaSalle Tournament). However, they had 7 wins and only 1 loss in regular season play. This record gave the Lady Wildcats the PAIAW Division crown.

The team now waits to see if an invitation to the EAIAW Division II Volleyball Championships will be extended to them. Eight teams from the region will be selected to compete in this prestigious tournament that will be held November 20-22 at South Carolina State College. Winners in this invitational will advance to competition on the national level.

ASTROTURF ANALYZED

By IRENE SMITH

Villanova's newly installed astroturf has given a fresh appearance to the football stadium and offers improved playing conditions not only for the football team, but also for the soccer, field hockey and lacrosse teams. Yet, despite the field's year-round attractiveness and low maintenance cost, it offers a degree of hazardness for the unsuspecting athlete which did not exist on the previous natural grass surface.

Football staffers say that astroturf does not give as readily as natural grass when a football player plants his foot for a catch, for example. On grass, the foot will slide due to the moisture, on turf the foot will stay planted. When a foot anchors to the ground like this, a break could occur.

This is exactly what happened to wide-receiver Amos Coleman who broke his foot while playing on Villanova's new turf. Coleman's mishap, according to Dan Unger, athletic trainer, was strictly an astroturf-related injury. Coleman was wearing astroturf shoes specially designed for that type of surface. However, the day the injury occurred, the field was dry and Coleman overextended himself while trying to catch a football. His foot stuck to the ground while the rest of his body rotated. If this had happened on grass or if the turf had been wet, there would have possibly been some degree of slippage resulting in a less severe injury.

Techtmann, assistant football coach believes that although astroturf offers no advantages as far as the football team is concerned, that there are more pluses than minuses with astroturf. "Astroturf is quicker, speed is increased due to the uniform surface. Also with natural turf a team can't practice in the rain. Maintenance of astroturf is 75% lower than natural grass. The turf doesn't have to be cut, watered, or relined for every game. Overall, the surface is beneficial to a greater number of people and a wider variety of sports."

Presently, lights for evening use of the field are being installed and while no night games are scheduled for this year, there is a definite possibility that one or more games will be scheduled to play in the evening for next season.

Techtmann also mentioned that there is less distraction on artificial turf. Dirt and dust are nonexistent and the concentration level of practice is more keen.

Having the Villanova field carpeted with astroturf adds experience for the players in seven of the eleven games played away. Before, the team would have to travel to University of Pennsylvania a day or two in advance to prepare for games played on astroturf.

Joe Arcidiacono, co-captain of the football team feels that the turf "is something long overdue. It dresses up the stadium giving it a more-collegiate look and helps a lot with recruiting. The old grass had a lot of bumps where you could turn your ankle very easily. It was not the best of surfaces due to the fact that the upkeep of the field was poor."

Dan Burke the other co-captain used to not like playing on astroturf because of the injuries and skin burns that would occur. However, with more practices and additional experience, Burke maintains that he is getting to like it better but would still rather play on grass. "For Villanova, it's worth it for what they're trying to do to the sports program." He added that it's the nicest turf he has played on, with not as many burns, and the grass doesn't rip skin as it does in other stadiums.

Amos Coleman wide receiver is firm in his dislike for astroturf. "It looks good but I would rather play on natural grass." Coleman is out for at least seven more weeks due to the injury received playing on the turf. However, he still has another year ahead of him in school plus another year of eligibility left.

Precautions can be taken to reduce the incidence of injuries that occur on artificial turf by wetting the field. As long as the surface is wet, there is less tendency for burns and significant injuries such as severely sprained ankles or torn ligaments in ankles and knees.

Women Booters Are Winners

By JULIE ROBERTS

Overall, it was a good season for the Villanova's women's soccer team who finished with a 6-3-3 record.

Two of the los es came at the hands of some of the better teams in the East, Penn State and Princeton.

"The offense was much stronger than last year," commented Coach Lee Stevens. "The women really stayed together . . . they never quit on themselves, even when they were losing." It was determination such as this which gave the team a 2-2 tie with Slippery Rock after being down in the first half 0-2.

Goalie Patti Nowlan did a super job throughout the season. Probably her best effort came in the battle with Franklin and Marshall which ended in a 0-0 tie. The addition of several other freshmen also gave the team depth, both offensively and defensively.

However, there will be a gap left in the team as six players will be graduating this year. Among them will be Liz Supchak and Lori Stasco, both of whom played an outstanding season.

Coach Stevens also reported that playing in the stadium on the new Astro Turf was a definite advantage to women's soccer as well as to all of the athletic teams. All Coach Stevens can wish for next season is more fans to watch the matches.

Harriers Ace Pentagonal Meet

mos Korir Claims First as Cats Ready for District Championships

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

The Villanova men's cross ntry team easily routed their r opponents in the Pentagonal t held last Sturday at the mont Plateau in Philadelphia.
Joseph's, Delaware, Drexel and rican fell to the Wildcats by scores 22-35, 18-40, 15-47 and 0 respectively.

mos Korir took first place for nova with the time 25:34 and s the only runner to break 26 utes. John Hunter finished for the Wildcats in third place with the time 26:05 and was followed by Brian O'Keeffe in fifth place, Marcus O'Sullivan in eighth place and Kevin Dillon in thirteenth place.

The Wildcats next meet will be the NCAA District II Championships at Lehigh on November 15. Stiff competition will be provided by Bucknell, Princeton, Navy and eastern powerhouse Penn State. Coach Jack Pyrah is optimistic that Villanova will be one of the five teams from District II to qualify for the National Championship, but injuries to key runners could determine how well the team will perform.

Sydney Maree has competed in only a few meets this year because of a foot injury, Kevin Dillon has been slowed by a combination of sickness and injuries and Amos Korir has continued to run well despite a nagging knee injury.

According to Coach Pyrah, "We should have a decent team, but a lot depends upon how Sydney's foot is. Kevin Dillon has not been running as well as he is capable and Amos is running very well, although not up to what he was last year."

Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keeffe have greatly contributed to the cross country team as freshmen and will have to turn in good times at Lehigh if the Wildcats are to qualify. Coach Pyrah said, "They have both run really well and without them we'd really be in trouble." The steady performance of John Hunter over the season is also pointed to by Pyrah as one of the main reasons why the Wildcats have been competitive despite injuries.

Amos Korir is competing in his last cross country season for Villanova and stated, "I'm trying to make the best of it." Coach Pyrah believes that, "Amos has a good chance of winning the District II Championships." Korir also said, "I would like to get in good shape for the Nationals because that is the big meet. One problem is that the knee injury might have delayed my training and it means I might have to push myself a little harder."

Because of the injury situation, all of the Wildcats might have to push a little harder if they hope to advance to the NCAA finals in Wichita on November 24.

Women Runners Race To Third

By KERRY LYNCH

e Villanova women's cross
try team took their pride and determination to the EAIAW's Saturday in Indiana, Pa., and surprised all but themselves when they took third place. Their third place finish qualified them for the AIAW National Cross Country Championships and their coach, Jim Thompson, said "The team did an outstanding job."

The existence of the serious cross country runner demands dedication; it hurts, it's time consuming and yes, it does get lonely. Long afternoons among the hills at Radnor Golf Course prepared this team for the tough competition it faced over the weekend.

When the Wildcats arrived at Indiana University of Pennsylvania they had the confidence and knew they were right on time to earn a trip to Washington State for the Nationals.

Early in the season this team was run into the ground by what appeared to be a West Chester State powerhouse. But Saturday, when it counted, Villanova had two finishers across the line before West Chester's first. Co-captain Carol Gilsinger came up over the hills of this "extremely hard course" to finish sixth overall in 19:24:4. Sue Shea was next for Villanova, edging out a West Chester runner for the seventh position. Eva Marie Berardi who, said Coach Thompson, "did a great job" finished third for Villanova and twenty first overall.

Coach Thompson said, "I didn't think the earlier poor season mattered. We plan to peak for the Championships; with this team's ability I expected to get first, second or third."

The meet was a close one which Boston College won with fifty one points. The local rival West Chester posed a threat to B.C. and was just edged into second place by eight points. Villanova finished third among the nine teams with 85 points.

Rumbles of progress have been heard from the Villanova women's cross country team and they won't be easy to overrun. The team that will travel to Seattle in two weeks will be comprised of three juniors: Amelia Cain, Carol Gilsinger (co-captain) and Sue Shea; two sophomores: Eileen Costello and Beverly Reilly (co-captain); and three freshmen: Donna Beara, Ilva Maria Berardi and Jen Weir. The Harriers hope to place in the top three at the Nationals. Last year's team captured second place and, with the return of five of these runners, anything is possible.

Kellner Competes in New York Marathon

By JULIE ROBERTS

Susie Kellner, a sophomore at Villanova, successfully completed the New York Marathon which was held Sunday, October 26.

Kellner also ran in the marathon last year and bettered her time by 24 and half minutes with a finishing time of 3 hours, 52 minutes and 22 seconds.

Overall she finished 7,600 out of 16,000, 535 in the women's standing and unofficially 7th in the 19-year-old and under age bracket.

"I really didn't train too hard," said Kellner, "I ran off and on in September but didn't start any heavy training until October."

The process to qualify for the race began last June when the would-be marathoners applied for an application. The first 15,000 received applications and from these only 10,000 are chosen. The marathon committee then selected another 5,000 runners, but this year they mistakenly sent out an extra 1,000 invitations which made the marathon the largest race in the world.

Also competing in the race, which started on Staten Island and ended in Central Park, were Killner's three older brothers. "It (the race) was a family effort. We decided one night to run in it and we did." All three of Kellner's brothers finished the race course, but only one came in ahead of her.

What compelled the Villanova student to compete in the 26-plus mile race? "I just wanted to prove to myself I could do it," she said, "Now I can say to myself, "If you completed the marathon, you can do anything."

The most important part of preparing for a marathon, claimed Kellner, is getting mentally psyched. She believes anyone with a determined mind could achieve the same thing she did.

This strong discipline paid off around the 17th mile of the race. The winds had shifted and hit the runners head on. It was at this point that Kellner began to build. "I was really feeling bad for a while, but I had come too far to even consider dropping out."

According to Kellner, the atmosphere surrounding the race was just as important as the contest itself. "The crowd was really outstanding. All along the way the people were cheering you on. Also, since there were only about 2,000 women in the field, I received extra support and encouragement."

At the finish line, a medal was placed around the contestent's neck. There was also medical assistance for those who needed it and plenty of refreshments for the exhausted runners.

Kellner plans to participate again in next year's marathon, but she wants to do more extensive training and hopefully cut down her time by 10 to 15 minutes.

asketball Fever Begins

By PATRICK FLYNN

Perhaps it's a bit early to start reading and writing about sketball. Perhaps it's a trifle premature to start revving up for a ason that won't be in full swing for another month or so.

Maybe since the leaves haven't fallen yet and we haven't seen anywhere and mid-terms are still in our minds, we should vote this space to football or to pro sports or some other ement in the kaleidoscope of athletics that is currently taking ace.

But it isn't too early to hear people all over campus scussing roundball. Worrying about having a replacement for ry Sparrow. Worrying about playing that murderous schedule.

It isn't too early to be enthused about the remarkable sponse of VU students to the Basketball Club's membership ive, which had pushed well past the 100 mark at last count.

It isn't even too early to hear people expressing anxiety about rush for Notre Dame, Georgetown and St. John's tickets, hich will certainly result in early sell-outs.

It's always time for basketball here.

This wasn't meant to be the season-opening basketball lumn for this space. It was going to be something about the nificance of the Penn football game, or about the NHL or about mething else. But the fever has started to arrive.

It's probably best to slide into the season slowly, to gradually sorb that hoop frenzy so as to avoid a major shock to a system at may be lulled to sleep by the current pigskin campaign.

In the future, there will be concrete topics discussed in this ace. You'll probably see an article extolling the entry of illanova into the Big East and the implications of the big move. d one about how basketball has the chemistry for fan support t other sports at Villanova lack in either intensity or extent.

But for now, let this be a warning that the fever is on the rison. The fever that brings the excitement of VU-Pitt, 1979. d Penn State, 1980. And the heartbreak that was Notre Dame. d the frustration that was St. Joe's.

It's coming soon. Be try to savor every minute of it, start to sh — and then some.

Four Footballers Suspended

All-American Candidate Howie Long and three Defensive Stars Banned from Action

By BETH WHITE

"The last sentence in the letter dismissing me from the football team was something like . . . 'We hope you will uphold the Catholic tradition'."

"All I want is a fair shake. Is that too much to ask from a Catholic university like Villanova?"

Howie Long

"I'd like to think a team can rise above letting that kind of thing affecting it, but it affects you."

Head Coach Dick Bedesem

(referring to the 17-7 loss to Delaware)

The question was posed by Howie Long, a 6'4" 274-pound defensive tackle for Villanova's football team, who was recently placed on disciplinary probation and suspended from intercollegiate competition.

Also suspended from the team were junior Jim Still, along with defensive linemen Paul Phillippy and Jim McCarthy, who were suspended from the University (both from the football team and from classes) due to their involvement in an off-campus incident.

Howie Long explained his predicament by stating that, "If I miss the last three games of the season, it certainly will not help my prospects in the pro (football) draft," He further states that, "At this point I'm fighting for my life, just to play in the last three games of my four-year career at Villanova, which (besides this incident) has been spotless.

"I could possibly go in the first round of the draft," continued Long, "and I would think that that would be good for the university, unless they're trying to kill the football program here."

The Wildcats are currently 3-5 and the loss of two key defensive linemen could be devastating to the Villanova defense — one of the team's strongpoints so far this season.

As quoted in the Philadelphia Inquirer, Head Coach Dick Bedesem said, "I'd like to think a team can rise above letting that kind of thing affect it, but it affects you. I tried to use it to jack the team up but sure it affects you."

Referring to the Wildcats' loss to Delaware last week, Bedesem commented that, "We took two starters out of the defense." He continues that, "Delaware) ran a lot of boot play action where McCarthy could have made the plays."

Also referring to the players on the team, Bedesem is worried that, "Their future and everything is at stake."

With Long and Still's suspensions just before the University of Pennaylvania game tomorrow, more defensemen would be missing from the Wildcat line. "However," Bedesem hopes, "if the appeal is granted formally and they are taken off disciplinary probation, I don't see why they couldn't start playing immediately."

Delaware Dominates Wildcats

By LARRY GOANOS

The defending NCAA Division II National Champion Delaware Blue Hens used an excellent kicking game and a stingy defense to defeat the Villanova Wildcats by a 17-7 score on Saturday. A sell-out crowd of 22,680 people, the third highest attendance figure in Delaware history, was on hand to witness the Hen's victory.

Placekicker K.C. Knobloch booted the longest field goal of his career, a wind-aided 47 yarder, to give the Blue Hens a 3-0 lead on their first possession. Knobloch got the call again on Delaware's second drive; this time he responded with a 27 yard kick that split the uprights to boost the Hen's lead to 6-0.

Villanova's ensuing drive was cut short when a Pat O'Brien pass was picked-off by defensive back George Schmitt who returned it to the Nova 42-yard line. It took the Hens only six plays to score as halfback Ed Wood barrelled over from two yards out. A two-point conversion attempt succeeded, putting the Blue Hens up 14-0 and completed the first half scoring.

Villanova came up with its only touchdown of the day midway through the third quarter. Wildcat defensive back Tom Anthony intercepted a Rick Scully pass and returned it to the Delaware 28-yard line. The Cats then used nine plays to march downfield before senior running back Shawn Passman capped the drive with a five-yard touchdown burst. Chuch Bushbeck's extra-point kick was good, which cut the Hen's lead in half at 14-7.

Early in the last quarter, Knobloch connected on a 45-yard field goal attempt to complete the day's scoring.

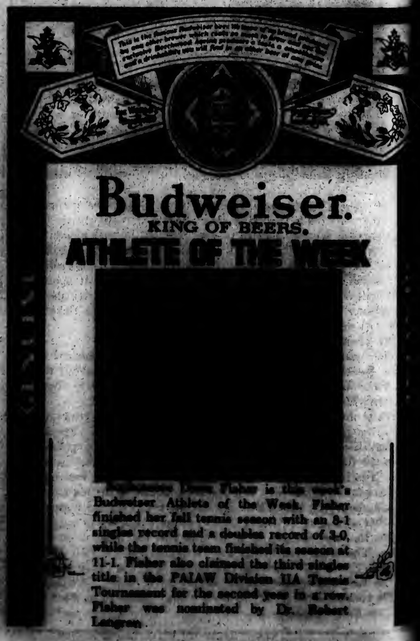
The Cats only managed to gain 116 yards in total offense on the afternoon, a fact which did not please Head Coach Dick Bedesem. "It just appeared that our offense was so sporadic that we couldn't do anything. I was disappointed that our offense couldn't move the ball at all," he stated after the game.

The Wildcat defense allowed Blue Hen ball carriers to pick out 219 yards rushing, a fact which can be partially explained by the absence of defensive linemen Jim McCarthy and Paul Phillippy. Both players were suspended from school for their alleged involvement in an off-campus fight. Coach Bedesem noted that, "They were running a lot of boot (bootleg play action) where McCarthy could have made the plays."

Delaware Head Coach "Tubby" Raymond felt fortunate to escape with such an easy victory, "They've got some real great kids on that team. It's a great rivalry, that's what college football is all about," he said after the game.

The 3-5 Wildcats will face the University of Pennsylvania Quakers at Franklin Field tomorrow.

Senior Safteach Ron Hand plows through the defensive line of the Delaware Blue Hens, but to vain. The Cats fell, 17-7, in last Saturday's contest.



Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Fisher finished her fall tennis season with an 8-1 singles record and a doubles record of 3-0, while the tennis team finished its season at 11-1. Fisher also claimed the third singles title in the PAIAW Division IIA Tennis Tournament for the second year in a row. Fisher was nominated by Dr. Robert Langren.

Two Footballers Reinstated

Dismissal of Two Other Players Upheld

By BILL CLARK and BETH WHITE

Two Villanova football players were reinstated on Monday by a decision reached by Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for Student Life.

Howie Long

Senior Howie Long and junior Jim Still were taken off disciplinary probation, but were given a "disciplinary warning." The suspension of two other football players, senior Paul Phillippy and sophomore Jim McCarthy, was upheld in Deegan's decision.

The recent verdict was the result of an appeal by the four football players to reverse an earlier decision by Deegan that was made at the recommendation of Villanova's Disciplinary Review Board.

Both Long and Still are working out with the team again and will play in Saturday's game against Holy Cross.

Phillippy was quoted in The Bulletin as being disappointed with the decision reached by the University. "In my situation, I'm kind of disgusted.

"I'm considering one more appeal, this time to the president of the University. For certain, I want to return to the University and get my degree in English. Actually, right now, I feel a little helpless," said Phillippy.

The disciplinary actions were the result of an incident that occurred at an off-campus party on October 5. As reported in last week's Villanovan, five girls filed a complaint with the Dean of Men's office claiming that damage was done to their apartment and asking for reimbursement.

The case was heard by Villanova's Disciplinary Review Board on October 21. The board recommended to Deegan that Phillippy and McCarthy be suspended from the University, and that Long and Still be put on disciplinary probation.

In letters received by the players earlier in the week, Long and Still were informed they were once again allowed to represent the University in extra-curricular activities. In other words, they were granted the privilege of representing the University in intercollegiate competition, an activity which those on disciplinary probation are denied.

Phillippy and McCarthy, however, must reapply in order to be readmitted to the University next semester. Phillippy commented to The Bulletin that, "I've talked to Jim McCarthy and he told me he was going to eat (accept) the decision. He has two years of football eligibility remaining and I know he wants to come back and play."

Phillippy is unsure of what he is going to do now. "When I talked to our coach (Dick Bedesem), he more or less said I was on my own now. He did everything he could, really," explained Phillippy to The Bulletin.

He continued that, "I haven't been told (about his scholarship) and I'm not certain. However," continues the former starting defensive tackle, "it's important for me to return and work towards my degree. I've taken a few courses in journalism and am considering perhaps something in public relations after I graduate."

Watergate Felon Defends His Actions

By RICHARD Di STEFANO

"There is something different about the American people: an inability to understand reality, or turn away from its harsher aspects."

G. Gordon Liddy, who earned the sobriquet "The Sphinx of Watergate" for his steadfast silence during the investigation of that affair, in which he played a central role, made this keynote remarks to an audience of over 700 in the Field House last Thursday evening, November 6.

This statement was first applied by Liddy to U.S. — U.S.S.R. relations. "There will be a draft," he asserts; "The Soviet Union is our enemy!" He then proceeded to relate the magnitude of difference in the military preparedness of the two powers; the U.S. is now trailing its adversary in this respect, he asserted. Liddy reminded his listeners that the only thing the U.S.S.R. respects is power; the Soviets are not living by current U.S. standards of imposing the Ten Commandments and other acts of civility on other countries.

Next Liddy described those who decry U.S. involvement in foreign clandestine operations as "those who believe in the Easter bunny." The reality, he explained, is that "nations have always sought knowledge of other nations: First, what are their capabilities? ... Second, what are their intentions?' This makes it necessary for the U.S. to gather intelligence of other countries, Liddy charged.

Speaking of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation during Liddy's employment there, Liddy recalled him as "an enormous administrator" who "only lacked compassion . . . and a sense of humor."

The talk inevitably turned to Liddy's own career. He insisted that national security was the primary justification for the decision to break into the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist nearly a decade ago. Ellsberg had leaked classified material to The New York Times and to The Washington Post, and it was thought by Liddy to be in the best interests of the U.S. to put this activity to an end. Later, in response to a question from the audience, Liddy acknowledged that a "secondary effect" of the search might have been to shield the embarrassment of having the information gleaned in spite of all precautions taken to keep it secret.

As expected, the subject shifted to Watergate, which was a break-in for political information as distinct from national security. Liddy observed that Judge John J. Sirica was "incompetent" in the jury selection that originally resulted in the choice of a juror who neither spoke nor understood English. "The press won't print the fact that Sirica falsified a transcript," Liddy complained.

In response to another question, Liddy justified his Machiavellian principles. "History shows break-ins since the time of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The most realistic conduct, as distinct from conduct as it should be, is to understand how things are."

Loose Change?

During Hunger Awareness Week, Nov. 17-21, V.F.L. will be collecting money in the dining hall for donation to drought stricken areas of Africa.

Annenberg Center Activities

On Wednesday, Dec. 10, the Associates, the volunteer fund raising group at the Annenberg Center, are sponsoring an excursion to New York City and Broadway's comedy hit, Paul Osborn's Mornings at Seven.

Traveling by motorcoach, the group will arrive in NYC in time for several hours of holiday shopping or museum-going. The Mornings at Seven trip will cost $45 per person. For information and reservations, call 243-6754.

To commemorate the Annenberg Center's 10th Anniversary, the well-known theatrical caricaturist Hirshfeld was commissioned to create a retrospective grouping of some of the famous faces that have been seen at Annenberg Center during the past ten years. The artist has signed a limited number of posters that will sell for $35. An unsigned copy is $5. Posters may be purchased through the Annenberg Center box office or by calling 243-6754.

Basketball Club

There will be a general club meeting on Thursday, Nov. 20, at 12:45, in the North Lounge. At this time we will distribute the tickets for the Merrimack and St. Francis (NY) games. Don't forget that we are planning a bus trip to Seton Hall on Tuesday, Dec. 9 — all are invited — so sign up soon (limited seating available — 49). If anyone has any questions about receiving their tickets or going to Seton Hall, please feel free to call David Glickman at 886-5696 (any time after 7 p.m.)!

Jr. Nursing Students

Attention Junior Nursing Students:

For all those interested in summer internships, the Academic Committee of the Nursing Senate and SNAP will be holding an information meeting on Nov. 18 at 7:00 in the Physics Lecture Hall. Addresses for various programs, people to contact, externs telling of their experiences and refreshments!

Glee Club Concert

A Fall Festival will be presented by the Villanova's Women's Glee Club and the Rosemont College Women's Glee Club Saturday, November 15, at 8 p.m., in St. Mary's Chapel. Parking is available in the Garry Law School parking lot. Admission is free, and all are welcome. A reception follows the concert.

Engineering Careers

On Thursday, November 20, the Engineering Joint Council will sponsor Phase II of its Career Development Program entitled "Insight to Industry." The seminar will be held in Tolentine 310 at 7 p.m. A panel of speakers moderated by Dr. Anthony Zygmont, will discuss the pros and cons of working for big business, small business, or government. The panel will consist of:

Big Business: Leon Kazmierczak, Sun Company, Inc.

Small Business: Lawrence DiVietro, Land Dimension, Inc.

Government: Dr. John Burns, Army Corps of Engineers

The format for the evening will be individual presentations of fifteen minutes followed by ten-minute question and answer periods. Following the speakers presentations, the floor will be opened up to general questions, and refreshments will be served. All engineering students are strongly urged to attend.

Auditions

Auditions for "Six Characters in Search of an Author," the famous comedy-drama by Luigi Pirandello, will be held on Nov. 15, 1-5 p.m., and on Nov. 16, 1-5 p.m., and 7-10:30 p.m., in Vasey Theatre. Actors are requested to give two-minute presentations of dramatic material, using characters similar to their own age and type. Please wear comfortable clothing. Actors of all ages and types are needed. Please call 645-4760 for an appointment.

Senior House Contest

The yearbook is sponsoring a contest for the best senior house picture. Gather up your friends — your house, your apartment, your carpool, and even your dorm — and submit your picture by Nov. 14 for a cash prize. All pictures will be in the senior section of the yearbook. Send your picture to Belle Air, Box 209, Tolentine, or to the Belle Air mailbox on the 2nd floor of Dougherty or drop off in the yearbook office in St. Mary's.

Italian Club

There will be a brief meeting of the Italian Club on Tuesday, Nov. 18, 12:45, Tolentine 317. All members must attend.

We would all like to wish our president Al Firth a happy birthday!!

Discount Vasey Tickets

Student discount tickets will be available for Villanova Theatre's production of Bertolt Brecht's "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" which runs Nov. 12-15 and Nov. 19-22 at 8 p.m. Ticket prices for students are $4 on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and $5 on Fridays and Saturdays.

Student rush tickets will again be available. Tickets unsold by 7:50 p.m. on the nights of performance will go on sale to students for $2 apiece.

A valid 1980-81 student I.D. will be necessary for all student discounts.

Theatre Course

The Theatre Department is offering a new course in film studies for the spring, 1981, semester. The course is entitled Film Genre (Theatre 2013) and will focus next term on Science-Fiction film. The class meets Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 until 2:45 p.m. and is taught by Professor Christopher Sharrett.

Communication Arts Society

The Communication Arts Society will sponsor Rita Whitmer of Villanova's Career Development Center in a presentation on "Careers Available in Communications" on Wednesday, November 19 at 7:30 p.m. in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center. Also, nominations for officers will be accepted at that time. All are welcome to attend.

Big Brothers/Sisters

On Sunday, November 16, our group will be sponsoring a "Magic Show," from 1-3:30 in the North Lounge of Dougherty. All are invited to attend. Please contact your little brothers and sisters, tell them to meet in the schoolyard at 12 p.m. If anyone has any questions or if you cannot make this get together, please let us know. Call Patti or Anita at 626-5226. Thank you!

There will be a meeting on Monday, Nov. 17 at 4:45 in St. Rita's Chapel.

"If I Should Die..."

"If I Should Die . . .," an elaborate multi-image production dealing with the reality of death, will be presented Thursday, Nov. 20, at 9 and 10 p.m. in the Alumni Gym. This 45-minute, multi-image production is open to the public at no admission, and is locally sponsored by Campus Crusade.

Old Clothes

Bring all your old and unwanted clothes to the V.F.L. office during Hunger Awareness Week, Nov. 17-21.

Clothes will be donated to the poor in Philadelphia.

The V.F.L. office is located on the first floor of Dougherty Hall (old billiards room).

I Leonardo

Tuesday, Nov. 18 — "An Evening of Renaissance Music," Mr. Steven Kreinburg of Westminster Choir College, Lecture and Vocal Performance, Connelly Center Main Lounge, 8 p.m.

Lifeguards Needed

Lifeguards wanted for St. Mary's pool. Open 11 a.m.-11 p.m. every day. Those who want to work weekends given first preference. Contact Ed Geiss at the Field House swimming pool, Ext. 4128.

Memorial Mass

The Campus Ministry Center invites students, faculty, and staff to join Father President Driscoll in the celebration of a Memorial Mass to be offered for those recently deceased members of our University Community as well as deceased family and friends of our fellow Villanovans.

The Mass will be celebrated on Tuesday, Nov. 25, at 12:15 p.m., in the Main Chapel.

You are invited to drop a note or call the Campus Ministry Center to add the names of relatives and friends to the memorial list.

Bruce Springsteen

The ACS is raffling off two tickets to the Monday night performance of Bruce Springsteen. Winners will be transported to and from the show by chauffer-driven limousine. The drawing will be held on Dec. 4 at 12:45 at an ACS meeting.

Are you a Bruce fanatic? Buy a raffle for two tickets to his December 19 concert at the Spectrum — center stage, on the floor, second row! Contact any resident of Fedigan Hall for a chance to see Springsteen live at the Spectrum — chances are only $1.00 each, so buy a handful. The drawing will be held on December 9.

Graterford Trip

All those signed up for the trip to Graterford State Prison on Nov. 19 are to meet outside Bartley at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday.

Woody Allen

The Philosophy Club is sponsoring the lecture-discussion: "The Philosophical Humor of Woody Allen," given by Dr. J. Fielder. It will be held in the Radnor Room, Connelly Center, on Thursday, Nov. 20, at 3:30. All are welcome.

ACS Meeting

There will be an ACS meeting on Thursday, Nov. 20 at 12:45 in the West Lounge in Dougherty Hall. All commuters and off-campus residents are invited to attend.

Computer Club

The Computer Science Club will meet on Monday, Nov. 17, at 7:30, in Mendel Hall, Room 59. All those interested in any aspect of the computer sciences are invited to attend.

IRS Volunteers

Volunteers to help others with their income tax returns are needed to staff the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program (VITA).

Officials of organizations interested in conducting a VITA program in their neighborhood should contact IRS by writing to the Taxpayer Education Coordinator, IRS, P.O. Box 12899, Philadelphia, PA 19106.

Pre-Law Society

There will be a meeting of the pre-law society in the North Lounge, Dougherty Tuesday, Nov. 18 at 7 p.m. Mr. Thomas J. Higgins, Esq. will be speaking on "Prison Conditions: The Legal Professions Responsibilities."

Baby Food Drive

The ACS in conjunction with campus ministry is sponsoring a baby food drive during Hunger Awareness Week. Bins will be located in the Connelly Center, Dougherty and Bartley Halls. Any donation of infant formula, canned juices, dry baby cereal, or jarred baby food would be appreciated.

The Villanovan publishes FYI as a service to the Villanova community. We regret that we can only print as many as space will allow and we can only guarantee publication of paid classified ads.

Union Debates Nuclear Energy

By KIM RUSHTON

This past Monday evening the Villanova Political Union sponsored a debate on the topic of nuclear energy. The guest speaker was Marsha Pripstein of the Philadelphia office of the Keystone Alliance Anti-Nuclear Energy Group.

Pripstein began her presentation by citing a number of nuclear accidents that occured before the Three Mile Island incident of March 1979. Among them were:

October 7, 1957, the Windscale Pile No. 1 reactor on the edge of the Irish Sea came close to causing an explosion because of a fire in the graphite moderated reactor. Water was eventually used to cool the reactor, but there were sizeable releases of radioactive iodine and other fission products.

November 1955, the EBR-1 experimental enriched uranium-235 fuel breeder in Idaho Falls went out of control during testing. Nearly half of the core melted. The accident was caused by misshapen fuel rods. It went out of control because of human error.

January 3, 1961, a small test reactor in Idaho Falls went out of control while three men were reassembling the control rod drives to prepare the reactor to start up. All three men were killed, one being impaled to the ceiling of the reactor with a control rod through his groin.

"Can we go on believing there will be no more accidents in light of these previous accidents?" asked Pripstein.

She then stated that she believes the question is not whether there will be another nuclear accident but what can be done to minimize the effects of one.

She then went on to say that she and her group see the answer to the present energy crisis in developing alternative energy sources.

"We should as responsible citizens organize ourselves and demand the government to promote conservation. I see no reason why we can't do it." said Pripstein.

When asked if conservation of this magnitude was really feasible, she said, "Yes, if it included things such as new building codes that would require building to be energy efficient. People can and will conserve if the government gives them assistance."

When asked about the problem of conservation being an exhaustive resource and that we can only conserve so much energy before it is all gone, she replied that until renewable resources are found, conservation is the best alternative.

Pripstein expressed considerable distress over the problem of nuclear waste and the dangers it causes to residents of an area where it is stored. She said people of these areas have every reason to be upset at these nuclear dumps in view of ever increasing evidence that there can be very serious health hazards caused by nuclear wastes.

Speaking for the liberal party, Owen Evans said that the eastern coast has the highest amount of nuclear reactors per capita in the United States. He claimed that the costs far outrun the benefits of nuclear energy. He cited the fact that no nuclear reactor built since 1970 has cost less than $1 billion. He also cited the fact that solar energy is now competitive with oil and that an electric company in California will construct the first solar energy station. He spoke of solar energy as the wave of the future.

Speaking for the moderate party Pat O'Neill said that despite what calm scientists may say, nuclear energy is a highly emotional issue for many people who live in the fear of suffering adverse effects of radiation. He spoke of solar energy as the brightest hope for an answer to the energy problem.

Speaking of the Conservative Party, Bob Montserrat said that the risks of nuclear energy are enormous as compared to the benefits. He spoke of the avarice of nuclear energy companies that care more about profits than they do about the safety of people. As an example he cited a company that was all set to construct a nuclear reactor three miles from the San Andreas fault in California.

The vote take after debate was 15-2 in favor of the resolution opposing nuclear energy.

Campus Entrance Altered

By BILL COPPERTHWAITE

A new guardhouse is being constructed for the purpose of traffic control along the main entrance behind Bartley Hall.

Thomas N. Trucks, head of maintenance, is in charge of the construction. "The new guardhouse, planned with the new road for Connelly Center, is to replace the guardhouse moved there from Mendel," according to Trucks.

The cost of the modern guardhouse was originally put at $135,000 but it is now $90,000, including traffic control equpment. The equipment includes two steel gates and metal poles. Trucks estimates that it should be operational by November 28. It will allow security to crack down on traffic if they desire to do so, according to Trucks.

University Hosts Da Vinci Lecture

By ANNE SUYDAM

A representative of Stevens Institute of Technology, in Hoboken, New Jersey, lectured on Leonardo Da Vinci Tuesday evening.

Dr. Charles Speziale, an associate professor of mechanical engineering, spoke for an hour and broke the lecture into five parts; friction force, fluid motion, falling bodies, flights of fancy, and the conclusion.

In "flights of fancy," Dr. Speziale described Da Vinci's observations of bats and birds. Drawings were made of helicopters and parachutes and various other flying machines.

As well as engineering and art, Da Vinci was a military engineer. He designed catapults, machine guns, cannon extentions and fortress wall scalers.

Dr. Speziale explained that Da Vinci had no real role in the development in the engineering field but that he had striking powers of observation. It is very difficult to find actual measurements in Da Vinci's works. Dr. Speziale concluded the lecture with the emphasis on the observational powers of Da Vinci and that this was his strongest contribution.

Dr. Speziale received his M.A. and Ph.D. in Aerospace and Mechanical Sciences, at Princeton University.

After Stevens Institute received a grant from the American Association of Colleges to study Da Vinci, Dr. Speziale decided to start his lecture series.

Local Newscaster Speaks On Politics

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Larry Kane, anchorman for Philadelphia's Channel 10 news, spoke to a small group from the Villanova community Tuesday night, November 11, in the Radnor room of the Connelly Center.

Kane's lecture was entitled "Current Commentary," which dealt with politics, the media, and the changes in society over the past twenty years.

Kane analyzed the recent Presidential election, and in particular Jimmy Carter's defeat. During the campaign, Kane had interviewed Carter and felt he did not receive specific answers to his questions.

"Carter never mentioned one thing about what he planned to do in the next four years," said Kane.

Kane was also critical of Carter's administration and staff. "They were in way over their heads with no grasp of the issues

"Jimmy Carter simply blew it," said Kane. "He said that he was going to run the campaign his way instead of the right way. At some points, he was plain mean."

According to Kane, the Presidential debate was the turning point of the campaign. He felt that Reagan won the debate. "By saying such things as 'there you go again' in response to Carter's statements, Reagan expressed a sense of humor, a sense of comraderie, and he communicated with the public," said Kane.

Anchorman Larry Kane.

Kane also felt that Carter's interruption of all the NFL football games on the Sunday before the election was a major reason for his defeat. "He had absolutely nothing new to say about the state of the hostages," said Kane.

A major point of the lecture was a defense of the television media. "When people do not have information, they cannot judge and they cannot act," said Kane. "Television news provides that information.

"News is where it's at; it's educational, and it makes money," said Kane.

Vandalism Down at Area Schools

By BILL CLARK

In order to put Villanova's vandalism situation into a broader perspective, the magnitude of the vandalism problem at other local schools has been obtained.

At St. Joseph's College, vandalism expense amounted to $5,000 last year. According to Peter Clark, director of resident life at St. Joseph's, vandaliam this year has amounted to roughly $50.

"The problem at St. Joseph's used to be very serious," said Clark. "We have instituted a $50 breakage account for each student which must remain on the student's account.

"When someone is caught in an act of vandalism, either to their room or public property, the cost comes out of this deposit," said Clark.

"Also, if an individual is caught, disciplinary action is taken. If the vandalism occurs in a dormitory and the individual is not found, the cost of the damage is assessed to the entire area," continued Clark.

According to Dave Johnston, director of public safety at the University of Pennsylvania, the school's location hinders its vandalism prevention efforts; "The Penn campus is close to center city and unfortunately, with high crime and high density areas, vandalism, and particularly graffiti, has been a problem."

"Our solution has been intensified foot patrols, which result in deterrence," added Johnston.

"As far as student vandalism is concerned, our solution has been twofold," continued Johnston. "Any Penn student that is caught committing vandalism is referred to a student judiciary board.

"The second part of our solution is to repair vandalism and remove graffiti as fast as possible. Our opinion is that damages and graffiti that remain visible result in more of the same," said Johnston.

"I am not in a position to give a detailed report of vandalism at LaSalle," said John Travers, director of security. "I do know that vandalism is a problem every time the University sponsors big parties."

"After the first weekend everyone came back, the school put a morratorium on parties until everything returned to normal," added Travers.

At Temple University, school officials felt that graffiti was the major problem. "Even though the amount of graffiti has dropped off, it is still a problem," said George Ingram, director of public relations.

"The second part of our solution is to repair vandalism and remove grafitti as fast as possible."

Dave Johnston, director of public safety, University of Pennsylvania

"For example, when President Carter came here earlier this year for a town meeting, it cost the University $2,000 to blast the graffiti off the building he was speaking in," said Ingram.

Dougherty Hall Renovation Underway

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Interim renovations on Dougherty Hall have begun in response to the room space created by the Connelly Center.

The old pool room on the first floor of Dougherty is at present being converted to accommodate office space for twelve student organizations. The offices are scheduled to be functioning by December 1.

Commenting on these renovations, Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., dean of student activities and a member of the Dougherty Hall Committee, which was formed to study the question of renovations, said they were "an interim step to provide some organizations with new space. They (the offices) can be easily dismantled once the final plans for renovations are put into action."

The organizations to be located in the new offices are the Graduate Student Council and its publication Nitelite; three nursing organizations (Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania, Villanova University Registered Nurses Association, and the Nursing Senate); Beta Gamma Tau; the Political Society and the Blue Key Society (both relocating from Tolentine Hall); the Villanova Jewish Union (relocating from St. Mary's Hall); and Villanovans for Life.

There will also be a work-study receptionist in the offices to recieve calls and messages for other work-study-related groups.

According to Martin, the permanent alterations will have to do with dining areas and meeting rooms in addition to office space.

Martin said that surveys sent to students, faculty, organizations, and departments are nearly completed. These surveys are designed to ascertain a general consensus as to what form the renovations ought to take.

Once the surveys are completed, a report identifying areas for renovations will be submitted to the committee for its approval. If the report is accepted, Martin disclosed that the committee will "request Father Driscoll (University president) to engage a space architect." He said that this point in the planning process could be reached "by the end of this semester or the beginning of the next."

Of the surveys that have been received, Martin noted that they indicated residents prefer eating breakfast in Dougherty's resident dining cafeteria rather than in the day hop cafeteria because of "a greater ability to connect with their friends there." As for commuters, the figures show them frequenting the Pie Shoppe for convenience, the Belle Aire Terrace for its social atmosphere, and the day hop cafeteria for, once again, the facility with which one can "connect with friends."

"Long-term recommendations on the dining rooms will be based on these surveys," Martin said. "We'd like them to be attractive and draw a considerable part of the traffic at lunch time."

Nursing School Attracts Students

Through its College of Nursing, Villanova reports that more and more registered nurses who received their professional training through the traditional three-year diploma or two-year associate degree programs are returning to the university setting to earn a baccalaureate degree in nursing. Because of this trend, the College has taken steps to accommodate their special educational needs.

Having a bachelor's degree in nursing increases a registered nurse's career possibilities and chances for advancement. Today, it is virtually a requirement for all head nurses and administrators in hospitals and related agencies as well as for those who wish to teach nursing or continue on for a master's or doctoral degree in nursing. Strack adds that the more intrinsic advantages of baccalaureate study, such as personal development and well-rounded education, are important considerations as well.

Approximately 130 registered nurses are working toward a bachelor's degree in nursing at Villanova. The school has set up an advisement system in which Strack and another nursing professor, Julia Paparella, work only with the R.N. students to assist them in planning their academic programs. To enhance communication between them and College of Nursing administrators, the Villanova University Registered Nurses Association (V.U.R.N.A.) was organized in 1979.

Unlike some other schools which offer a distinct course of baccalaureate study for registered nurses, Villanova is fully accredited by the National League for Nursing, the major accrediting agency for nursing schools. This body stipulates that all nursing students in a degree-granting program, including those who have already earned the registered nurse designation, must fulfill the same academic requirements. But through Villanova's "challenge" system, these health care practitioners don't have to waste valuable time in classes whose subject matter they have already mastered. By passing a competency examination in a challenged course, R.N.'s can earn college credit without the obligatory class participation.

Expressing its commitment to the baccalaureate preparation of nurses, the American Nurses' Association has set the year 1985 as the target date by which all nurses should have received their education through bachelor's degree programs.

Happy 21st Stumpy!

I'm glad I won't be around to sit on when you celebrate.

BE ON THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS AT 22.

Think of a ship as a corporation, and it's not farfetched at all. A destroyer may have fifteen officers, other ships even fewer. Even the most junior officer gets to share in running the show.

You become part of the management team when you get your commission as an ensign after just 16 weeks of leadership training at Officer Candidate School.

Choose to be a Navy officer and you are responsible for people and equipment almost immediately.

Many officers go on for further advanced schooling. The Navy has literally dozens of fields for its officers—everything from nuclear propulsion to systems analysis, oceanography to inventory management. In graduate school, this training would cost you thousands, but in the Navy, we pay you.

Ask your Navy representative about officer opportunities, or mail this coupon for more information. Or call toll-free 800-841-8000 (in GA call toll-free 800-342-5855). There's no obligation, and you'll learn about an excellent way to start a career in management. As a college graduate you can get management experience in any industry. But you'll get it sooner—and more of it—in the Navy.

Student Life Plan Evaluated

By LEN LA BARTH

Possessing new ideas and an annually updated and upgraded five-year Student Life Package, Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for student life, is faced with the reorganization and reconstruction of student services.

Appointed to the position in 1976, Deegan immediately saw a need for a complete renovation in the area of student life. "I sat down that summer and devised a workable model with a great deal of ideals," related Deegan. "Personnel, fiscal and financial resources were analyzed and the plan was presented to Father President Driscoll."

According to Deegan, the number one priority of the plan was a "whole revitalization of Resident Students Association (RSA). Professionals were brought in to help the administrators and students reconstruct the system. The training and appointing of resident assistants was also revised."

Personnel changes include the integration of the Counseling Center and the Career Development Center. Seen as an "outreach model," five years ago such a program would not have succeeded due to a lack of interest and personnel. The restructuring of the program has instituted workshops on job searching, resume writing skills and study skills, to name a few. The services of psychologists and other professionals are also available.

A total revamping of student activities was another priority. Deegan set down in the initial plan.

Charters, budgets, finances, constitutions and by-laws were all evaluated. "Workshops were held for student leaders to achieve a leadership style," explained Fr. Deegan. "Every organization was reviewed. Right now, approximately 85 of the 100 or so organizations are active."

A need to strengthen the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) was also observed. "Unity and a common voice is needed for a strong fraternity. The IFC worked out a number of changes, including the pledging programs and is now seen as a 'national model.'"

Obviously, the needs of the commuter students and the residents differ and though not segregated in the overall package plan, the improvements suggested are dealt with separately. Deegan believes that to a large extent, "The Connelly Center has met a lot of the commuters needs — a facility to 'hang out,' eat and relax in a good atmosphere."

Deegan admits that the commuters needs are still great. "We need to spend more time to successfully analyze their needs. From time to time we've given out surveys and we keep getting the same answers to the same questions. An extensively developed questionaire is going to be developed."

Future areas of improvement that fell under the jurisiction of the Five-Year plan include a complete renovation of Dougherty Hall, making it more of a "complete student activity building;" the adoption of a Dean of Students and a Director of Resident Living, "who would be able to meet more needs," and a continuing observance of commuters and their specific needs.

One area of change that was proposed but rejected was a renovation of Fedigan Hall. "We proposed a lot of changes —mostly maintenance — it needs it," said Deegan. "But working within a budget, the three quarters of a million dollars needed for improvements to the building simply are not available."

The on going five-year package is upgraded and evaluated each year by Deegan. Last year, the Middle States Evaluation Committee evaluated the package plan and was pleased with the results.

In the planning of changes and revisions in the areas of student life and services, Deegan says that "input from the students is very important."

Business Group Visits Wall Street Exchange

By BILL McKERNAN

Approximately 50 students from the Economic Society and from the Finance Society visited three business-oriented centers in New York on Thursday, October 30. The sites visited were the Chase Manhattan Bank, the New York Stock Exchange, and the offices of Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc.

The purpose of the trip, according to the group's president William Zisek, was to supplement the education of business majors and to "give them a taste of the business world."

The students met at 8 a.m. on Thursday morning in front of the Field House. From there, they proceeded by bus to the Chase Manhattan Bank.

At the bank, the students participated in a discussion with Mr. Alan Wexler, a former Dean of Men at Villanova — now head of college relations. Career opportunities and various other aspects of the job market were discussed. From there they proceeded to the executive dining room for lunch and a talk with representatives from Chase on a more personal level.

The group was then led by a representative from Dean Witter Reynolds to the New York Stock Exchange to receive a tour of the selling floor. After this, the students got a chance to listen to a presentation from the president of Dean Witter about market and stock broker opportunities.

The last site visited was the actual offices of Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. The students were greeted by Mr. Andrew Melton, a Villanova graduate — now Chairman of the Board. Mr. Melton gave a talk and led the students to the reception.

Two faculty members, Dr. Margaret Clark and Dr. James Klingler, accompanied the students on their excursion.

Zisek, commenting on his overall reaction to the trip stated, "The students projected a positive image of Villanova and were a credit to the University."

Grid Players' Suspension Provokes Controversy

Review Board System Questioned

The recent controversy over the suspension of four football players seems to be settled. An appeal by the players has resulted in a decision by Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president of Student Life. His decision was to reinstate two players, Howie Long and Jim Still, and to permit the other two players, Paul Philippy and Jim McCarthy, to reapply for admission next semester.

It must be admitted that the case has drawn publicity because the four involved were football players. The matter, though, has brought to everyone's attention misgivings of Villanova's "Judicial" system and its handling of the case in general.

In its actions, Villanova lost sight of the original intent of the complaint brought by the five girls who hosted the party on October 5. The girls were looking for reparations for the "damage" supposedly done to their apartment. In addition, the girls wanted a written apology from the football players. But instead of obliging the people who brought the complaint, the University obliged themselves.

The girls were not even notified of the decision reached by the Disciplinary Review Board, which heard the case. "We were told we would be contacted within a week about the action that the Disciplinary Review Board was going to recommend. We have not heard anything from them yet. In fact, the first time we found out about this was when someone opened up the Inquirer on the train one morning. We feel like we were really used by the administration," said the girls.

More important than this, however, is the fact that this case points out the inequities of the Disciplinary Review Board. This affects not only the four football players involved, but any Villanova student who is charged with breaking a non-academic regulation.

The Villanova Blue Book states that "the Disciplinary Review Board is a University tri-partite fact-finding board. Its purpose is to investigate the facts surrounding alleged violations of non-academic University regulations in which students are subject to dismissal or separation from the University."

This statement is very misleading. For one thing, a "fact-finding board" should not make recommendations for action by the University. Yet, it was the Disciplinary Review Board that recommended the initial university actions taken.

If the Disciplinary Review Board has the power to recommend what disciplinary actions should be taken against students that could conceivably affect not only their education, but in this case the careers of four football players, the students being charged should have every benefit of a "fair hearing." The four football players were not given a fair hearing.

According to Paul Phillippy in his letter from the Board, he was charged with "fighting, endangering the safety of others, and deliberately destroying and damaging the property of others."

In order to prepare the best defense possible, any student should know more than just a general charge. In civil cases (when someone presses a complaint against another), each party has the right of deposition and discovery. This means that each party has the right to know exactly what will be presented at the trial and what specific charges will be pressed.

And yet, the four football players did not know what would transpire at the "hearing." According to Paul Phillippy, "When we got to the hearing, the girls had a three-page type-written statement. We had no idea that they would ever say we weren't at the party or were carrying anything into the party. How can you defend something that you never knew you were accused of?"

The four football players should have received a copy of the statement before the hearing. This would have afforded them the opportunity to refute the specific charges brought against them. Granted, this process would require a bit more work for the University, but when such an important decision is to be rendered, a student should be accorded every chance to defend himself.

The present system of the Disciplinary Review Board does not afford a student this opportunity, but fairness demands it.

No one can speculate if a different decision would have been rendered if the students had been given this opportunity. But, for the sake of the two football players who remain suspended, another hearing should be held before an ad-hoc board appointed by Father President Driscoll.

As for the future, "student rights" in disciplinary cases should be protected by the University. These rights can be best protected by a fair and judicious hearing for all Villanova students, not by "courtroom drama" or secrecy.

Response

Dear Editor:

I would like to express my strong dissatisfaction with the article printed in the November 7th issue of the Villanovan concerning the incident at Bryn Mawr Courts. Instead of the chosen headline, a more appropriate one would have been, "Five Female Villanova Students Terrorized By Two Villanova Football Players." It should be obvious that if these men were found guilty of behavior not representative of a Villanova athelete, by five judges in a two and one half hour hearing, then they must have committed an unscrupulous act. Instead of showing that we had just provocation to file a complaint, last week's article implies that we invited people to our apartment, beat them up, and then called the police. This is a ridiculous assumption!

We did not file a complaint with the expectation of being used as pawns by the administration, but it is evident that we have been used to set an example. Our goal was to attain compensation for damages, have a letter of explanation sent to our landlord, and be issued an apology, none of which have been done. However, we did not sit as judge and jury and thus, must accept the punishment given even though we do not agree with it.

I realize that athletics is an important institution at Villanova University, but if a person is found guilty of an injustice following a fair trail in which all present were given the opportunity to present witnesses, he must be penalized, regardless of whether he is an athelete or not. I am sure that if someone would have been killed or seriously injured, no one would be so hypocritical as to pity the suspended players! I think that before one comments on or makes judgements about this incident, he should be sure of the facts and should remember that we pay tuition to be educated, not to go to football games!

Respectfully,
Shirley Wampler

Editor's Note: In the interest of fair and accurate journalism, factual statements from all parties involved in the incident were obtained and presented in last week's article. A news story is not intended to pass judgment on the situation or people involved. Rather, that is left up to the reader. However, it should be noted that the names of the girls who filed the complaint were withheld from the original story upon their request.

Contest Winners

To the Editor:

The best thing that can be said about the predictions in our election contest is that while many of us were wrong in our forecasts many others were even more wrong. Of the eighty-two possible "guesses" in our contest the best predictor from the Political Science Department had no fewer than twenty wrong. The second best predictor from the department had twenty-two wrong.

No challenger beat us but then none of the entrants did exceptionally poorly if twenty is our benchmark. In the previous years the best score was in the single digits (for the number wrong) and the range of error was much greater than this year. These observations merely reinforce the extraordinary unpredictableness of this year's election.

Two challengers did especially well. They were: Bill Copperthwaite and Peter Ruksaksiri. A number of the contest ballots were marred by incompleteness and unclear or smudged marks which made scoring difficult. An honest effort was made to score the ballots accurately and if anyone wants to review their entry they may do so at my office.

This is the first time this contest was joined on a campus-wide basis and the results were quite gratifying. Our THANKS goes to the Villanovan for their responsive cooperation.

The contest is for the most part fun. None of us, not even the Political Science Department, have access to expensive polling sources. Each of us who entered were willing to make a prediction based on our knowledge mixed with our feelings of how we would like the election to turn out and how we would expect the election to turn out. It is instructive and healthy to sort out our knowledge and our feelings about elections whether we entered the contest or not.

I look forward to running similar contests in the future. I have been doing this since 1964. Most who read this will not be at Villanova in November 1984 but since there is, at the present, no copyright on the contest you can transport it elsewhere at your own design. It might interest you to know that one entry came from as far away as Stuttgart, West Germany. A former student who has participated in previous contests did not want to miss this one, and he did quite well too.

Sincerely,
John J. Schrems

Dear Dumb Bread or otherwise,

After reading your letter to the Villanovan, 11/7/80, I regretted the many times I had tipped my hat to a lady, with obvious discriminatory intent. Fortunately The Random House Dictionary, printed in 1978, defines the term "lady" as, "A polite term for any woman." With this in mind I can continue my polite habit of tipping my hat to ladies, broads, or otherwise.

Sincerely,
Danny Caballero

Prospects of a Draft Analyzed

By DAN TIERNAN

Those aptly painted pictures depicting Reagan as the trigger-happy, snub-nose imperialist were not as convincing as some thought them to be. Reagan is in office, and again we are haunted by those same anxieties which were so rife in the air during draft registration. There is a good chance that Reagan will advocate a draft, and the timing could not be better:

1. Overriding view of the military as being an employer of illiterate and unskilled personnel.
2. Conservative control of both the House and Senate.
3. Conservative President.

It was on Jan. 27, 1973 that the United States Armed Forces began, in accordance with the "Draft Law of 1971", the slow transition of switching to an all-volunteer Army. (all-volunteer Army was finalized by Congress during the Ford administration) The reasoning was that an all-volunteer service would attract high-quality personnel, people who would be willing to make a career in the military. At the time, this philosophy was extolled by many of the leading congressmen, one of whom was Mark O. Hatfield, a Republican from Oregon. Said he of the military: "Conscription . . . automatically produces a high turnover rate as unhappy draftees inevitably leave the service at the end of their two year obligation. This high turnover rate is a major threat to our national security." The system, sorry to say, has not attracted the high-quality personnel. In fact, it has attracted the complete opposite. A draft would be a restoration of "quality." And where do you think Reagan is going to find high-quality personnel? Sorry gentlemen, no college deferment this time around!

Would Congress vote "yes" for a draft?

When the question is put in prospective, the answer seems to be "yes". It is in the year 1980 that we have witnessed a conservative view sweeping the country; and we see such a view reflected in both the Presidency and Congress. Prior to 1980, we generally had a conservative House and a liberal Senate. Now we have both a conservative House and Senate. In short, the chances of a conservative Senate — which will tend to be more "hawkish" on issues such as this — rejecting a draft are almost nil. It may also be mentioned that if the Senate did indeed pass a draft, it is highly unlikely that a conservative president would veto it.

Might the draft be declared unconstitutional?

Prospects are poor for a draft being declared unconstitutional. Never in the history of the Supreme Court has a draft been declared unconstitutional; and in light of this, it hardly seems likely that the Court would do so now: Congress has always reserved the right, as is stated in Article I of the constitution, "to raise and support armies."

Prospects of a draft: Excellent. In the bureaucracy's opinion a draft is needed. But it may be said of the bureaucracy that it has not, as in the past, fully pursued all its options. Again, time will only tell.

Nation Accepts Zealous Innovator

By JOHN M. CHOTT
MANAGING EDITOR

With the election of 1980 part of history, Ronald Reagan is faced with what is certainly an unenviable task. As president for the next four years, he is charged with steadying the course of the country with a firm hand. The cautious optimism which is being felt by Americans who gave Reagan his mandate, is thought to radiate from a basic need for leadership and confidence in the presidency and the man occupying it.

Most would agree that the economy was the major issue of the election. The American public was frustrated by Jimmy Carter's handling of the system and his inability to effectively set policy to control it. Realizing that the time has come to change a government attitude of spending massive amounts of money in order to solve a problem, he has stressed fiscally conservative policies which may ease our basic problems, not merely give them a "quick fix."

A balancing of the federal budget, tax cuts, reduced federal regulation and incentives to business are the cornerstones of the new administration. These strategies will hopefully enable the private sector to strengthen themselves, not continually held in check by governmental policies. Our economic stability, diversity and our inventiveness are our biggest assets when compared with other countries. They will inexorably be linked to our status as a world power, not solely our military might. Why should we suppress it, ready to be snuffed out by another regulation or further taxes?

In the area of foreign affairs, the Reagan philosophy is even more hard line, even more decisive. It's time we heeded the "Doomsday prophets" who foresee the confrontation coming between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. because whether we want to face the facts or not, the United States is now number two, a "paper tiger" unable to back up a policy with the necessary military strength. The military has been stripped bare for social programs for too long, effectively weakening our status both with our allies and adversaries alike. The only way that we can effectively maintain a peace is through strength.

President-elect Reagan has already shown leadership and courage, declaring that we will take the SALT treaty back to the Soviets for negotiation. One has only to look at the current administration's record in regard to Cuba, Iran and Afghanistan to see where we have wavered and capitulated. With strong advisors to guide him, he will have realistic choices with which to steer our course through world events. And once those decisions have been made, we will stick to them providing our allies with a clear position of our policy, alleviating their fears and anxieties over our role in the world.

We are entering an era where we must be the leaders again and not the led, the strength which our allies can rally to and a force for that which we believe to be right. We must look out for our interests also, for no one will do it for us. These are the hopes which we have for America's future and the leadership which will guide her.

Pending the approval of the Liquor Control Board, Villanova's Connelly Center will be selling liquor with its recently purchased liquor license. We asked: Did you know that the Connelly Center was getting a liquor license? What do you think about it? How do you think it will affect Villanova?

Yes. It'll be good for the campus. Serving liquor here will get people off the streets and help prevent accidents. It would be an overall asset to us.

Cliff Turbitt
C&F

Yes. I think it's a good idea to bring some of the public to campus. I don't think it will affect most of Villanova, especially if they ask for it. It'll affect the faculty, administration and people over 21 mostly.

Yes. It'll be great but it'll need a lot of control. I think they'll have a tough time passing it through the LCB, though. I think it'll keep a lot more people on campus.

Food Waste

The Anti-Food Waste Campaign to be held in Dougherty cafeteria during Hunger Awareness Week, has a message for all of us to listen to. No one likes to be scolded for not eating their lima beans, and the campaign does not set out to offend anyone. Yet how delicately can one talk about the huge amount of edible food that we throw out every day? Is it too harsh to say that the way we waste food is disrespectful, careless and even sinful?

The sobering fact is that two-thirds of the population of this planet is seriously lacking in food. By the standards of the world, the way Americans eat is not just a privilege or a right; it is a luxury. The very least we can do is to appreciate the food we eat.

The Anti-Food Waste Campaign is making a simple rational appeal: Let us respect the sacredness of the food we eat. Though the fate of a hungry world may not rely on whether we eat our lima beans or not, creating in ourselves an attitude of respect, is the beginning of a world where governments will finally realize the food needs of these people. Where else do we begin, if not at our own tables?

If you want to do a little exercise on how important your meals are to you, join us in giving up your lunch on Thursday, Nov. 20, for Villanova's Fast Day. Give your stomach the opportunity to growl a bit. Take a half an hour or so and go the the Connelly Center Cinema where there will be a teach-in going on, and maybe learn something about what malnutrition is. Keep an open mind and don't feel threatened. And when you eat your meal that night, just be more careful to eat all the food you take. I am sincerely sorry if this campaign offends anyone, but I am much more sorry to see any of us wasting food.

Vandalism

To What It May Concern:

I hesitate to address this letter to the conventional "whom," as I very much doubt that the thing to which this letter is directed possesses any remnants of humanity. I am referring to the unspeakably inconsiderate, immature, ignorant fool who spray-painted the wall of the Connelly Center this past Halloween.

Unless this student is mentally deficient (in which case, I blame his keeper), he fully merits the universal scorn of every Villanovan. This asinine prank hurts us, as students, initially and in the long run. This clod has succeeded in defacing the only structure on campus built explicitly for the recreation and enjoyment of the students. Yet, the aforementioned moron who was mistakenly let out of his cage and entrusted with what became a dangerous weapon managed in one night to mar the beauty of our new Center, which took years to complete.

I ask this undoubtedly friendless failure: who do you think will end up paying the $500-600.00 to repair the damage you wrought? If you had half a brain, you would realize that this money comes out of the pockets of the students. Your senseless "joke" has injured thousands of other people.

I only hope that your identity is discovered and full punishment is meted to you. Until then, may you flunk every test, may you fall flat on your face in the cafeteria, and may every date stand you up. If this seems harsh, it is intentional. You are a disgrace to yourself and to Villanova.

Poor Spelling

Dear Editor,

It has come to my attention that Villanova University might do well to add to its curriculum a course designed to help the poor speller. Letters coming from the Dean of Men's office offer "congradulations" (congratulations) to deserving students, also the Campus Ministry is "sponsering" (sponsoring) a "Run For Hunger." Recently I was dubbed an Olympic "Cahirperson." Not fully understanding what this position might entail I referred to Webster's Dictionary which offered no solution. Hopefully it is not a fungus or a contagious disease. In reading over some notes from the RSA I was astounded to discover that they have a "calender" (calendar?). Referring to Webster once again I found that a calender is one of a Sufic order of wandering "mendicant dervishes." Does the alcohol policy at Villanova have a stipulation for such outright deviance?

At the beginning of the school year the RSA sponsored a Coffee House "Exclusively for resident freshmen." Personally, I was afraid to attend for fear people might think I was conceited. Who was that "exclusive resident freshman?"

I realize that a few misspellings can escape even the best editor's keen eye but I feel that these errors should not go on unnoticed. In closing I would like to request that something be done about the RSA's "mendicant dervish." I feel that all students should be forewarned that such a being is within our midst.

Sincerely,
Eileen Carey

Request

Dear Editor:

Hopefully this letter will discover you and the people in your surroundings in the best of health and experiencing a positive frame of mind. My name is Henry Davis and I'm presently an inmate at the Woodbourne Correctional Facility located in Woodbourne, New York. I hope to be released within the next six months. I am a "Black Man" who holds high regards for all human beings because I know that feelings and concern have no color and I hope you are in tune with this belief also. I'm five feet eleven and weigh one hundred and seventy-five lbs., I'm past twenty-one. My interests are people, realism-writing, reading, jogging and sports. I'm also a vegetarian. As for my talents, I'm into creative writing and hope to have a worthwhile book published within the near future. I have total faith in my ability and I realize that I have much to give on a worthy level.

My purpose for writing this letter is in the best wish that you and your staff will see fit to publish this letter or with your discretion parts thereof. I'm seeking correspondence with a female student or students from your school. I strongly feel that it's important for me as a man to be able to keep in tune with the opposite sex. To establish a realistic communication with a young lady at this time, would help to promote a better atmosphere and a happy state of mind. I'm aware that this is somewhat of an unusual request on my behalf, but I should hope not an unreasonable one. Your assistance in this matter would be highly appreciated.

Thank you very kindly for your time and interest.

May peace and success
be with you —
Henry Davis

Politics, Abortion Discussed

By BOB COUREY

In the wake of the national elections held last week, many issues of importance have been stressed to the public. An issue of major concern to many Americans is that of abortion. Many anti-abortion groups were supporting Ronald Reagan, for example, for his staunch anti-abortion stance. The Villanovan wondered if the Villanovans For Life were supporting a candidate and if they view abortion as a political issue.

The Villanovan spoke with Jim Dimmitt, president of the Villanovans For Life. He stated, "The club (VFL) does not endorse political candidates, but we want to inform people who thought pro-life was an issue on which candidates had a pro-life platform."

Q: Should pro-life groups be involved in politics at all?

A: Pro-life groups have to be involved in when, for example, the courts start handing down rulings on these matters.

Q: What do you think about people voting on the sole issue of pro-life?

A: I don't think anyone should be a one-issue voter, although some people are. As far as politics, pro-lifers should look at other aspects of human life — not just abortion. These aspects include the elderly, handicapped and issues like capital punishment.

Jim Dimmitt, president of the VFL.

Q: Why do you think politics and religion are brought into this issue?

A: Many people use politics and the courts and religion to take the responsiblity of making such decision off their shoulders. When discussing the Pope and his doctrines, you have religion and the Catholic Church entering into it. As far as I understand, he is informing people what they should do as far as the laws of the church go to be Catholic. Some of the talk on abortion has clouded the issue. It is a human rights issue that is being mixed up with religious and political views.

Q: Do you think it is right to impose your morals on others?

A: I see abortion not so much of a moral issue as an issue of basic human rights. In the preamble to the Declaration of Independence, each person is guaranteed certain unalienable rights, which includes right to life. If a fetus isn't guaranteed the right to life, then are we? I don't think that prohibiting abortion is imposing morals on a person, because again, it is a human rights issue. We're talking about the right of a human to live. It's true that everyone has different morals, but doesn't everyone have the same rights? Does anyone have the right to take the life of any person?

Q: What do you think about women's groups who demand the right to control what happens to their bodies?

A: The argument I have with this is that the fetus in the woman's womb is not really a 'part' of her body. It is a human life that is forming in her.

Q: What do you think about the laws made by the courts?

A: There are many laws about the prohibition of murder and protecting the saftey of people. I find it ironic that abortion is permitted by the same courts that outlaw these other crimes. I don't think any court should decide who lives and who dies. Abortion is just one of the human right to life issue. Another, for example, is euthanasia.

Q: What do you think about abortion in general?

A: We'd like to see alternatives to abortion. Abortion should not be used as a method of birth control. Many people who are looking to adopt children, and there are many agencies to help people with these problems.

People speculate that if abortion is prohibited, that once the babies are born, they will suffer with things like starvation, child abuse and the like. There is so much money wasted in the government that could go to help these children, like the thousands of dollars wasted on the studies that include 'why college students watch television.'

VFL is purely a pro-life activity. Its stands are not completely based on any religious or political views. VFL also doesn't just center on abortion. They value human life at all stages, from conception to death.

Lecture Dominated by Realism

Liddy Proves To Be Controversial

By MELISSA ARAVA

"AMORAL CROOKS BELONG IN JAIL — NOT ON CHRISTIAN CAMPUSES!" So proclaimed a banner displayed by five Villanova students stationed outside the Field House on Thursday night. The students were there to protest the paid appearance of G. Gordon Liddy, former CIA agent, Watergate co-conspirator and author of a book entitled, "Will."

Tom Doyle, Ken Silverwood, Walt Jordan, Don Swete and Arlene Digan attempted to dissuade people from entering the Field House and buying tickets for the lecture. Senior Don Swete complained, "Villanova is hypocritical. They have courses in ethics and morals and now we're supporting a confessed crook. The man belongs in jail — not on a college campus."

His complaint was echoed by Doyle, who said, "We just don't feel that a University associated with a Christian tradition and what it stands for should associate with a man like Liddy. The man is making money on immorality."

Immoral or not, many people slipped past the protestors to form what was a turnout of more than 800 for the lecture. Leddy's opening remarks were strangely pertinent to what was going outside the Field House. He said, "There is something different about the American people . . . it is an inability to understand reality, or a desire to turn away and "make it go away."

Liddy later reinforced the statement with an analogy. "It's like swimming in the Atlantic and seeing a big fin cutting through the water towards you saying, "Hi, it's Charlie Tuna!", when, in reality, it's Jaws."

In a lecture dominated by the concepts of realism and power, he encouraged Americans to "stop believing in the Easter Bunny," and to shake off idealistic delusions and a false sense of security and begin to exercise caution in uncompromisingly trusting in the morality of government and politicians. As he told the audience, "A strong agricultural base and a strong industrial base translate into economic power. Only economic power translates into political power — not moral power."

As for students of political science, "When you study political science here at school, you get what I call the Holiday Inn version of the political system. It's not the real thing."

Liddy should know. In 1968 Liddy, working as an attorney in his father's law firm, began campaigning hard for Richard Nixon's election to the presidency, a move which led to his subsequent appointment as Special Assistant in the Treasury Department in 1969.

In June of 1971 he was shifted to the White House and was assigned to a clandestine group that was to become known as the "plumbers", a name which Liddy claimed "was never used . . . it was a word invented by the press." He personally referred to the sum of his leak-plugging projects as "Odessa."

The group, headed by Egil (Bud) Krogh, deputy assistant to President Nixon, and David Young, a former assistant to Henry Kissinger, along with Liddy and co-worker Howard Hunt, formerly of the CIA, instrumented a night-time raid on the office of Dr. Lewis Fielding, a Los Angeles psychiatrist, in an attempt to discredit one of Fielding's patients, namely Daniel Ellsberg. Ellsberg was responsible for the release of the Pentagon Papers, a secret study of the U.S. involvement in Vietnam, to the New York Times, a move which had greatly angered President Nixon.

Liddy's next project was the initial break-in and wiretapping of the Democratic National Headquarters, located in an office in the Watergate Hotel Complex, in May of 1972. The scheme was engineered primarily by Liddy and Hunt, who enlisted the aid of 5 Cuban-Americans along with James McCord, chief of security at the Committee to Re-elect the President, who acted as the electronics expert.

The second break-in was initiated because the major listening device planted by McCord did not seem to be working. Five of the men were apprehended by police

Free University Involves U II

By BOB COUREY

University II, Villanova's free university program, is now in its second semester under the direction of the Union. Since becoming a committee of the Union, U II has gained more support and momentum each semester.

According to University II coordinator, Rick McNally, "Free University programs are fast becoming more popular on college campuses. We try to provide quality courses at little or no cost to the students."

This semester, twenty courses were offered, and although three were dropped due to lack of interest, McNally noted that there was a large increase in enrollment and over 300 people registered for the remaining courses.

The most popular course this semester was Dancercise which drew ninety-one students. This course combines aerobic exercise with top 40 music is taught by Janet Baschaler, a senior dance major at Temple University. Dancercise is used to help the cardiovascular system and to tone muscles.

CPR seminars also created great interest. Successfully passing one of these courses, which were taught in conjunction with Methodist Hospital and the United Way of Southeastern Pennsylvania, certifies the student in CPR technique for one year. McNally said of the CPR seminars, "This is more than just a class. We feel that this is a service to the Villanova community because a person's life can be saved with this knowledge." Mr. Joseph Micucci was instrumental in setting up the course.

A new course which has been added this semester teaches massage techniques. Body Massage is taught by senior Allyson Grobe who learned the techniques when she was in Hawaii. Massage is a valuable skill to acquire since it can be used to both stimulate and relax the body as well as to relieve tension. This course deals with three types of massage — shiatsu, Swedish, and lomi-lomi.

U II courses are not haphazardly chosen. According to McNally, "When people want to teach a class, we check out their credentials to make sure they are qualified.

McNally added that, "The teachers this year are a good blend of students, university employees and members of the surrounding community. This is the goal we strive for."

The U II program is a continuous cycle. When one semester of the program is well underway, planning and teacher recruitment begins for the next semester. McNally noted some changes that are being planned for future U II programs saying, "Teacher recruitment will be restructured and committee members will play more administrative and instructive roles."

Ultimate Takes Title

By BEA DISC

It was an Ultimate day in Washington D.C. Frisbee teams, from four states and the District of Columbia gathered on the lawn in front of the Lincoln Memorial this past weekend for the 1980 Mid-Atlantic Regional Ultimate frisbee Championships. Villanova's Women's Ultimate team came away with a second place title.

In the first match Villanova lost a heartbreaker to Glassboro St. by a score of 8-7. Captain Julie Roberts commented, "We lost the game in the first few minutes of play. They scored 4 quick goals so the rest of the match was an uphill battle."

Andy Bawduniak led the way by scoring 5 goals in the game while Becky Dickinson and Lisa Primavera each added 2 assists.

Roberts said, "We just ran out of steam at the end. The game lasted 44 minutes; Villanova had only one substitute while Glassboro had 9 or 10."

Glassboro went on to win the tournament by defeating Bucknell 13 to 5.

The women came back in the second game, however, showing no signs of fatigue as they trounced Kutztown State by a score of 13-3.

Roberts came to life against Kutztown by scoring five goals and making five assists. Teammate Dickinson added two scores and three assists.

The women secured second place in the Mid-Atlantic region by tallying more total points than third place Bucknell.

"The whole tournament was really a team effort," stated Roberts "Every member of the team had at least a goal and/or an assist. Most importantly, the team had a great time in D.C. and that's what Ultimate is really all about."

Other members of the Women's Ultimate Frisbee team include: Terucka Jimenez, Sue Schmid, Kathy Bettendorf and Laurie O'Donnell. Bill Gallagher, a member of the men's Ultimate team, also accompanied the women to help coach them onto victory.

Liddy

in the building at 2 a.m., while Liddy and Hunt walked past the squad cars parked outside, virtually unnoticed.

The cover-up of the Watergate affair proved unsuccessful. On June 4, 1973, during a closed session of Senator Sam Ervin's Watergate Committee, G. Gordon Liddy was scheduled to testify. When asked to answer the oath that he promised to "tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth," Liddy answered, "No."

Thus he became known as the "Sphinx of Watergate" or "the man who wouldn't talk." He was convicted of 9 felonies and sentenced to 20 years in prison, the longest sentence given to anyone involved in the Watergate scandal. He served nearly 5 years before President Carter reduced his sentence.

Liddy related, "When I was in prison I was stripped naked. They strip you to make sure you don't have any weapons. But I had the greatest weapon of all. My parents were able to give me a great education." Liddy thereby created an "intelligence organization" in the Danbury, Ct. prison where he was incarcerated for some time, actually wiretapping the warden's office and photocopying documents on the warden's own machine. He went on to prove in court that the warden was corrupt and to have him transferred.

His advice to students was, "You're sitting on a gold mine. It's like sitting on a Comstock load. But of course, like sitting on a comstock load, you won't get any gold until you pick up a pick and axe. You have to put forth a little effort."

Since then, the club has branched out to help the handicapped, mentally retarded, and the elderly. There are four committees in the organization. They are: education committee, which educates the club members about the right to life movement and also goes to local schools and parishes to speak; political committee, which informs the club about laws and court decisions about human rights; special projects committee, which sends people to homes for the handicapped and elderly to visit and help them; publicity committee, which publicizes club activities.

HUNGER AWARENESS WEEK

This is your last chance to see all of the many activities that will take place during Hunger Awareness Week (Nov. 16-22) before they pass you by. Much time and work has taken place to plan the meetings, films, debates, food drive, art and education displays and concert, and all you have to do is be there. The little time you put in for any of these events will mean a lot to many hungry people.

The latest update on the week's schedule shows:

11/16 Sunday: 10:00 a.m. — St. Mary's & 11:00 a.m. Corr Masses: Monsignor Coll, speaker and 6:00 p.m. — Main Chapel: Diane Miller, speaker

11/17 Monday: "Run for Hunger" in front of the Library (3:00-6:00 p.m.) — If you can't run, just sponsor somebody. 7:00 p.m. — Political Union Debate on the Nestle's issue, West Lounge Dougherty

11/18 Tuesday: Film on Hunger Awareness in St. Rita's Chapel at 12:00 noon

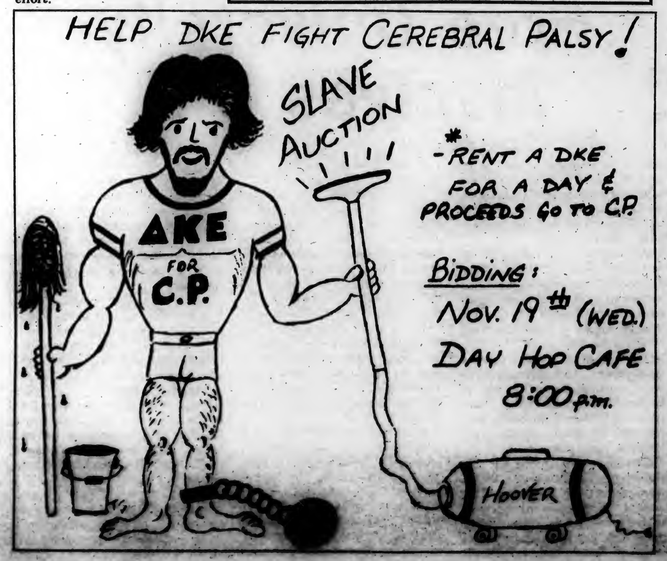
11/19 Wednesday: The Student Peace and Justice Committee, operating under the Center for Concern, is planning a Peace and Justice Day during Hunger Awareness Week. The main focus will be campus-wide education about the Nestle Infant Formula controversy and the related boycott. Several professors have indicated their willingness to participate in this education effort. Your help would be appreciated. Planned events for the day are: 9:30 & 10:30 — Film and discussion in the Connelly Center; 11:30 — Rally on the Nestle Infant Formula issue at Kennedy Mall; 12:30 — Panel Discussion in the Connelly Center; 1:30, 2:30 & 3:30 — More films and discussions

11/20 Thursday: 11:30-2:00 — Faculty Panel Discussion in Connelly Center Cinema; 8:00-Midnight — Concert in Dougherty Day Hop; 8:00-8:20 — Bill Clark and John Barrett; 8:30-8:50 — Perry and Connie; 9:00-9:45 — Improvisation; 9:50-10:10 — John Gilroy and Kathy Gentile; 10:15-12:00 — PHEASANTS

11/21 Friday: 12:00 Noon — Film on Hunger Awareness in St. Rita's Chapel

ALL WEEK: Baby Food Drive
And food-waste campaign
Art Display in the Connelly Center
All Kingdon have hunger theme
Peace and Justice courses — Education Display in Library

Again, if many people support these activities it will show the concern Villanova has for Hunger Awareness. Don't just take up all of the responsibility upon yourself, but tell all of your friends, teachers, and relatives that you got the whole world involved — because hunger is a world problem.



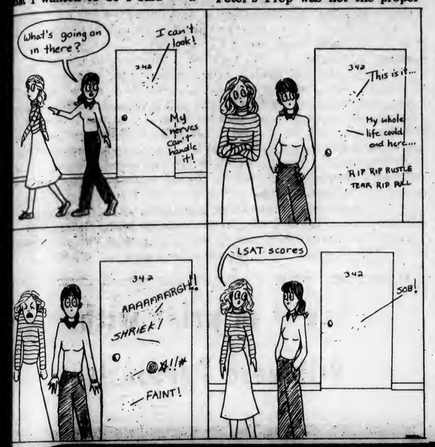
Villanova Remembered From 1922

By WILLIAM A. O'LEARY
Class of 1922

September 1918. World War I coming to a climax. American doughboys were being ferried to Europe at a fast rate.

A unit of the Student Army Corps had been authorized for Villanova. I was a year too young to be enlisted — no matter, I was enrolled and my parents paid the tuition and costs.

I had been graduated from St. Peter's Prep in Jersey City, N.J. in the top echelon of the class. When my father asked me what I wanted to be I said — a Civil Engineer. I think he was "flabbergasted" but he did not "bat an eye" and arrangements were made to enroll me at Villanova. Two cousins of mine had been graduated from Villanova, John O'Leary in 1915 and his brother Joe in 1918. Each was at the top of his respective class and received degrees of B.S. in Electrical Engineering. Presumably this eased the way for my entry although Father Dean, the then President of Villanova, had grave reservations about my ability to "stand the gaff." St. Peter's Prep was not the proper preparation for engineering college, he said.



Two of my brothers, Timothy and Dennis took me to Villanova from Elizabeth, N.J. where we lived. Father Dean laid down the law that I would have to master Trigonometry and Physics on my own and get through freshman year without any conditions, or else. Brothers Tim and Dennis listened respectfully and left me to the mercy of the Augustinian Fathers and a new experience. Tim said he was glad I was staying and not him. This comment was made after we had dinner in the dining hall. He said the meal was lousy.

Hectic days and nights were at hand. There was a rush of student soldiers to be assigned to classes and quarters. I was "holed up" in Murderer's Row with a lad from the coal country — Alphonse Stine. The first night, as we were getting ready for "taps" he pulled out a nightgown and headed for the latrine and washroom down the hall. I thought this was a dangerous business and told him so. He came back sans nightgown.

The officers in charge of the Corps were largely southern. The Master Sergeant, however, was one of our own (Weigand) and he seemed to be the dominant authority.

Classes got under way in short order and we soon found that Villanova was not going to be a "pushover." The first one to make an impression on me, outside of Father Dean, was Professor Carl T. Humphrey — "Hump" as they called him. Here was a no nonsense educator the likes of which I never encountered before or after the term at Villanova. Roofs and Bridges was his specialty and if you did not understand the principles of mechanics after listening to him, your IQ would have to be pretty low. I can still recall his writing on the blackboard EH-O, EV-0 and EM-0. He expected you to tell him the stress in a truss of a bridge almost by inspection of the diagram he set up. Nor was he a slouch at discipline. One morning, after his exposition at the blackboard he asked if there were any questions. Red Prendergast asked what time it was. "Hump" stepped to the door, opened it and waved Prendergast out. That was the last we saw of him.

We had not been at Villanova very long before disaster struck. The outbreak of Spanish Influenza hit us hard and all but deactivated the proceedings. It was during this period that the true calibre of the Augustinian Fathers and brothers was demonstrated. My roommate was stricken — Father Frank Driscoll picked him up in his arms and carried him to the infirmary on the third floor of the College Building. That was the only time in my life that I really felt homesick. The history of the Class of 1922, which is contained in the first Yearbook, Belle Air, and written by Charles Belz, a classmate, gives a concise account of this difficult period. It passed quickly and after a period of several weeks we came back to the real Villanova.

I was assigned a room in the Monastery wing and as I recall, had the same room for the whole succeeding period. The rooms were mostly singles, but there were some doubles at the ends of the halls. Elmer Hertzler roomed across from me — he was a football player. He claimed that he had to kiss Father Dean's posterior section to get in and Cardinal Dougherty's ring to get out. He was not a Catholic.

There was no segregation of dormitory rooms by class. John (Buck) Jones of the Class of '21, for instance, had a room in our wing or floor. We were required to be in our rooms from 7 to 9 p.m. each night except Friday and Saturday for study and this was policed by the Prefects who were Augustinian Brothers. The student body was made up of those who lived at the College and those who lived at home and travelled to class each day.

Then there was the division of the lay students and those who were training for membership in the Augustinian Order — the "edgies" as we called them. The only contact we had with them was at class. There was little mixing otherwise. It was about the same as the contacts with the students at Bryn Mawr College, a couple of miles away. For all practical purposes, there was none.

This brings up the social aspect of life at Villanova in those days. There was a rule that you could go out on Saturday night only. Seniors could go out any night if they had no conditions (up to "snuff" in class work). Yours truly was among these in his

Not only are we working on complex Naval Weapons Systems that will revolutionize current state-of-the-art standards, we're offering opportunities for growth and professional recognition that put us way ahead of our competition. At Vitro, almost every project we take on represents a significant part of a major national issue. Depending on your interests, you could be involved in the systems engineering, integration, and analysis of the fleet shipboard combat system development, or the application of advanced computer technology in support of complex systems engineering programs. It's a career that has implications well beyond the academic.

As one of the nation's leading systems engineering firms, we can offer the new graduate a career package that includes tuition reimbursement, group insurance, paid vacations, retirement programs, a very good salary, and the opportunity to become involved immediately in significant long-term programs. You'll also enjoy being located "at the pulse," in suburban Maryland, near Washington, D.C., within easy reach of the many cultural advantages of the nation's capital.

Vitro positions require problem-solvers who have technical ability and engineering creativity. If you're about ready for a real world application of your classroom problem-solving skills, let's talk about tomorrow: yours and ours. We'll be on campus November 14; or contact Maureen Conrad, College Relations Coordinator, Toll Free at (800) 638-2901, ext. 4050. senior year. Saturday night was looked forward to — many went to a dance hall in Norristown, which was on the second floor of the City Hall.

We took the P & W from the Villanova station and had to be back by midnight. We reported to the Vice President in charge of discipline when we left and had to check in with him when we got back. There were special occasions — the night before a holiday, for instance, when the rank and file could go out. This led to ingenious subterfuges whereby the dance at Norristown was attended by some who were not eligible for liberty for one reason or anothers.

The first "shift" at Norristown would get "pass out" checks at the dance, come back to Villanova to check in before midnight and either go back for another couple of hours or give their "pass out" checks to someone else who would go over to the dance for the second shift.

Ah — the good old days — what we wouldn't give to live them over again. The bull sessions with the group from Philly after morning classes to say nothing of the repartee on the first night back after Thanksgiving, Xmas and Easter vacations and after summer vacations are fond memories. Let the present generation of students at Villanova enjoy their classes, teachers and the local environment.

We, of the Class of 1922, lived in the best part of the century and have no regrets. These were the finest years of our lives and if any of our mentors are still alive, we, your old students salute you and belatedly express our appreciation for the guidance and advice you gave us.

'Grand Wazoo' Frank Zaps Towe

By ROBERT BALLARD

Frank Zappa appeared at the Tower Theater last Friday night and displayed the musical ingenuity and guitar mastery that has enhanced his prominence for 16 years.

As he hit the stage he instantly grabbed the hearts of his fans, whose exuberance for their hero who is now near 40 years old has not mellowed over the years

Frank rewarded the crowd for their enthusiasm immediately with his guitar wizardry on Black Napkins followed by the rapid fire vocals of Keep It Greasy.

Zappa's band; a potent seven man unit featuring four guitars, keyboards, synthesizer and drums; included much of the cast from Joe's Garage, such as Ike Willis, who contributed frequently on lead vocals.

But for the most part, the spotlight was on Zappa. Not only does he compose and arrange his music, but also conducts it on stage as well. He exhibited total command of his band; it was apparent that every song was a well-rehearsed orchestration. The band put forth a powerful, highly precisioned, nearly flawless performance. Zappa's live show is as professionally produced as his albums.

Frank Zappa, undaunted in his search for the great dental floss ranch in the sky.

Even after 16 years in music and over 25 albums, no two Zappa songs sound the same. His material explores areas beyond the boundaries of conventional music, and ranges lyrically from political satire to explicit sexual depiction.

This show consisted of a blend of his old and new material, and included lengthy jams by band members on keyboards and drums, and frequent mesmerizing guitar jams by Zappa.

Writing musical parodies of the latest trend is one Zappa trademark, and designer jeans and punk rock fell victim in two of his new numbers Friday night. Familiar material included The Torture Never Stops from the Zoot Allures album, and an energetic consecutive pair tunes from Sheik Yerbo Broken Hearts are for Asshe and I'm So Cute.

For his encore Zappa donned Army helmet and dark glasses marched through a feverish r dition of I Don't Want to Drafted.

Throughout the evening Fra maintained a friendly rapport w the audience. He paraded b and forth on stage, leaning into crowd often to slap hands, autographs and accept gifts, cluding a Ronald Reagan ma Between songs he was co charismatic and all smiles; but was very business-like about music, expecially his guitar pl ing.

Zappa proved himself a co vincingly versatile and profess al performer. His rep toire spanned a diverse musi spectrum — ranging from sub classical to blatantly punk. band performed forcefully skillfully under the direction their mastermind, contributi significantly to what was an plosive and thorough tertainment package.

Redford Creates Extraordinary Lives On Film

By ECHELMEIER YOUNGER

From the title of this film, Ordinary People, we picture the theme to envelope itself around middle-class people taking all life has to offer. Ordinary People denotes the customary conditions that are always anticipated by the Garretts, an upper middle-class family. A paradox is drawn when this family experiences a crisis that is classified as being out of the ordinary.

A well-known actor, Robert Redford directs the film Ordinary People which features memorable performances from Donald Sutherland, Tim Hutton and Mary Tyler Moore.

Th film family's structural orderliness has been disrupted by a disillusioned teenage son. Tim Hutton portrays Conrad, the teenage son who drowned himself in guilt and attempted suicide after his brother's boating accident which resulted in the brother's death.

Conrad is constantly fighting two battles, one with himself and the other with his mother, Mary Tyler Moore. Mrs. Garrett feels she can't cope with her suicidal depressed son; she really doesn't want to. Because of this interpersonal friction, communication between mother and son is never achieved.

Donald Sutherland as Mr. Garrett is unable to reestablish his family into a unified body.

Periodically Conrad sits in on psychiatric sessions in the hopes of overcoming his trauma. In the end, the psychiatrist is successful in assisting Conrad to combat and eliminate the guilt feelings which evoked his depressed state.

Ultimately, Conrad comes to terms with reality when he releases himself from the grips of self-persecution.

On The Average:

Trivia Facts Titillate

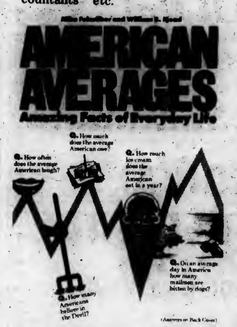
By SHARON WINTERS

Statistics can be fun, under certain conditions. If the statistics are categorized and if they are given cute headlines, they can be further proof of the well-known publishing fact: Trivia Sells.

American Averages is proof that the reading public feeds on trivia like potato chips. It's pleasurable junk food for the eyes.

The cover of the book teases about the contents. "How often does the average person laugh? (15 times a day) How many Americans believe in the Devil? (38% of Protestants and 66% of Catholics) How much ice cream does the average American eat in a year? (4 gallons)" These and other questions grace the cover.

Inside, the book has many interesting facts that are useful. In a section titled, "Where the jobs will be," are listings of the average number of openings a year in various professions. According to American Averages, every year, on the average, there will be openings for: "70,000 elementary and kindergarten teachers; 56,000 engineers; 23,400 lawyers; 9,700 computer programmers; 900 historians; 40 astronomers; 6,300 chemists; 2,100 newspaper reporters; 900 historians; 51,500 accountants" etc.



The book also cites, "In 1977, the average American college woman wore jeans 4 to 7 days a week, pants 3 times a week, and a skirt and a dress once a week each."

College men also have habi according to the book, "The av age American college man pref a traditional suit to a sport coa leisure suit . . ." Also the bo says the average college ma "wears sneakers or running sh at least half the time." "The av age American man wears s 10-1/2D shoes," according to ennumbered volume.

The trivia is delightful. Th reader can agree with some of t numbers, dismiss others and ho that still others are true.

For instance, it's easy to believ that the average American drink "185 cans of beer" in one year a cording to averages. It logical follows, in this reviewer's mind that that average person will nee the "30 anacid tablets" and th "125 aspirins" a year that th book claims are consumed.

On the other hand it's not eas to believe that, "The averag American today drinks only ha as much hard liquor as the typica American drank in 1850," accor ing to the book. Our forefather must have had a good time, if the could recall anything.

Vasey Unveils Brecht's Drama

Personal, political conflict

A scene from "The Caucasian Chalk Circle."

By EILEEN McCAFFREY

Villanova, courtesy of Vasey Theatre, is privileged to have Heinz-Uwe Haus of the German Democratic Republic here to direct a production of Bertolt Brecht's The Caucasian Chalk Circle. The play was written in 1944-5 while Brecht was living in California, in exile from his native Germany.

The story opens in Soviet Georgia in 1945 with representatives from two collective farms trying to decide who should take over a recently liberated valley. The fruit-growing collective proposes to irrigate the valley for orchards and vineyards, thus making maximal use of the land. Because they will take better care of the land, this collective wins possession and to celebrate a famous singer comes to tell the fable of the Chinese chalk circle, adapted for the Caucasian farmers. A governor is overthrown and killed; his wife leaves their son behind while escaping the rebels. After some hesitation a servant girl Grusha (played by Robyn Hatcher) takes the child with her and flees to the mountain. She endures much hardship to keep the child, once giving him up in despair, then returning for him when the soldiers threaten to kill him. Grusha nearly loses her life and her future husband because of the child, yet she still keeps him. One day the governor's wife returns for the child and Azdak the judge must decide who is the real mother.

The basic conflicts and the theme of motherhood, ownership and revolution are clear from the start. The show holds one's interest not by suspense over what will happen, but by keeping you wondering how it will happen. A viewer will be very conscious that the actors are telling a story.

The Caucasian Chalk Circle will play at Vasey Theatre Nov. 12-16 and 19-23, and at Annenberg Center's Harold Prince Theatre Nov. 24-25. This is a rare opportunity to see a Brecht play directed by a fellow German, and for that reason alone one should see it. Besides that, the show is a unique experience you won't want to miss.

Blue Angels Leave Fingerprintz

Blue Angel

By PAUL H. BERN

If rock n roll of the 1950s is what you like most, then Blue Angel is for you. With an updated and slightly New Wave style, the Blue Angel group makes the oldies sound better than ever. John Turi, on saxophone and keyboards, and vocalist Cyndi Lauper demonstrate that they know what their audience prefers.

The album opens with Maybe We'll Know, a song that is '50s in all respects. Anna Blue follows in the '50s tradition as well; however, it has a more "modern" sound. Blue Angel lets us know right from the beginning that they know what they want to do and how to do it.

The first hints of New Wave appear in Late. Late. It's 50s in music and content, but the rhythm and Cyndi Lauper's vocals give the song its New Wave sound. John Turi shows his virtuosity on the saxophone during Cat Out. Both Late and Cat Out were obviously made to be danced to and that is what they make you do.

The perfect balance between 50s and New Wave is struck in Take a Chance, and proves that the two styles of music are readily compatable. Just The Other Day

Fingerprintz

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

The power-pop faction of the New Wave, led by perennial teen-screams the Cars, spawned acts like Fingerprints. Their sound is distinctive: A monochromatic, steady drumbeat is overlayed and driven by snappy guitar hooks and topped by melancholy spurts of synthesizer. Fingerprintz' recent release Distinguishing Marks concentrates entirely on running the gamut of this New Wave technique, at the terrible price of expanding the creative feeling behind it; in other words, it is all form that hides very little substance.

The first song, Yes Eyes, immediately connects Fingerprintz to the Cars through the noun-as-adjective scam Ocasek explored with the phrase "geranium lover" in The Dangerous Type. Remorse Code closes with the walkie-talkie beeps that open the B-52's Planet Claire. Amnesia, on the second side, rips off the Stones' Lies, which would be fine, except that Lies was the Stones' ripping off the original New Wavers. Distinguishing Marks is not a binge of exploration.

"Jabs" from "Distinguishing Marks."

Each side has one song that saves it, though. The bright spot on side one is Bulletproof Heart, a song about the uselessness of sensitivity in big-city life. Bogdan Wiczling saves his most potent drum licks to emphasize the chorus, "Bulletproof, SHATTERproof heart", like Nick Mason underlined "Mother, will she BREAK my heart?" in the Floyd's Mother. Jabs, on side two, is unpretentious and funny, sharply punctuated by backing vocals, "Jabs . . . Jabs . . . Sex Jabs." And for maybe 10 seconds toward the end of Jabs, Fingerprintz finally sounds like the Cars doing the Talking Heads doing Motown. Distinguishing Marks isn't an explosion on untrodden ground, either.

A fact in the book that is hopefully true: "The average Family head with four years of college makes $25,224 a year — $5,507 more than the average high-school graduate, and $8,993 more than the average family head with only eight years of education . . ." At least if the effort is put into higher education, it's comforting to be told that, on the average, college should be worth more financially. Perhaps, with a little luck, all Villanovans will be high averages at least.

The "Amazing Facts of Everyday Life" presented in American Averages are easy, entertaining reading. The bits of knowledge in the book are great to bore friends and foes alike. This reviewer has found, rather informally, that on the average, spontaneously reading portions of the book aloud will bore 38% of those in listening range, annoy another 20% and the rest will discretely pretend that they heard nothing and hurriedly carry on with whatever business that will remove them from the immediate area as soon as possible.

Another extreme presents itself. You can cite that, "The more study time spent reciting material out loud, the more the average person can memorize," as the book states. You, then, can have the satisfaction of knowing that 25% will start talking to themselves, although none of them will admit to it. This last particular survey was extremely informal; no one has any idea how many students talk to themselves or what they say. They don't seem to share their private conversations.

A middle ground exists for useful application of this book. A skilled student, on the average, might be able to impress someone at a party with some of this wisdom. Unfortunately, no statistics are available in this area. It's virgin ground for experimentation, at your own risk.

Incidentally, the average person does not curl up on a Saturday afternoon and read this book from cover to cover. The average person, also, does not attempt to use this book as a primary reference for a term paper.

The average person flips through this book and then refuses to acknowledge that he or she has really paid any attention to it. The average person will, in a similar manner, refuse to admit that he or she has ever actually watched Fantasy Island. But, that tell-tale "Boss de plane, de plane," gives them away every time.

Next time somebody tells you that about half the workers in America have to either punch or sign in and out on the job, think about it. That tidbit is in the middle of American Averages. Don't let anyone bluff you by claiming that he or she saw that fact on the cover as they walked by a book rack.

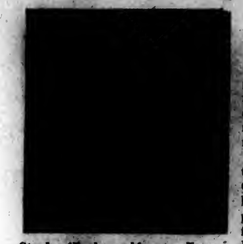
"ODE TO THE PHANTOM CALLER" (MSM)
'Twas the night of the Phillies World Series winning,
When all through my house not a person was stirring.
When what to our wondering ears did we hear,
But the ring of our phone at a quarter to three (AM)
I answered the phone, and to my surprise,
The Phantom Caller was on the line.
She said she was drunk. (As if I couldn't tell!)
With a voice that was hoarse from all her yells.
Anyway as the story continues,
She didn't remember that late night call,
And swears up and down that it wasn't her at all.
For now and forever I'll put and end to this bicker and clash,
You really did call so let's not rehash,
This argument again.
For ever and ever let this be the end!

Clarke Unearths Mother Lode

Stanley Clarke Extends His Web



Stanley Clarke on his new album, "Rocks, Pebbles and Sand."

By THOM STYLES

Rocks, Pebbles And Sand is an album that will turn a few heads with its diversity. The record is an interesting contrast of funk, rock jazz and, to an extent, elements of gospel as well. If all this sounds like it is another subcategory of a musical style, don't be mistaken; Clarke treats each as a separate style, with each song a proving ground for an experiment. Common to the entire album is the characteristic cleanliness seen (or rather, heard) in previous Clarke releases.

Side one starts with the novel tune, Danger Street, marking Clarke's nearest flirtation with hard rock. This reviewer was impressed! The song combines finesse with solid power, worthy of Beck. Following a rather bizarre introduction, Clarke eases into his natural format, a fusion instrumental segment consisting of the title cut and a song entitled All Hell Broke Loose. This portion of the record follows the examples of his School Days album with its accent on pitch-bending guitar tracks with Clarke plucking away on the old Alembic.

Side two is easily more laid back on this album. You/Me Together and Part 2: A Fool Again are both a lot smoother, the latter featuring Marcy Levy on vocals, is a disco song in the vein of Angela Bofill. Together is slightly more upbeat with basically the same players. Sandwiched between these is a heavy funk song called We Supply that rivals the Isley Brothers stylistically.

Rocks, Pebbles And Sand is a rather unique crossover record, unique in the multitude of directions challenged. Previous listeners will find it a radical change of pace; those new to Stanley Clarke should find it an enticement; both will be rewarded, musically.

Goalie Gears Up For Double Duty

By KYLE GOTHNER

The Villanova women's soccer team posted their first winning season this year with an overall record of 6-3-3. Much of the team's overwhelming success can be credited to junior goalie Patti Nowlan.

Nowlan played goalie for the field hockey team but this year decided not to play because of field hockey's heavy practice schedule and, as a chemical engineer, she has a heavy scholastic load. Since women's soccer is a club sport, and therefore less time consuming than hockey, there was only a little hesitation by Nowlan when she was told that the soccer team needed a goalie. The problem for Nowlan was that she had never played soccer before.

Nowlan did not know anything about soccer when she decided to play; none of the rules, none of the strategies and none of the defense techniques. But, aside from these minor setbacks, she managed very well. She attributes her success as a goalie to Coach Lee Stevens. Stevens always tried to make the team work together, Nowlan explained, "At practice he worked drills that not only helped the team, but helped me to be able to work with the defense, so I wasn't so isolated from the team."

Coach Stevens feels that Nowlan is a natural athlete with all the best qualities one can possess; intelligence, ability, and quickness. "She is very coachable," explained Stevens of Nowlan, "she's always willing to try anything, and will listen to everything." Stevens feels so strongly about Nowlan's athletic ability that he has nominated her along with Nina Wieszorek and Karen Clabbers for the EAIAW All-Star team to be chosen in the upcoming weeks.

Nowlan's toughest, as well as best, game was against Rutgers when she recorded a staggering 25 saves. Coach Stevens explained that one sign of a great athlete is the ability to be able to play with pain and Nowlan did just that against Rutgers. Playing with a taped ankle, Nowlan was able to hold her concentration to make the game her fourth shutout of the season.

Most of the shots that got by Nowlan were high, near the crossbar. Being 5'3" Nowlan had to learn how to jump, and how to time that jump in order to reach maximum height at the right moment. Her height proved to be only a slight disadvantage which was made up for by her teammates. Shots cannot be placed high unless the offense has enough time to set them up and due to a tremendous defense most of the shots were forced to be made quickly and were therefore low shots. Nowlan played all twelve games, letting only twelve shots get by, blocking 135 shots-on-goal.

At the close of their first winning season, Nowlan, along with the rest of the team, is already hoping for another victorious year.

follows the 50s more than Take a Chance, but John Turi and Cyndi Lauper prove that they know how to play their music.

Clearly the best song on the album is I'm Gonna Be Strong. Although it is a "heartbreaker" song, Blue Angel, especially Cyndi Lauper, make this song the most enjoyable. Lorraine is much the same as I'm Gonna Be Strong; but, where the latter is 50s in style, the former is New Wave.

The album closes with Everybody's got an Angel, which is as much New Wave as Maybe He'll Know is 50s. One could say that the Blue Angels album combines the old 50s with New Wave in such a manner that it could do nothing but appeal to all rock n rollers, young or old.

The problem is that Fingerprintz are influenced by sources that aren't true sources, just references to the true sources. If they skipped middlemen like the Cars, and cut straight to the quick of Buddy Holly or Tommy James (if that's what they want to do), they might not sound so unoriginal. As it stands now, Fingerprintz has very few Distinguishing Marks, but a carefully constructed sound geared to the market. We all know what happens to these things when "the next big thing" comes along: Bye Bye Love . . .

Femovich Breaks Stereotype

By BOB CONWAY

Dave Femovich stands at 6'2" tall and weighs 245 pounds. He plays offensive tackle for the Villanova football team. He participates in a game that demands strength, and is played under the assumption that the team that hits the hardest will win. It is out of this atmosphere that football players get stereotyped into the "big and dumb jocks." Femovich destroys this stereotype as well as he destroys opposing linemen.

Femovich is a third year pre-Med student. He transferred to Villanova from Virginia. "I came to Villanova for many reasons," said Femovich. "I needed to go to school in Pennsylvania for future reasons. I was interested in Villanova after high school, but I received only two letters so I went to Virginia."

The reason that Femovich received only two letters from Villanova was due to the fact that Villanova doesn't recruit in western Pennsylvania. "Coach Bedesem doesn't have the funds to recruit out there," said Femovich. "I am happy to play for Coach Bedesem and happy to be at Villanova. Coach Bedesem takes abuse that is unwarranted. I respect him a great deal. With the limited facilities he has to work with he does a great job."

Dave Femovich

Football at Villanova will take up at least 40 hours a week. Pre-Med also takes up a great deal of time. Somehow, even with a limited knowledge in mathematics, there can't be enough time in the day to do justice to both fields. Femovich replied, "When you enjoy doing what you are doing it can be done. I enjoy playing football, but I want to be a doctor. I don't want to do anything else."

Femovich enjoys Villanova. "The people make the place. As far as academics and football are concerned I am very pleased to be at Villanova." Femovich does have difficulties with the restricted social life Villanova has to offer. "At Virginia," Femovich said, "the university was student run. Here the students have no input. People who are 20 years old should be capable of running their own lives. I think it is a sad situation when we beat Penn (last Saturday) and then had to go to Penn to celebrate our victory."

Coach Bedesem made this preseason statement, "Dave's an extremely intelligent player. He just could be the player we're looking for to be our number one tackle. Through his hard work and desire Dave Femovich has proven to me that he deserved the starting job."

Women Netters

The women's tennis team ran its winning streak to 10 by defeating Drexel and Swarthmore in its final two matches this season, ending 1980 at a 11-1 record.

Against Drexel, the Cats shutout the Dragons 5-0. Singles victories came from Carol Harrison, Tricia Stariker and Diane Williams and doubles victories were chalked up by Lisa Martarano-Gina Ayoub and Diane Cappuccio-Bonnie Stokes.

Against Swarthmore, the Cats edged out a 3-2 victory with Dawn Fisher winning her singles match and Martarano-Ayoub and Williams-Cappuccio tallying doubles victories.

Intramural Playoffs Begin

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

Play-off action is already underway this week in the Villanova intramural football league to reduce the field of 20 qualifying teams to the 8 finalists who will meet in the championship on Sunday, Nov. 23.

Listed in the order of their final rankings, the play-off roster is made up of the undefeated divisional champions, Joint Effort, DTD, Wally's Gators, King's Court, The Wave and Athlete's Foot; the second place teams, Maulers, Back Streets, Trash, DPE, DKE and Fedigan Zombies; and eight other high finishers, 3-E Sullivan, Black Sheep, B-1 Bombers, Tanz's Terrors, Priory Moles, Chain Reaction, Red Brigade and M.B. Club.

Tanz's Terrors' quarterback John Maxwell hands off to Bob Dyckman in their 19-2 victory over Caine Blitz.

Today's games match the once beaten Maulers with DPE at 3:30 on Mendel Feild and undefeated Athlete's Foot with DKE at 3:30 on Austin Field. DPE and DKE both tied for second place in the Frat Division.

All play-off games will be held at either Austin or Mendel Field with the possible exception of the championship game. The intramural football final might be played at the stadium, but because this would necessitate rule changes for the game, the coaches of the two teams will be given the choice of the game's location.

An All-Star tournament will be held soon after the intramural football championship is decided and details such as the dates and location of the games and team rosters have yet to be decided. According to Intramural Department President Dino Valente, "that will be worked out in the next couple of weeks, everything is getting organized."

Three All-Star teams will be selected, each representing two of the divisions in the intramural football league. These teams will have the captains of the division champions as their co-captains.

The co-captains for the all-star teams are Ed Rohrbacker of DTD and Jim Leblanc of King's Court for the Frat and Central Division team, Pete Daley of Joint Effort and Al Oxenreiter of The Wave for the North and South Division team and Andrew Cangelosi of Wally's Gators and Mike Fuoti of Athlete's Foot for the East and West Division team.

Rivals Battle In Intramural Football

By BOBBY CARMEN

On what do you rank an intramural football team — depth, aggressiveness, experience? These are all special, but there's something else — something very important. It's called togetherness, and it is exemplified by intramural football's South Division leader, The Wave.

Mark Armelino provide Ronis with two quality wide receivers and senior Tom Sienkiewicz does more than his share at a tough tight end position.

Juniors Mark DelCol and Mike MacDonald are part of a talented and capable Wave backfield and sophomore sensation Joe "thunder-foot" Silvestri handles all of the kicking duties (both kickoffs and punts) in addition to helping out at tight end.

Defensively, juniors Pete Thompson, Jim Russomano, Kevin Rogers and sophomore Jack Fernandez provide the Wave with a linebacking corp that is unmatched around the league. Junior John Sincavage, probably the most underrated player on the team, is also more than adequate at defensive end. Then there is sophomore Josh Taylor, who could very well be the best overall athlete on the team, who "does the job wherever he is needed."

The Wave may not be the most awesome team in intramurals, but they may well be one of the best, for they possess a unique and important quality, togetherness.

The Wave

Undefeated through its first eight games, The Wave has come out of obscurity. They have proved to their fans, their rivals, and most importantly to themselves, that they are a team to be dealt with. Quarterbacking the Wave is Jim Ronis, a quick-footed junior, who, along with a gifted arm and a smart head, gets the job done with style. Ronis' biggest asset, though, is his offensive line, a line the team has nicknamed "The Labor Gang" . . . the ones that do the greatest amount of work but receive the least amount of credit. The "gang" consists of sophomore Karl Boelter, junior Greg Peck, junior Bob Agres and junior Paul Van Deventer. Mark Toomey, another member of the "gang," has come on very strong after a slow start.

Junior Al Oxenreiter and senior

Following a safety to Caine Blitz on the opening kickoff, Tanz's Terror bounced back with three touchdowns and clinched a playoff spot on the final day of the regular season.

The Maulers

There are only a few teams that can boast of a perennial winner in intramural football. The Maulers are one of those few teams.

Back again this year with a lot of new faces, the Maulers seem to be well on their way to yet another playoff year, losing only one game in eight for the season.

Senior quarterback Mike Coyle, although new to the Maulers, has been a major factor in the explosive Mauler offense. He is also backed up by one of the best tight ends in the league, senior Al Donatio, who was temporarily sidelined this year with a separated shoulder injury, but will be back and ready for the playoffs.

In the backfield behind Coyle is senior Kevin Scanlon, who like Donatio, suffered a separated shoulder that sidelined him for a portion of the season, but who has since returned to the starting lineup. In the backfield with Scanlon is two-year Mauler senior Walt Hanley and senior standout Bob Lynch.

Elsewhere on the offense are senior Brian McKenna (center) and senior Mike Grozier (offensive line) who have paved the way for the Maulers' intense ground attack.

Defensively, the Maulers are more than experienced. At defensive end is the only original member of the Maulers: senior four-year-man Kevin Brown, who is probably one of the quickest defensive ends in the league.

Behind Brown in the defensive secondary are seniors Pete Parante and Rick Vermeil.

The end result of all this experience and talent is a playoff-bound Mauler team. They are ready once again to play tough football when it counts — to go through the grind of the playoffs — once again.

The Wave defeated the Maulers 7-0 to capture the South Division Title. They were the first team to defeat the Maulers in the regular season in the Maulers four-year history. Both teams will advance into the playoffs.

Franks Coaches Swimmers In New Season

By KATHY MAHER

The women's swim team begins its 1980 season on December 9 under the direction of a new coach, Debbie Franks. Although Franks has been a Wildcat head coach for only about two months, she has plenty of managing experience. Last summer Coach Franks led the New Mexico AAU swim team to first place in the New Mexico State Championships. She also had two years of coaching experience prior to last summer.

Debbie Franks

Although Debbie Franks has no assistant coaches at this time, she is aided by sophomore manager Krista Lindner and Captains Jenny Franks and Mary Jarrett. Practicing Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at 7:00 and every evening at 5:30, the 18-member team is preparing for its upcoming season.

"We expect to win the pionship meet held on the weekend of December 5-6 by a lot. Our toughest meet however will be against Penn State on Dec. 13. It's expected to be a close match-up," explained Coach Franks.

Last year's team went undefeated in its dual meet season and placed fifth at the Nationals. Debbie Franks' expectations for her first year at Villanova as coach are "that the team will not go undefeated in its dual meets, but will win the Nationals."

Analyzing her team, Coach Franks feels "they are strong in every event and that there is no major weakness." Franks does admit however, that she has never coached divers before.

This year's swim team has great depth. It includes only two seniors — Mary Jarrett and Marcia Gregory, both divers, three juniors, six sophomores and seven freshmen. Of the 18-member team, five are scholarship athletes — Jenny Franks, Tara Broody, Rita Edge, Mary Mair and Beth Metzger. Each is strong in one stroke: I.M., backstroke, butterfly, freestyle and backstroke, respectively.

The swim team will be matched against Bryn Mawr in its first dual meet of the season. Each member of the team will contribute to the winning effort in this meet and each of the following ones. Coach Debbie Franks feels that the season will be a difficult one, but that the experience of the team will make them victorious. She believes "the difference between this team and those in the past is its great depth and talent."

Watercats Start Season

By LARRY GOANOS

Villanova Wildcat Head Swimming Coach Ed Geisz is entering his 27th season at the helm of the Cats with his team goals clearly defined. "We want to have another winning dual meet season, qualify for the NCAA Eastern Championships, win the Big East Championship and possibly to have an All-American," says Geisz, without hesitation. This may sound like a tall order, but according to Coach Geisz, the 1980-81 Cats can fill it.

This season's schedule is not an easy one but Coach Geisz is not worried. "We have a very competitive schedule but we also have a lot of outstanding talent on our team," he noted. The Cats will look toward senior Co-captains Robert Baltera and Todd Russell for leadership. Russell is also Villanova's leading candidate for All-American honors. "He is one of the best there is," said Geisz of Russell, who swims the 50-, 100- and 200-meter freestyle. Other top Wildcat performers are Dan Ahern, Paul Clark, Mark Feldner, Robert Kownurko and Tom Popdan.

The squad had a 9-5 dual meet record last year, which helped them to an 8th place final ranking among East Coast teams. Coach Geisz also picked up his 200th career victory along the way. The Cats will face every team from last year again in the upcoming campaign, except for Drexel, which has been replaced with Maryland. Almost all of the opponents have improved, especially George Washington, which awarded four scholarships during the off-season. Other tough meets will be against Penn State, Army, Navy and La-Salle.

Cats Conquer Quakers

By BETH WHITE

The Villanova Wildcats avenged a 69-year grudge against the University of Pennsylvania Quakers last Saturday by defeating the Quakers 34-3. The two teams had not played each other since 1911, when Penn won 22-0.

However, the Wildcats more than avenged that loss in Saturday's game, scoring five touchdowns to the Quaker's single field goal.

The Cats waited until midway through the first quarter to strike first, then scored their first two touchdowns within five minutes of each other.

The Wildcat defense held the Quakers inside their own 30-yard line and Penn's punter, Ed Gramigna, booted the ball 25 yards to mid-field, but the Quakers were penalized 15 yards for interference of receiver Willie Sydnor's fair catch. At the Penn 38-yard line and on the first play of the possession, senior quarterback Pat O'Brien (again starting at the helm of the Nova offense) nailed sophomore Tim Robinson in the endzone. Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck's extra-point kick sailed through the uprights to put the Cats on top, 7-0.

Penn was again unable to convert on a fourth-down situation, and on the next possession, Villanova scored again. The Cats pushed 60 yards in seven plays, aided by a 27-yard completion from O'Brien to Sydnor. Halfback Shawn Passman ran the final two yards on a right lateral from O'Brien and onto paydirt. That, with Bushbeck's extra-point kick, gave the Cats a 14-0 lead over Penn.

Penn was the next to put points on the scoreboard, with a 29-yard field goal off the foot of senior John Dwyer; the Quaker's first and only score of the day.

As the half closed, Villanova had more than doubled the Quaker's ground-yardage gained, and covered more than five times the ground-yardage of Penn (Nova's 318 to Penn's 59 yards) by the end of the game. By the time the clock had run out, the Cats had gained 473 total offensive yards to Penn's 234 yards gained.

The Cats' defensive secondary made up for the inexperienced front line (due to the suspension of three of the starting defensive linemen last week for disciplinary reasons). By breaking up several long passes from Quaker quarterback Gary Vura, the Cats prevented Penn from completing less than half their attempted passes.

Three-fourths of the way through the third quarter, the Villanova offense struck again, this time on a 30-yard completion from O'Brien to senior Bill Connors (which was the longest reception so far in Connor's career as a Wildcat). Nova covered 80 yards in ten plays, but were hurt by two 15-yard penalties.

Penalties proved to be a sore point of the game for the Cats, who were penalized 139 yards on 12 penalties. Penn was also set back with 113 penalty yards on seven penalties.

In the fourth quarter, the Cats scored twice within a three-minute span. An 89-yard drive culminated in a nine-yard touchdown run by junior fullback Craig Dunn. The Wildcats were forced back to their own 11-yard line on a clipping penalty from the Quaker's kickoff, but a 65-yard completion from freshman quarterback Kevin Ingram to Sydnor placed the Cats in scoring position. An illegal procedure penalty on the extra-point kick set the ball back five yards and Bushbeck's ensuing kick was low (his only missed extra-point conversion of the game).

Referring to Ingram's double-pump 65-yard pass, receiver Willie Sydnor commented that, "That's the longest pass I've seen in a while. I love to have those big catches, and Kevin (Ingram) put it right there." Coincidentally, that is the longest play from the line of scrimmage for the Cats so far this season.

On Nova's next possession, the Quaker's were penalized for roughing the kicker (punter Joe Borajkiewicz) and Villanova maintained possession of the ball, which was placed on the Penn 34-yard line. Three plays later, sophomore quarterback Dan Greene swept around the right end and ran the 31 yards needed for the Wildcats' final score. Bushbeck's extra-point kick was good, and the scoreboard read: Nova 34, Penn 3.

Head Coach Dick Bedesem, pleased with the Wildcats' victory, commented that, "Every win is big, but at 3-5 (Nova's record prior to the game), this is an especially big win, because it maintains the opportunity to still have a winning season.

"We adjusted our offense according to what they (Penn) were doing defensively," continued Bedesem, referring to Villanova's passing attack. "We looked at them on film and with that alignment, if the opportunity was there, we were going to take it."

Bedesem explained that Penn's defensive safety runs to the side of the pitch or handoff, leaving the center of the field open. "That's what happened on the long one to Robinson (38 yards and Nova's first touchdown)."

Regarding the effect, if any, that the suspensions of the four defensive linemen last week may have had on the team and their attitude going into the game, Bedesem remarked that, "The team as a whole possessed a strong, silent resolution. There was no false bravado, but a lot of ni emotion." He continues th "The offense was disappointed their showing last week, and they had to show that they c do even better. Defensively," plains Bedesem, "our defe coach, Lou Ferry, tried to hide tackles (the positions left by of the suspended players and fi by Mark Spencer and Randy C teon) and moved Joe Lucas fr noseguard to tackle."

Offensive guard John Liszka and runningback Milt Corsey block Penn's rushers from quarterback Pat O'Brien in the Cat's 34-3 rou

Soccer Suffers Closing Losses

By MIKE JACOBS

By losing their final two games of the season, Villanova's soccer team broke their 12-game winning streak and greatly hampered their chances at making post-season play. They lost to Penn 1-0 last Friday and were defeated by Drexel 2-0 on Monday. According to Head Coach Howard Graff, the loss to Penn virtually shut the team out of the NCAA playoffs, but Graff feels that the team still has a chance for the ECAC playoffs. The playoff teams are not determined solely by a comparison of regular season records, but by a committee vote on the teams deserving of the playoffs.

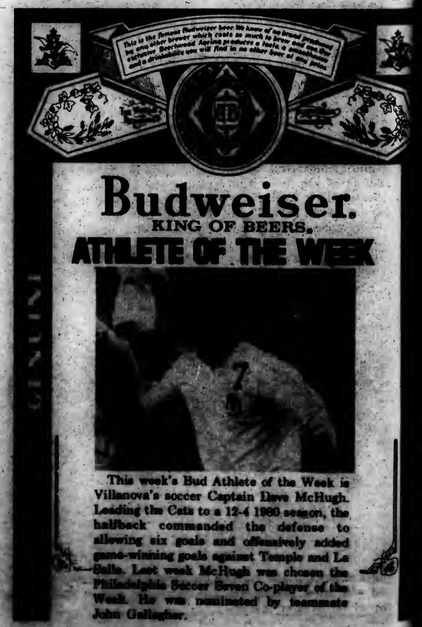
The final week of the season started out well for the team as they beat LaSalle 3-2 last Wednesday. That was the team's 12th straight victory and brought their record to 12-2. Senior Steve Frey was a big part in the game, scoring two goals. Dave McHugh, another senior, added the other goal. Sophomore goalkeeper Pete Jirak also had a fine game according to coach Graff.

Last Friday's game against Penn proved to be the pivotal point in the season. Coach Graff felt that a win would give Villanova a very good chance for making the NCAA playoffs, but they lost a 1-0 heartbreaker. The team did not play as well as Penn in the first half, but still came out of it with the score knotted at 0-0. They played a much better second half, but were scored upon in the middle of the half and could not come back to tie. Graff was pleased with the way the team played and said that Jirak had an outstanding game, but he obviously was not pleased with the final result.

The last regular season game was played Monday at Drexel with Villanova going down 2-0. Coach Graff felt that the team played poorly all-around, and said that they were having a letdown from the Penn game.

Although Coach Graff is disappointed with his team's la season performances, he is w pleased overall with the 19 season. The team finished regular season with a 12-4 rec the second best in the Big 7 to Textile, a perennial NC playoff qualifier. (The Big 7 made up of the Big 5 and Tex and Pharmacy.)

Villanova has a potential A American and a probable All-E player in Dave McHugh (an A East player in 1979), a possi All-East player in goalie P Jirak, and probable All-Big players in McHugh, Jirak Steve Frey. Graff also feels s some names for the future sophomores Brian Barr Ramon Garcia as well as Jim



This week's Bud Athlete of the Week is Villanova's soccer Captain Dave McHugh. Leading the Cats to a 12-4 1980 season, the halfback commanded the defense to allowing six goals and offensively added game-winning goals against Temple and La Salle. Last week McHugh was chosen the Philadelphia Soccer Seven Co-player of the Week. He was nominated by teammate John Gallagher.

Icecats Rebound Against Lehigh

By JIM FEMIA

After swallowing their first defeat of the season against Princeton on Friday night, the Villanova ice hockey team rebounded on Saturday to beat a strong Lehigh team, 4-1. A rematch between Lehigh and Villanova is scheduled for tomorrow, November 15 and should prove to be a hard-hitting, close-checking match.

The line of Chris Mancuso, "Killer" Whitaker and Frank Segreto proved to be the difference in the 4-1 victory on Saturday. Both Mancuso and Whitaker scored two goals while Segreto passed out three assists. The Cats broke on top half-way through period one when Mancuso tipped in a Paul Lafond slapshot but the lead was short lived however as Lehigh capitalized on a major error in the Icecat defensive zone and tied the game 1-1. It was then Whitaker's turn as he snuck a soft backhander through a crowd of sprawled defenders and the Icecats regained the lead 2-1.

After a scoreless second period the Icecats took control in period three. Mancuso gave the Cats a two goal lead before Whitaker put a lid on the victory, slapping home a 20-footer with 10 minutes left to play. Strong defensive play and a potent forechecking attack kept Lehigh bottled up in their own zone during the final minutes of the game, enabling the Icecats to win their fourth game of the season.

The game versus Lehigh tomorrow is scheduled to start at 11:30 a.m. at the Skatium in Havertown, Pa. The Icecats then return to league action when they take on West Chester State in successive games. On November 19 the Cats travel to West Chester State and on November 23 the Cats host State.

Nestle Opposed in Mall Rally

By BILL ROCK

The Peace and Justice Organi- sion on campus sponsored a eries of events on Wednesday, November 19, dealing with the oycott of the Nestle Company. The program was a part of Hunger wareness Week.

The supporters of the boycott laimed that Nestle, by the gressive marketing of its baby rmula in developing nations, has ntributed to the millions of ses of "baby bottle disease". his disease is characterized by arrhea, malnutrition, brain mage, and often death.

The events of the day included he showing of two films in the Connelly Center dealing with baby ottle disease. The films were shown several times throughout the day.

A rally of about 50 people was held in Kennedy Mall at noon. Father Ray Jackson, formerly of Villanova's Campus Ministry, was one of the speakers.

Jackson tried to explain the purpose of the boycott. "There are two underlying factors," he stated. "First, every human life has a right to be respected. Second, we are all brothers and sisters in God's family."

Jackson pointed out that Nestle is by far the largest seller of infant formula in the Third World, controlling nearly 50 percent of the market.

He explained that the problem was not with the product itself. "The formula is a good product, if it is used properly. The problem is that these people often must dilute the formula. In addition, many times they cannot read the instructions. Finally, they often don't have the means to boil the water properly."

Also speaking at the rally was Rev. Ralph R. Gonichelis, the Philadelphia director of the Infant Formula Action Coalition (INFACT).

Gonichelis charged that Nestle sends sales representatives dressed in white into hospitals. "Mothers believe these people are doctors or nurses, so when they push the formula, the mothers naturally believe them," he claimed.

Gonichelis said that Nestle makes $10.00 per second in the Third World on the sales of infant formula, and the "the only way to hurt them is in the pocketbook."

Both speakers emphasized the point that Nestle owns many subsidiary companies like Stouffers and the Rusty Scupper restaurant chain.

The rally was periodically interrupted by hecklers shouting and singing the Nestle jingle.

After the rally, four Villanova faculty members participated in a panel discussion on the issue. The panel members included Dr. Robert Langran and Dr. Joseph Thompson of the political science department, Dr. Nicholas Rongione of the business law department, and Dr. Daniel Regan of the philosophy department.

"Nestle feels that they have weathered the boycott," according to Langran. "They were invited to speak here and they declined. They are going to have to realize the issue isn't over.

Rongione pointed to another company involved in selling infant formula in Third World countries, the Abbott Corporation, as having responded to the problem in a way geared to prevent future troubles. He urged the same from Nestle'.

Thompson spoke of his experiences in Africa in 1977, and said that the problems is tied to the environment of these countries. "Companies like Nestle are going to have to realize the problem is much larger than one of infant formula," he stated.

Reagan stressed that the individual can do something. He said, "If you're not part of the solution, then you're part of the problem."

President Warns Of "Boycott Fever"

By BILL CLARK

"We must be hesitant to atch the boycott fever," said enry Amoroso, student body resident. "Certain groups on ampus have done an excellent b in giving us the facts gainst Nestle but we have ot heard Nestle, response."

Commenting on the proposed estle boycott by Villanova, moroso feels we must be areful before we act.

"I don't claim that Nestle is e of duty and they are acting ithin a completely respon- ible framework within the hird World, but we should not ke action now because we do ot know all the facts," said moroso.

According to Amoroso, Ed Frantz, vice-president of Stouffers and a Nestle representative for the boycott, is willing to speak at Villanova to present Nestle case.

"According to Nestle they have admitted that breast feeding is better than their formula. But, in certain cases, breast feeding is impossible."

"Nestle has admitted that there was a problem with its actions, but it has confronted that problem. They have stopped advertising their product in the Third World," said Amoroso.

"Nestle feels that they should not be blamed for impurities in the water. They also desire to present in simple terms the dilution technique for their formula," said Amoroso.

"I oppose the bottle-baby film that is being shown on campus. The film is five years old, and since then a lot has changed."

Amoroso also pointed out that other groups have not joined in the boycott of Nestle. "The Archdioceses of Cincinnati does not plan to join the boycott because they feel Nestle has responded to the allegations before it and that many of the charges are unjustified.

Minority Increase Urged

By MARIANNE LAVELLE and BILL CLARK

According to several investigative groups, Villanova needs to take action to increase minority representation in University activities and programs.

A report submitted to the University Senate by the Social Action Committee in March 1979 showed that only 2.5% of Villanova's student body were either black, Oriental, or Hispanic. The national average percentage for enrollment of black students alone was 11% in 1977 according to the report.

The recent Middle States Association evaluation also pointed to Villanova's failure to attract minority students. "The Villanova record on enrolling representatives of minority groups, particularly blacks, is not good especially considering the metropolitan area in which the university is located," said the report.

"We believe that one reason for the deficiency in this area," the report continued, "is the unfortunate identification of minority students as academically disadvantaged students."

The Social Action Committee report made several recommendations for the upgrading of minority programs, some of which have been carried out.

For example, it suggested that the University "hire a black or other minority member as an admissions officer who will specialize in recruiting minority members in Philadelphia and other places."

The University subsequently hired an admissions officer who met the criteria, Barron Perry.

According to Edward Collymore, director of the University's Social Action Office, Rev. John O'Rourke from the Speech Communications department is in charge of minority recruitment in the Admissions Office.

Collymore suggested that the job is too difficult for a faculty member to handle. "Our office has been doing a lot of recruiting. If we don't, no one will," said Collymore.

Collymore said that the University has failed to follow through on several other recommendations from the Social Action Committee.

The report recommended, for example, that the administration hire more minority members in key positions, especially faculty.

"Out of approximately five hundred faculty members, only two are black, and blacks occupy only three out of several hundred administrative positions," said Collymore.

"We have a procedure for attempting to recruit minorities and women," said Collymore, "but realistically, having the guidelines and going through the motions does not mean we're going to increase the population a lot."

"It sounds like we're doing a lot, but actually we aren't," added Collymore.

Another report recommendation was that the Development Office "give more attention to finding funds for supporting minority students."

Collymore said that the Development Office counts the Act 101 federal grant for tutoring minority students as satisfying that recommendation.

The Development Office has also received grants from Chilton Publishing Company for minority

Irish Drama

A lecture entitled "Drama in Ireland Today" will be given in Vasey Theatre at 2:30 p.m. Friday, Nov. 21 by Phyllis Ryan. Phyllis Ryan is the artistic director of Gemini Productions in Dublin. She began acting as a child at the Abbey Theatre School and was a member of the Abbey company from age 16 to 21. She has played in radio, television and films, and had acted with every important Dublin theatre group. In 1959, when she became a theatre producer and co-founded Gemini with Norman Rodway.

Since its beginning, Gemini has staged over 180 classical and modern plays, chiefly in Ireland, but also in England and the U.S. Ryan is especially dedicated to premiering the work of contemporary artists. It was because of this interest and because of a desire to advance a wider view of what theatre could be that she moved into producing. She is one of the most important women in Irish theatre today, if not the most important.

Grad Elected Attorney General

By KATHY SCANLON

Leroy Zimmerman, a 1956 Villanova graduate, was elected attorney general of Pennsylvania.

Upon graduation from Villanova, Zimmerman attended Dickinson Law School. Throughout his life, he has been heavily involved in all phases of law enforcement. Zimmerman was District Attorney of Dauphin County for 15 years. He completed his last term as District Attorney this past Januray 7 and was then able to devote his full energies toward his campaign.

Zimmermann has been offered two judgeship appointments but has turned them down in favor of the more active position of Attorney General. According to Zimmerman's press secretary, Patrick Boyle, "Zimmerman chose to run because he felt he could deal more directly with problems in law enforcement by becoming Attorney General than by taking a seat on the bench."

Boyle explained that prior to 1978, the Attorney General was appointed by the State government. An amendment was passed in 1978 which stated that the Attorney General should be elected by the people. This made it possibly for Zimmerman to run.

Zimmerman defeated his opponent, state Senator Michael O'Pake, a Democrat from Reading, Pa., by more than 113,000 votes.

During his four year term of office, Zimmerman's plans include aggressively pursuing sources of corruption on the state level of government, beefing up efforts against the effects of organized crime, and exposing fraudulent business practices.

Zimmerman's overall goal is to be the state's first spokesman for law enforcement and to work with county detectives and the district attorneys, among others, in a close partnership that will produce the desired results.

Zimmerman is now going through an extensive series of meetings for transition to the office. He will be officially sworn in on January 20, 1981.

Leroy Zimmerman, Pennsylvania Attorney General-elect.

LCB to Review License

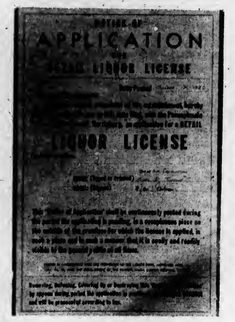
By ANNE SUYDAM

Villanova's application for a liquor license, which would allow for the sales of beer, wine and liquor, is being considered by Pennsylvania's Liquor Control Board.

Norma Murphy, a representative of the LCB, is compiling a report which will be reviewed by the board in Harrisburg. The board makes the final decision, based solely on Murphy's report, which therefore must be quite specific. There are certain requirements that must be fulfilled by the establishment making the application. The restaurant must have a proper health permit, the facilities have to seat and feed at least 30 people, and it cannot be within 500 feet of a restrictive institution, such as the chapel.

There is no specific time limit because the process is a long one. Murphy must interview Rev. John Deegan, vice president for student life, Marc Tuchman, secretary of the Belle Air Corporation, other members of the corporation, as well as any persons who might have complaints about the sale of liquor at the Connelly Center.

If the license is approved, the restaurant has to follow the LCB rules. If Sunday sales are requested, a special permit must be obtained. An amusement permit is required if any type of entertainment is performed. The establishment must close at two o'clock a.m. and no sales may be made to minors.



The rules the University places on the students with regard to liquior comsumption will have no affect on Murphy's report. She is a 1976 graduate of of Villanova and said, "probably me out of anybody else in this office is the most objective because of my experiences at Villanova."

The license is a double-transfer which means that an establishment is transferring its license to the Belle Air Corporation. The restaurant which placed the downpayment on the license, the "Achilles Violas," is no longer in business.

Murphy is starting her investigation this week

VILLANOVAN Places Second

The Villanovan, newspaper of record for Villanova University received a second place rating in the Columbia Scholastic Press Association contest/critique sponsored by Columbia University.

The nationwide contest, which judges college newspapers on content, coverage, writing, editing, design, and display, accepted entries from nearly 100 publications, including the University of Pennsylvania's Daily Pennsylvanian, and Rutgers University's newspaper.

All 150 judges of the contest, who came from around the country, were required to have been scholastic newspaper instructors for over 10 years. The Villanovan submitted three issues from the Spring Semester to the Contest: the March 28 issue (lead story: Flooding Closes Tunnel), the April 18 issue (lead story: President Orders Appointment), and the April 25 issue (lead story: Bush Visit Stirs Campus).

The CSPA is the nation's largest school and college press organization sponsored by a major private university. Membership for 1979-80 totalled 2,725 publications, including about 10 percent college and about 10 percent junior high schools.

Columbia University, noted for its journalism department, founded the organization to train student editors through educational seminars, critical evaluations of their publications, and annual competitions.

Farewell, Lavelle!

Editor's Note: We would like to thank all those who helped make this a memorable surprise to our ex-editor Marianne Lavelle.

We've always said that Marianne demands no respect and gets none. This only proves it. The following piece was written by Terry O'Toole, editor emeritus. Anyway Mare, in your own immortal words "we wouldn't make fun of you if we didn't like you." This one's for you, Mimi!

By TERRENCE O'TOOLE, '80

Max Perkins, perhaps America's most famous literary editor and guru of Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Thomas Wolfe and others, said that an editor "at best serves as a handmaiden to an author. Don't ever get to feeling important about yourself because an editor at most releases energy. He creates nothing."

Perkins' statement certainly holds true for Marianne Lavelle, the outgoing editor-in-chief of The Villanovan, who publishes her last issue today. As the photographs accompanying this article clearly show, Lavelle was a handmaiden not only to authors but to politicians, politicians' sons, radio personalities and a host of others as well. She certainly never felt important about herself, evidenced by her insistence on wearing the same pair of Calvin's for weeks at a time. And as for her creativity; well, anyone who runs the same old "Accuracy, Relevancy, and Responsibility in Media" editorial every semester cannot sit around waiting for the Pulitzer to roll in.

Despite all that, it has been a pleasure to know Marianne for the past four years and watch her evolution from a high school newspaper editor from somewhere in the mountains north of Allentown to an emerging young journalist with both knowledge of, and enthusiasm for, that profession. The Villanovan once almost lost Marianne to WKVU when we foolishly didn't promote her to a position of importance. But with a few lies and promises we lured her back much to the paper's, and Marianne's, good fortune.

When elected editor-in-chief last year, Marianne took the job with vigor and serious dedication (The Big Mistake). She sought both to improve the quality of the paper and of life at Villanova in general. Her success in the first goal is evident; her success in the second is harder to measure. There is little doubt, however, as to Marianne's talents as a journalist and her powers of intellect.

With some faith and perseverance, she can certainly achieve eminence in her field.

Then again, she could also end up as moderator of The Villanovan.

Senate Meeting This Afternoon

The University Senate will hold its next meeting in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall on Friday afternoon, November 21, 1980, at 4:00 p.m.

Senator Henry Amoroso plans to submit a motion at this meeting. The motion states that the Student Body President should be permitted annually to address the Board of Trustees at its spring meeting. At that time the Student Body President would present to the Board a statement of major student body concerns.

At next Friday's meeting, there will be a resolution commending the distinguished Senate service of Dean Charles P. Bruderle. The evaluation of the Rules and Review Committee by the Executive Committee will also be distributed.

Senator Clay plans to submit the report of the Senate Budget Committee at that time.

There will also be an explanation of the status of the Ad Hoc Committee to evaluate the present course and teacher evaluation policy.

According to Amoroso, his motion is aimed at improving communication. "The Middle States Evaluation said that one of our aims must be to enhance communication," Amoroso stated. "A similar motion was passed a few years ago but the Board rejected it. We want to make it clear this is not an invasion of the Board's privacy, but an effort to communicate student needs and problems."

"I see this as a very, very necessary step to improve communication here at Villanova," Amoroso concluded.

Increase

students totaling about one thousand dollars per year for the last two years.

Commenting on this, Collymore said "you can't do an awful lot with just one thousand dollars."

The Social Action Committee report had suggested the administration set some definite goals, "perhaps that of doubling the minority student population at Villanova within the next five years."

"To my knowledge, no set goals have been documented as policy," said Collymore.

The report also recommended initating programs which might bring more minority students to Villanova. Collymore noted two such programs.

One program, sponsored by Dr. James Cleary, vice-president for academic affairs, brings students from Overbrook High School to Villanova during the summer to take pre-college English courses. This program is in its second year.

Another program sponsored by the Engineering department brings minority students who are going into the twelfth grade to Villanova for six weeks during the summer to study science. This program is in its third year.

"I think the Engineering department is attempting to get minority students," commented Collymore.

Evaluation of University Mixed

By BILL CLARK

A report by the Middle States Association evaluating Villanova University has been released to the public. The report was the result of a self-study program by the University and a visit by an evaluating team on March 30-April 2.

The report concentrated on several aspects of Villanova, including the College of Arts and Sciences, the faculty, student life, and University relations.

The report commented favorably on Villanova's academic programs. "The University is marked by excellent leadership in the undergraduate programs of its College of Arts and Sciences, and by careful planning," said the report.

The evaluating group, however, felt that the college should review its core curriculum. It said that due to its long duration, the University had lost touch with its meaning.

"A review of the core curriculum could result in its reaffirmation or its reaffirmation with certain modifications but the process through which the College would thereby rediscover its purpose, would, we believe, be especially helpful," said the report.

The Committee also commented on the inequity of requirements for different majors. They felt that students should not be forced to take as many as twenty-two credits each semester to fulfill academic requirements.

The Middle States Association was impressed with the faculty at Villanova. In particular, the report commented on the percentage of faculty with doctorates.

The Committee suggested that Villanova raise its requirements for tenure, but lower its requirements for promotion. They also felt that the University should develop long-term faculty planning.

In particular, the report commented on the low number of minority faculty members. It suggested an affirmative action plan for faculty hiring.

The report also criticized the University's inability to attract and retain minority students, especially being located in the Philadelphia metropolitan area.

"If one inquires how you go about recruiting academically well-qualified black and other minority students in competition with other schools, one can simply point to the model followed in the successful recruitment of desired quality athletes."

The report urged the University to develop plans for its student enrollment in the future. "The University must decide on the number of residential students it plans to have in the years to come and then plan both its admissions and recruitment program as well as its dorm rehabilitation and possibly dorm construction around that plan," it said. "An undue delay in that decision may result in frustrations and wasted efforts."

Commenting on Villanova University Relations operation, the report said "there are obvious needs for additional space and some additional personnel. The decision to add a person to concentrate on government sources in the right direction and it may be necessary to add a writer to the staff who could focus on the writing of proposals."

Inventory to Be Taken

By DREW MERRICK

Villanova's maintenance department is taking an inventory of the university's entire collection of capital equipment.

The purpose of this inventory is to determine how much money should be spent by the University to repair any damages to the capital equipment due to deterioration or vandalism. The inventory will be completed by January 1, 1981.

Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, and in charge of the inventory project, cannot, at this time, make any estimations as to the amount of money needed to repair the capital equipment.

"Because we still have to examine and evaluate every piece of equipment or property owned by Villanova on this campus, so much work needs to be done that I cannot at this time make any estimations. Though by my random observations this month I predict the amount will be very high. The fieldhouse, stadium, dorms, classrooms and the Connelly Center all have to examined and evaluated. We started the inventory at the beginning of the semester, but we'll be hard pressed to complete it by January 1, 1981. It's important to realize that we're not taking the inventory to decide what improvements can be made to the University's capital equipment, but rather how to bring it back to its original condition," Trucks stated.

Trucks plans to hire as many Villanova graduates in the area as possible to help out. "I prefer to hire Villanova graduates because they're already familiar with the campus, and exhibit much more pride in their work than outsiders."

Prison Reform Lecture Held

By CAROL ALKONS

Thomas J. Higgins spoke on "Prison Conditions: The Responsibilities of the Legal Profession" at the Villanova Pre-Law Society meeting Tuesday night.

Higgins is the director of Volunteer Attorney Service Teams (VAST), a national award-winning attorney service presently operating only in New York, and a member of the Criminal Justice Advisory Commission for the New York State Catholic Conference.

Higgins began by stating that in order for those in the legal profession to improve the penal system, "a different outlook is needed. We must become aware of the fundamental cause of crime: poverty. Statistics show that a person born into a low income family has twice the chance of going to prison as one from a middle or high income family.

"This person is not born bad, but his poverty influences him to resort to illegal means of obtaining what he wants or needs. Criminals are not born; they are made," said Higgins.

"The criminal justice system is the largest industry in the U.S.; $480 billion is spent annually in criminal processing. How then do we end up with riotous situations in prisons? Why will 70% people in jail wind up back in What do jails do for the people?" Higgins continued.

Higgins pointed out that present penal system only d the real problem of dealing those guilty of criminal offense the world outside of jail. "The no advantage in keeping some in prison for over five years than for punishment — that i keep him apart from his fa etc. An increased penalty does change anything because not is actively done to rehabilitate educate the prisoner so that can deal with soceity in way has never done before. The thing a prisoner gets out of sentence is a buildup frustration."

After the lecture, Pat O'Neill, president of the Pre Society, stated that "it is fairly vious that the penal system not work like it should — for ample, rehabilitation is fairly existent. People in law are in position to change the system. invited Mr. Higgins to incre our awareness of what the en system contains and what lawyer's role in the crim justice system is. We are ple that he came."

Hunger Awareness Observed

By KIETRYN ZYCHAL

The purpose of "Hunger Awareness Week," sponsored by the Campus Ministry, is to bring Villanova students closer to the problem of world hunger.

This week's activities were under the direction of Rev. Cedric Wilson, O.S.A., and student coordinators Patty Rejan and Jeff Kirchner. The week was meant to educate people about world hunger and the individuals responsibility to act upon it.

In an official statement, Father President Driscoll asked the Villanova community to "support the program of self-education and remedial action provided by Hunger Awareness Week."

One purpose of the week was an attempt to alleviate the problem of world hunger. Events geared toward this were a baby food drive (the proceeds will be donated in the Philadelphia area), Monday's "Run for Hunger," Thursday's coffee house, and a letter writing campaign.

Representatives from Campus Ministry have also been in the dining halls encouraging people to participate in a fast from lunch on Thursday, November 20. Campus Ministry will receive one dollar for each person to sign up for the fast.

To show the proportion of wasted food at Villanova, all the food thrown away at Thursday's dinner in Dougherty Hall was measured.

Hunger Awareness Week also attempted to expose the supposed exploitations of Nestle Corporation in Third World countries. On Wednesday, the program specifically concentrated on Nestle's actions as a contributor to the world hunger problem.

Campus Ministry sponsored various films and a panel discussion on the issue. The group believes because Nestle is a foreign corporation (based in Switzerland), the only effective measure against Nestle is a boycott of its products.

Stouffers Corporation and the Rusty Scupper Restaurant are also owned by the Nestles Corporation.

The Campus Ministry emphasized that the problem of world hunger deserves more attention than just one week's worth of activities. "Peace and Justice" courses dealing with social issues of this sort are offered by the University.

The "Run for Hunger" began in front of Falvey Library. Each runner obtained sponsors who donated a certain amount for each mile run.

On Wednesday afternoon, Campus Ministry sponsored a rally in Kennedy Mall to protest the actions of Nestle Corporation. The group is trying to get Villanova to boycott Nestle products.

President

refused to support the boycott," said Amoroso.

"The United Nations put out a set of guidelines for Nestle, and these groups feel that Nestle has complied with the guidelines."

"The original motion to boycott Nestle was brought to the Senate by Father Deegan," Amoroso added. "The motion is presently in the Student Life Committee, but it is being turned over to the Social Action Committee."

Amoroso hoped that the Senate would investigate the boycott motion thoroughly. "A boycott right now would be ill-advised because we should not lend ourselves to action unless we are positively sure of ourselves. When all sides of the story are obtained, then we'll decide."

Had We Space Enough, And Time

So here I am, in the middle way, having had twenty years . . .
Trying to learn to use words, and every attempt
Is a wholly new start, and a different kind of failure . . .

T.S. Eliot
East Coker

A journalist learns, as soon as he moves beyond the realm of police reporting, that his medium, which prides itself on its precision, brevity, and accuracy, is often inadequate, imprecise, vague.

When he writes of tragedy in the journalistic short sentences and short paragraphs he must use, he is called brusque and unfeeling. Each time he quotes someone, he suffers criticism for taking a quotation "out-of-context". And any journalist who has reflected on it knows that there is no space in these five columns to present the complex scheme of things which backgrounds every story.

Often, a newspaper reporter will write the true story, as closely and as accurately as he can, and the editor will find that it does not fit in — so he'll chop it, and drop it, onto the printing room floor. Perhaps he'll drop just a paragraph, but it might be the paragraph the writer worked on all night, styling it just so, hoping to make it contain some truth, some essence of what the story was all about. Now cut, and finally, dropped. Some say that newspaper editing is arbitrary and capricious. It is sad, too.

No space, most of all, there is not enough space. We can quote a faculty member making a motion on the Senate floor, for example, but we can't tell why he does it, what he has suffered, what he has seen his students suffer. We can't tell why he believes that things must change. Not in this medium, which was meant for reporting facts, not truth.

As we end our year of reporting what we feel students at Villanova ought to know, these things become utterly, and inalterably clear. Finally, so many stories will never be told.

One story still troubles me, but that story could not be contained in these pages, even if there were still time.

It is a story that has to do with young men and women who spend hours of their college life on the telephone, ringing numbers that never answer, listening to receivers slam, accepting angry criticisms of their writing and their personal characters by people who don't even know their names. This small group of students listen to their classmates complain of having to write three papers a semester, when they must write and rewrite four or five stories a week. On Friday, they watch their classmates take to the bars, but are too innundated with work, and too tired from the day on the telephone to join them.

I have seen one of these students spend weeks writing and researching a story; I have seen him spend nights without sleep worrying if the story were right . . . only to be called reckless and uncaring when his work was finally printed.

I have seen two people of quite different and opposing temperments work three days and nights piecing together a complicated story into a unified whole, only to be criticized the next day because the story was too long.

But what makes this an important story, and one that will never be found within these pages, no, not here, is that the undeserved criticism and carping is accepted by them, and they continue to write and to print the little bit of truth they can, because they believe in their heart of hearts that it needs to be done. And only by working with these people could you understand that this is not a story of arrogance. It is a story of self-sacrifice.

So much good comes from the work these people do and their relationships with each other, yet so little of this is realized by those who read this newspaper every week. This story is one that I wish I could tell now, if it were the last thing that I wrote.

Goodbye, From The Business Side

It seems funny for me in the Business department to be worrying over a deadline for copy. For the past three years I have watched my colleagues slaving over the editorial page and the sections wondering what is going through their minds. Fear has many aspects, but the most horrible is sitting and looking at that piece of paper in the typewriter and not having the faintest idea in your mind what to write when you have your chance to say goodbye.

I could describe the hard times that we had on Tuesday night, trying to fit stories onto layout pages only to have them not work on Thursday at the printers. But my experience was with ads that were placed on the page safe and secure knowing others have to work around you.

The satisfaction of writing a grammatically correct, perfectly structured story must be immense. Yet I didn't worship a thesaurus, I prayed over a ledger. Periods and commas gave way to dollars and cents. The sad realization occurred to me that Pulitzer prizes are never given out to the paper with the best layout or largest profit margin.

If there's one thing that you do realize is the potential that a paper can have. It is only a collection of people, but they are of a different cut. They are willing to give up their time, effort and patience for minimal rewards and (in our case) great risks. Was it worth it? I think so, only for the opportunity to watch the coherence of a staff being formed, and the newspaper being strengthened. To those of you who I had the honor of working with, thank you. Your opinions while not always solicited were always helpful. Marianne, while we didn't always agree on the fine points of running a paper, we had the same goals essentially and somehow always managed to reach them.

I guess it's time to move on. I've delayed thinking about the real world long enough, and now its beckoning me.

Politics, Abortion

To the Editor:

The ultimate goal of those who oppose a woman's right to terminate a pregnancy is to amend the U.S. Constitution prohibiting abortions altogether. For years, a movement has been growing which calls for a Constitutional Convention for passage of a "human life" amendment, one version states in part, that, "every human being . . . shall be deemed from the moment of fertilization to be a person and entitled to the right to life." (Ronald Reagan, incidentally, is a staunch supporter of this amendment). There is no agreement among religious denominations as to when meaningful human life begins. To place into the Constitution one theological definition concerning the beginning of life would compel every woman and every family to accept that doctrine. This is a clear violation of the First Amendment. Furthermore, a "human life" amendment which protected the fetus from the moment of conception would no doubt prohibit the use of the two safest and most effective contraceptives. Both the IUD and birth control pill sometimes prevent implantation of a fertilized ovum — which under the amendment would be considered a person.

My belief in the sanctity of human life makes me reluctant to approve abortion. But I am equally bound to respect the sacredness of the life and well-being of the woman, for whom devastating damage may result from an unacceptable pregnancy — the older woman; the poor woman; the woman who is carrying a diseased fetus; the girl or woman who is pregnant thru rape or incest.

Those who are concerned about the preservation of religious freedom, the quality of life for families and the health and well-being of women will have to increase their vigilance and their involvement with the struggle to preserve a woman's right to choose safe and legal abortion.

Review Board

Dear Editor:

I would like to take a moment to compliment WGC on the fine editorial in last week's Villanovan (Nov. 14, 1980) entitled "Review Board System Questioned." This editorial pinpoints the suspension problem concerning the four football players perfectly.

The administration is trying to make an example out of the football players! They probably feel if they can show the student body that two football players can be suspended then any student can be. When the girls who hosted the party went to talk to Tony Martin (Dean of Men) about the incident he told them he did not know what could be done about the incident since it was off-campus. When the girls did not file a report, he actually pursued the matter and called them back about it! Doesn't this show a little bit of eagerness on Mr. Martin's part?

The two accounts given by each side were so unbelievably different that it had to be difficult for the Review Board to come to any sort of conclusion. It seems as though the administration wanted to believe one side all along and never even gave the other side a fair chance to respond. Didn't Paul Phillippy's bleeding face have any merit? Continuing with the girls' story they claimed that they looked out of the bedroom window and saw about fifteen or twenty people standing in the courtyard with clubs and bats, but when the police arrived everyone scattered. If indeed there were people armed with clubs and bats wouldn't the police have searched the area and found the weapons? The police already had a car near the apartments when the four football players returned, yet the girls maintained that there were fifteen or twenty people in the courtyard with clubs and bats.

Miss Wampler stated that she and her friends were used as pawns by the administration to set an example, but were they really the ones that were used by the administration? Obviously the football players were the ones that were used by the administration! Miss Wampler's response lacked any kind of reasonable consistency. She said that she and her roommates wanted certain reparations, namely a letter of explanation to their landlord, but then she actually had the audacity to say that the players had a fair trial! I take exception to that, the players were not even apprised of what they were being charged with!

If the charges (which were fighting, endangering the safety of others, the deliberately destroying and damaging the property of others) were really true wouldn't the Lower Merion Police Department have taken action against the players? Rev. John Deegan, OSA (vice-president for Student Life) was quoted in the Villanovan as saying, "We have to react only to charges brought to our attention. We cannot go on heresay." This is exactly what the administration has done, they are relying on heresay! It is one side's word against the other and in this case the administration has chosen to believe one particular side because that is the one they wanted to believe all along!

Reagan and Issues

To the Editor:

I am distressed by the way articles such as "Nation Accepts Zealous Innovator" by John M. Chott, Managing Editor of the Villanovan appear. Mr. Chott is apparently an able journalist but I resent the fact of his inferring that Mr. Reagan received such a clear mandate from the American people. Presenting Ronald Reagon in such a favorable light while slandering the President by not mentioning any of his good achievements is a gross injustice that a paper which dedicates itself to high standards of journalism should admonish. A person's soul is troubled with the neglection of such vital issues as: health care, Social Security, the dangers of nuclear power, environment, aid for education, and the potential curbing of the Department of Education. How is it that Mr. Chott can give use to such terminology of Mr. Reagon as a "Zealous Innovator" without mentioning Reagan's stance on one of these things? The Villanovan has a responsiblity to its constituents to at least also inform readers of Mr. Reagan's stance on these issues. What is the President-Elect's position on them? Mr. Reagan clearly rejects Mr. Carter's proposal of a National Health Care Program which Senator Kennedy has worked so hard for. Medical expenses are so high that many people can not afford adequate health care. The very day that Mr. Chott's article was published Peagan's transition team proposed that Social Security benefits should be pushed back to the age of 67, something that is so politically dangerous Mr. Reagan will not act on,but his close advisors have mentioned it! It is evident what Mr. Reagan's stance on nuclear power, protection of the environment, and the Department of Education are. Ronald Reagan received barely over 50% of the vote by the American people, regardless of the Electoral College. Some people are concerned about the consequences of a Reagan Presidency, and we don't like the big business era.

Sincerely,
Douglas Earl

R.A. Complaint

To the Editor:

Could someone please tell me what an R.A.'s job is around here? To the best of my knowledge, an R.A. is a resident assistant, there to help out residents with problems whether social, academic, or emotional. He is also a school representative, paid by Villanova to uphold school rules and regulations and therefore punish people who break these rules. To me this is what an R.A. stands for and for the most part, this is the case. But, as always there are a few of these bold men who feel the need to go above and beyond this call of duty.

Saturday night I was on the 3rd floor of Sullivan Hall visiting some friends. I walked down the hall at about 1:00 in the morning to look for a pack of matches. Some guys were hanging out in the hall so I approached them. As I walked away one of them stopped me and asked my name. Not an unusual request, I answered. The man in question turned out to be an R.A. from another wing. He asked my room number and who my R.A. was but his line of questioning from that point on was ridiculous. He asked me what I thought of my R.A. and of other R.A.'s. He wanted to know if I was in the Quad the night the Phillies won the World Series. He said he remembered me from that night and that I swore at him in terms that cannot be printed here. I admitted to being in the Quad that night, but denied the accusation. I asked why I was being questioned; I had done nothing to him, I barely remember seeing him that night in the Quad. He merely stated that he was an R.A. and that he had the right to question anyone. He then demanded to see my student I.D. and when I refused he threatened to write me up for not cooperating with him. Maybe I was wrong, but I felt I had done nothing wrong and this was an unnecessary request. Again, he said he had this right because he was an R.A.

In my last letter to The Villanovan, "Quad Incident," I suggested that the R.A.'s were tougher on students this year because the Administration was being tougher on them. This kind of harassment goes beyond mere pressure from the Administration. This man is obviously using (or abusing) his authority as an R.A. to bust my chops. I know this is not the first time this has happened to students, either. Now I ask this guy, "Who the hell do you think you are?" As far as I'm concerned, the president of the school doesn't have the right to ask what I think of an R.A., or of anyone for that matter. I'm sorry, but I think it is totally unfair for students to pay close to $7,000 to live on campus and be subject to this kind of treatment. It's guys like him that give the fair R.A.'s a bad name.

Most of the R.A.'s at Villanova are students, some graduate, some undergraduate, they are our peers, and it's sickening to see someone take a little power and let it go straight to their head. I hate it when someone thinks that just because he's an R.A., he can go anywhere on campus he pleases, and harass anyone he wants. If this is the case, this guy has a serious head problem. The way I see it, we are both students, we may possibly have the same classes, therefore we are equals. The fact that he is an R.A. means he enforces school policies, and punishes those who break them: I did nothing wrong that night, and feel he was totally out of line with his questions. Should this continue to happen, serious problems could arise, which could only prove detrimental to all concerned.

A Modest Proposal

Dear Editor and Fellow Students,

The first organizational meeting of the Committee to Move Villanova Across the Boarder took place late Saturday night in the confines of Sullivan Hall. At this first meeting we have decided that we must open our views to the entire student body. We the members of this growing organization are planning to propose the following resolution to the Board of Trustees of Villanova University.

We would like to see the whole two hundred acre campus physically moved from Villanova, Pennsylvania to a "real state," such as New York or New Jersey. Ultimately we would like to move the campus to beautiful upstate New York in the majestic Finger Lakes region. The committee has chosen Lake Seneca as our first choice, although any of the five will do.

One of the many factors that have played an important role in our decision is, the close proximity of other institutions of higher learning, such as, Cornell, Ithaca, and Cortland State. These colleges, in a state with a "Real Drinking Age," will provide numerous social options to the presently stagnant social scene at Villanova. Another advantage is that, we feel having the beautiful Finger Lakes at our backs, will be much more conducive to a healthy academic and social atmosphere, than the thunderous roar of the Paoli Local.

We would be delighted to hear what you, the student body, have to say about our proposal. To contact any member of Move Villanova Across the Boarder, just look for the people with their suitcases packed and ready to go.

Sincerely yours,
Head of Publicity
Robert Siegelmilch
and fellow members of M.V.A.B.

Tree Lighting

To the Editor:

Every college has its unique, individual traditions that are handed down from one class to the next by word of mouth or by example that becomes an inherited pattern of thought or action.

Whether it be a frat or sorority or some social-service organization, each one has as its backbone the tradition of those who have gone before them. And while it is true that no group should forfeit totally their own creativity for the sake of the past, things just wouldn't be the same if certain events were not carried out in the pre-ordained manner.

For example, the annual Christmas tree lighting ceremony during final examinations period. For years now the event has been something that has been looked forward to by students and faculty alike. In the hustle of preparations for finals, the ceremony provides a refreshing break and a chance to join in expressing the joy of the holiday season — right there in Kennedy Mall amidst the majestic pines, the cool, fresh air echoing the music of the merry carolers.

Lurking amid the 138-year-old campus is a recently established Ebeneezer Scrooge known as the Connelly Center which threatens to end the tradition which the Mall has enjoyed for years.

Since the completion of the new Center in Spring 1980, the administration has jumped at every possible chance to make it a new "home" replacing the traditional settings of the past.

Perhaps they have jumped too quickly this time. Have they considered their space limitations for such an event? Where will they place a tree for the lighting? What will they do with the band, the dancing carolers and the one-hundred-plus students that gather round annually for this Villanova tradition? Practicality favors the Villanova tradition on the Mall and even Ebeneezer was a practical man.

And have they considered the fact that to move the event indoors would take away from the overall beauty which the outdoor lighting provides? Does the administration want to utilize the new University Center at the expense of damaging the holiday spirit that is so needed by the students during this time of finals? And what about the effects that such a radical change to a Villanova custom would have on the joy of the holiday season that permeates the winter air at the annual Kennedy Mall celebration?

Perhaps the administration should make a closer examination of the possible effects that such a change would promote, before "bah-humbugging" an integral part of Villanova tradition during this Christian holiday season.

Jim Dimmitt

Good Luck

Dear Villanovan:

The Student Government would like to thank the Villanovan staff, and in particular, its Editor-in-chief, Marianne Lavelle for a job well done.

The staff has not only continued to upgrade the Villanovan in totality, but also strived to restore it as the paramount vehicle of communication among the administration, alumni, parents and students.

It is our hope that their successors will be persistent in furthering such efforts.

On behalf of myself and the Student Government, I wish the entire staff the best of luck in the future!

Respectfully,
Louis Casari
Caucus Chairman

Gordon Liddy And Power

By MARYANN MOON

When I walked up the steps of the Fieldhouse on November 6, 1980 to hear G. Gordon Liddy I saw students holding a giant sign that read "Amoral Crooks Belong In Jail — Not On Christian Campuses" while they were chanting "Don't feed the Rat!!!" The opinion of these students should be respected, yet their argument has flaws. By the very fact that we call ourselves a "Christian Campus," G. Gordon Liddy's appearance can be defended in two ways: As a true Christian community we should practice forgiveness and as a true learning institution we should always remain open-minded. That does not mean we must agree with what is said, yet we certainly should not close our minds to it. John Milton expresses the attitude of open-mindedness in his attack against censorship, the "Aeropagitica," when he says: "I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary . . ." Well, despite protests, seven-hundred people sallied out that night to hear G. Gordon Liddy. Whether or not each was exercising his virtue is unknown since I cannot speak for six-hundred and ninety-nine of the people.

G. Gordon Liddy's personality could almost be termed overwhelming but it is more accurate to say he is intoxicating. Because he spoke with a style reflective of a brilliant mind, with facts and allusions pouring out of his mouth at an unrelenting pace, and his compsure seemed beyond confidence, his presence could cause emotional dizziness. His opinions and outlooks could seep through one's skin and go straight to the head. Yet, as is true of any intoxicant, he is most definitely a depressant.

When Mr. Liddy was on stage accusing Americans of living in a world of euphemisms, of believing in the Easter Bunny and of wholeheartedly living under the illusion that "JAWS" is "CHARLIE THE TUNA," I pictured in my head a scene from Thomas Pynchon's book, The Crying of Lot 49. Dr. Hilarious a character, says of fantasy:

> Cherish it! . . . What else do any of you have? Hold it tightly by its little tentacle, don't let the Freudians coax it away or the pharmacists poison it out of you. Whatever it is, hold it dear, for when you lose it you go over that much to the others. You begin to cease to be.

Despite the fact that Liddy's cry was to shed illusions out of defense of our lives whereas the novelist's plea was to cherish them in desperation, each seems to believe that we will cease to be without them. If the illusions are a belief in the potential goodness of mankind, the idea of the Ten Commandments, or the belief in God then this observation is frightfully accurate. Many would cease to even WANT to be without them.

To accept Mr. Liddy's narrow view of life is to become as infatuated with the idea of power as he is. It was clear to me that some invisible tumor in the core of Liddy feeds on the concept of power. He spoke of Napoleon, Stalin, Hoover, and Reagan. In an off-handed comment he stated that the Russians had a much larger population to "sacrifice" than America has. Did he picture the faces of many little Russian school children or farmers or athletes when he spoke so nonchalantly of sacrificing the masses? No, of course not. Those people do not matter to minds like his. Nor do most of us at Villanova.

To accept Liddy's view as the only way to interpret "the real world" is to accept that we are merely the next group of human sacrifices for powerful world leaders to risk for the sake of political power. It means that we must realize that only money matters — and those with it are the only ones who have power. We are to understand that people do not matter, except of course, if they are a means to achieve money or power. When we are asked to accept such an outlook, with life itself being negligible, it seems to me an act of bravery, not cowardess, to search for the Easter Bunny amidst it all.

If, according to John Milton in Paradise Lost:

> "The mind is its own place, and in itself
> Can make a Heav'n of Hell, a Hell of Heav'n"

then G. Gordon Liddy certainly represents the latter instance. His conclusions about the true nature of the world are unquestionably well-founded. One simply has to open the newspaper to learn of high technological advances in violence, or walk alone late at night in an inner city, or as Liddy illustrates, work for the government to see what he sees. But that is all he sees. Ironically, his view is as veiled as he claims ours is. Speaking as a college senior who only knows a comfortable middle class American lifestyle and who deals mostly in classroom values (or the "Holiday Inn" version of life), admittedly my youth may cause me to see more promise than can be actualized. My "Heav'n out of Hell" may have quite a sobered definition in thirty years. But I still believe that my view is constructive whereas his is destructive; I can even use his attitude to my advantage. What he sees causes me to realize that the strong feeling of idealism of the inexperienced must be channelled into practical solutions if it is to be of any value. I may not find the Easter Bunny but I am willing to search. Mr. Liddy has given up the hunt.

Reagan And Nation Triumph

Republicans Advance Victorious Era

By Robert A. MONTSERRAT
Chairman, Conservative Party
Villanova Political Union

Faith has been restored in the electorate. The people have refused to be manipulated by the plasticisms of a pure politician. They have rejected vacillating inconsistency and the frustrations of ineptitude in favor of national strength embodied in a leader of character, traditional value and virtue. America, a nation of aggressive, hardy people, has rejected the notion that it has more of a past than a future. The electorate has accepted the Reagan promise of a vision and a great future.

To say that the Reagan victory is a "pocketbook" victory is partially true, yet the dimensions of victory suggest something more profound. The understandable reaction to four years of Jimmy Carter goes deeper than the wallet. It is a desire for change. America's long nap is over. The change in national mood is represented not only by the Reagan victory but by its dimensions. The philosophical change is the most politically profound since 1932. The government had been asked to provide better than could invididuals in a collective drive; it has failed, and miserably, at that. It is time again for the national combination of individual efforts to provide for and motivate this country's movement into the future. Jimmy Carter told us our greatness was over, that we must tighten our belts and resign ourselves to being first amongst equals, instead of fulfilling our destiny as a superpower amongst nations. The resounding rejection of that attitude has been brought alive by the personality and character of Ronald Reagan. He has consistently over the years advocated that prosperity can be achieved through the invisible hand of private interest, that peace can be achieved by the strong hand of military might, that the social fabric of the nation will strengthen for the diversity of individuality, and that government intervention in this respect is only a stiffling influence.

Faith on the part of Ronald Reagan in believing in those traditional values has been rewarded by the people with an overwhelming mandate for change. Ronald Reagan has not only persevered; he has prevailed and now has the confidence and trust of the people behind him.

What can we expect from the Reagan administration?

The apparent sensation of moderation, of moving towards the center, is just that — a sensation. Policy change will not be radical; it will be as subtle and unoffensive as Reagan was during the campaign. The keen self-knowledge of Ronald Reagan gives him access to the vast reservoir of experience accumulated in years of politics. He perceives how great accomplishments are made to happen. Ronald Reagan will smoothly ease the well lubricated cogs of Washington's political machine in the direction his desires and serve the cause of the people. On the surface, change will be almost imperceptible, but in four years the Republic will awaken to dynamic changes. The New Deal will die not with a bang, but with the whimper it deserves. Welfare, food stamps, and government job programs will not disappear, but be reduced to levels where the truly needy still benefit and fraud, waste and abuse are significantly reduced. The Departments of Energy and Education will continue to exist, but stripped of the power to disrupt Americans' lives. Mature bureaucracies will have fund cut and substantially wither.

The judiciary will not serve activist cause but perform its assigned duties. Law and order will be restored. ERA is dead, but the rights of women will advance unhindered in a realistic and more sober approach through the legislatures. The next justice on the Supreme Court will probably be a woman. As businessmen permeate government again, business and government will cooperate. A freer atmosphere for America's business will aid a bigger and better economy. As taxation is reduced, the economy will flourish. It will be shown that growth can be accompanied by price stability through fiscal responsibility. International respect will rise as the ranks of America's armed forces swell in number; well paid, trained and equipped, America's arsenal will be second to none. National unity and pride will supplant and eventually displace sagging morale as the tide wave of optimism breaks onward in the years ahead. The national will to forge ahead, unfettered by the state, will manifest itself in years of surging productivity as we press forward on the long road back.

Of course the Soviets will test the new President, but this one will instinctively snarl back. It is the will of the people. Detente and international relations must become a two-way street or America will turn on her tormentors.

This country has endured much in the past four years. It is a long road back from where the Carter Administration has left us, but we are safely now back on the track. Ronald Reagan is a man with a mission. He has been charged with the awesome task of taking the chains off this country and setting America back to work. He is the personification of a mandate for change. Slowly, almost without notice, in a gentle, yet firm, way Ronald Reagan will serve as the guide-on towards getting America going again. To this end let us wish him Godspeed.

Karate Club Faces Problem

By CATHERINE SHEILS

The Karate Club was informed the beginning of this semester at the room on Saint Mary's ound floor, which was previously erved for storage of their equipnt and for sessions, was being verted into a game room for int Mary's residents.

Bill Dole, part-time student and ven year member of the Karate ub, described the situation and e feelings of the club members the Villanovan. A number of ng-pong tables and pinball chines were left over after the ening of the Connelly Center. ther than storing them, the Of- of Student Life decided they uld be given to Saint Mary's. is action also resulted in the rate Club losing their room. ny members of the club are disbed by this decision and feel it rather unfair.

The club originated ten years . It was given a room in Saint ry's. Seven years ago "they were forced to relocate because their room was being converted into a nursing lab." They were, however, given a new room located on Saint Mary's ground floor.

Members meet every Tuesday and Thursday evening. This arrangement was convenient because it provided a day's rest between the sessions. At the end of November, the club will lose its privileges of the meeting room.

"This action has many consequences. Firstly, the club will have no other location to store its heavy equipment, which includes an eight-hundred pound mat. Secondly, this equipment is not readily easily moved, since the mat itself requires ten people to carry. To appease the club members, they will be given access to Saint Mary's gym every Tuesday night and Alumni gym either Friday or Saturday night. The members are not satisfied with this proposal since most people are opposed to the idea of a weekend session, the usual two sessions a week will most likely be reduced to one."

Dole comments, "Presently, our club is composed of sixty to seventy members. The club is self-sufficient in the respect that it does not receive any funding from the University. All it needs is recognized legitimacy and a reserved room for storage of equipment and practices.

The new proposal is inadequate and unless the club is given the proper facilities there is a possibility that it will have to disband. It is not feasible to move this heavy equipment around the campus."

Members feel the action of the University was inconsiderate and unfair. Without having a room reserved for this club, they fear they will be unable to function properly.

Over the past ten years, the club has grown into a large organization. Approximately 35% of the members are female. The club offers a class in self-defense, at $25 per semester. This instruction elsewhere could go up to $10.00 per hour.

During the three hours a week, members practice and do basic calisthenics and stretching exercises. Many students join the club for the sole purpose of staying in shape.

In addition, the club holds two tournaments a year in the Field House. In these collegiate competitions, four or five teams compete, in accordance with the relative ability of the individual members, and points received by the participants are tabulated. Karate competitions consist of sparring, which is competition between two opponents and Kuta, which consists of a set form of moves made against an imaginary opponent.

Many members of the club have engaged in East Coast and Mid-West competition. James Toolam, former club member, is presently instructor of the club. He graduated from Villanova Law School in 1976. The principle instructor is Don Kennedy.

'Many members of the club are disturbed by this decision and feel it is rather unfair.'

FACULTY FORUM

Professor Joins in Conference

By DR. EMILY BINNS
Assoc. Professor,
Religious Studies

Dr. Emily Binns is Associate Professor of Systematic Theology in the department of Religious Studies at Villanova. Her special interest areas are Christian Anthropology, the Church and a variety of questions related to the concepts of person and community. The following article discusses one of her most recent conferences, specifically on women in contemporary society.

Last spring, I was invited to deliver the keynote address at an international conference for women, to be held in Germany, in the fall of 1980. As details began to flow, I learned for the first time, of the Military Conference of Catholic Women, an organization with a twenty-five year history of offering leadership conferences to women whose husbands and families are on European tours of duty with various branches of the American Armed Forces. These leadership conferences were designed to provide women involved in church community life with the necessary theological background and the training needed to enable them to maintain a parish community in the military context and to grow personally through exchange of experiences.

The Silver Jubilee Conference was held above the town of Berchtesgaden in Southern Bavaria, close to the Austrian border, during the week of October 19. The setting was incredibly beautiful — a "Christmas card scene," in living color, nestling at the front of a spectacular mountain. The United States Armed Forces have taken over a resort-type lodge, which was the actual retreat of Adolph Hitler, commonly referred to as "Eagle's Nest." This was the one element of unreality about the situation. The sheer physical beauty of the surroundings belied the sad, horrible history of that place which was nonetheless attached to by bunkers still intact under the building. It is somehow significant that the Conference Center has been steadily open to many retreat groups, where prayers, liturgical celebration and reflection are the order of the day. One might hope that the groups who gather here from countries all over Europe somehow redeem the time and place, and once again assert the holiness of created beauty, recreate the "holy mountain."

The conference lectures that I gave began with the keynote address entitled "Women: Person Catalyst, Prophet." The others, which followed, and unpacked the material of the overview were "Christian Women and Responsibility for the Future" and "Women in Church and Society." Because of the large number of delegates, over five hundred, each were repeated for 3 separate groups. This division permitted some interesting exchanges after the lecture. In addition, I was asked to give a conference for the sixty chaplains who accompanied their chapel groups, and the representative of the Military Ordinary Archbishop Joseph Ryan from New York.

These experiences were especially positive and hope-filled ones for me, since they were so marked by a sense of community, mutuality and search for truth. "Military stereotypes" dissolved. The strength, goodness and power of hundreds of Christian women spoke deeply for the contributions women can, do and must make to the life of the Church. By the very exigency of the Chapel structure, the gifts and talents of women had to be tapped, and they have proven themselves more than equal to the task, injecting new life and warmth to the lived community experiences of counselling, religious education, liturgical preparation and expression.

This reality provided me with the opportunity to ask the question as to whether, indeed, women do not have something specific, unique, different to bring to the human enterprise which has not been fully integrated into ecclesial as well as societal institutions. The concept of the equality of the sexes depends not on "sameness," but precisely on a clear understanding that union differentiates, that is, that the physiological differences which make union possible are accompanied by psychic differences which make a fuller union possible. The inclusion of women, bringing this differentiation and diversity brings a "newness" to the human project which we all are really seeking. Particularly in the life of the Christian community, the acknowledgment and recognition of the leadership roles of women is very important. Reciprocal and mutual relationships between men and women, ordained or not, can only further the growth of the Church. My experiences with the American women of Europe served to confirm my own convictions.

Peace and Justice Program

Course Includes Trip to Israel

By LIZ McCONVILLE

Today marks the closing of Villanova's Hunger Awareness Week. The purpose of this past week was not intended to be the Villanova Community's homage to the hunger problem. But rather as an awakening to the vastness and complexity of the problem. Awareness to such an issue is unwelcome. It gives one a feeling of frustration more than one of enlightenment. How is one expected to confront so vast a problem?

Villanova now offers its students a program of study designed to resolve such feelings of frustration and helplessness. The Program in Peace and Justice was recently developed by Fr. Ray Jackson, encouraged by numerous concerned faculty members, and supported by Fr. O'Malley and Fr. Driscoll.

It is a program growing in popularity precisely because of its concern with such relevant issues as: poverty, malnutrition, maldistrIbution of resources, prejudice, racism, apathy, civil rights, arms race, militarism, economic exploitation, nuclear war, terrorism, religious freedom, women's liberation, and human needs. The program is interdisciplinary in nature. Its interrelated courses extend into the departments of History, Economics, Sociology, Psychology, Philosophy, and Religious Studies.

If you are a concerned student, interested in the above issues, the Peace and Justice Program offers you the opportunity to study, analyze, and resolve these issues as they relate to your life. But more importantly, through increased awareness, understanding and knowledge of the global problems, the Program offers direction toward using one's own life in confronting these problems. Further information, course offerings and descriptions are available in the Campus Ministry Office.

A nine day trip to Israel will highlight a special course in Biblical Archeology to be offered by Father Edward Hamel, O.S.A. of Religious Studies and Doctor George Radan, AAH. Famed sites of the Old and New Testament such as Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Megiddo, Shechem, Nazareth, Capernaum and Caesarea will be visited. Special attention will be paid to their biblical and archeological significance.

Since this course fulfills all the requirements for academic credit, an additional credit can be earned by those who take the trip as members of the course. Course number is Honors 5501. One credit can be obtained by any student who takes the Israel trip without enrolling in the course. Interested students are asked to contact either Father Hamel in Religious Studies or Doctor Radan in AAH. Faculty members and administrators are also welcome.

Flight to Tel Aviv via Switzerland on Swissair will start from New York, Friday, February 27, 1981; return is scheduled for Sunday, March 8, 1981. Knowledgeable guides will be provided; participants will stay at excellent hotels. One overnight will be at an Israeli kibbutz. Travel throughout Isarel will be by modern buses.

Special classes will be provided in late February for those going on the trip for academic credit. Father Hamel and/or Doctor Radan plan to accompany the group in Israel. Ample time is provided for personal visits and shopping for souvenirs and gifts in the many very interesting Middle Eastern bazaars.

THANKSGIVING DAY...

...a day for memories and renewals of friendship...for families to become closer as they share a day of warmth and meaning together...

By LAURIE ALMEDA

Jack Frost teases us during the month of November, painting the windows in the middle of the night, and crusting the ground with a white, frozen layer of frost.

The vivid landscape, looking frozen and lifeless in the chilly dawn, basks in the warmth of the November sunshine. When the sun loses its thawing power, a satisfied winter settles itself comfortably in our midst.

Darkness is even more apparent than the cold in November. Wet rain and snow, combined with the shortness of daylight, make the warmth of a fireplace a cozy luxury. Most importantly, November brings contented memories of Thanksgiving Day. With the settling of cold weather, the days seem to roll ahead into eternity — looking back, it seems as if just as many were left behind.

Little Joey toddled over to the fence of the hen-yard. Peering through the holes in the chicken wire, the small boy watched the giant turkey strut about the hen-yard. The turkey, which was doomed to be the family's Thanksgiving dinner, shambled over to Joey and stared the little boy in the face. Sad, watery eyes gazed into Joey's.

"Little boy, don't stare at me like that," cackled the voice of the turkey.

Joey jumped away from the fence, releasing his small fingers from the chicken wire.

"Just because I'm your Thanksgiving dinner doesn't give you the right to be impolite and stare," croaked the turkey once more.

Joey gaped as the small, piercing eyes of the turkey aimed accusingly into his.

"Do you know why your family celebrates Thanksgiving?" questioned the giant turkey.

Joey looked puzzled for a moment. Then he gave the turkey a suspicious look to make sure he was not being asked a trick question. "We have Thanksgiving so we can eat turkey, and stuffing, and mashed potatoes, and pumpkin pie, and lots of other good stuff," Joey replied knowingly.

The turkey stomped off across the hen-yard, clucking and flapping his feathers at a furious rate. After completing his fourth circle of the yard, the turkey returned to the fence and gave Joey a stern command, "Sit down, little boy. I'm going to tell you why Thanksgiving is celebrated."

Joey plopped to the ground and smiled excitedly; he always liked to be told stories.

"Before coming to America," began the turkey in his shaky voice, "the Pilgrims lived in Holland for ten years. The Dutch people went to church on October 3 to thank God for his mercies, and for the Dutch peoples' deliverance from the Spaniards. Then they returned home to feast on their favorite dish, Spanish hodge-podge, in memory of their fathers. To this dish they added sweets and rich foods for joy and gladness.

"After observing this Thanksgiving Day in Holland for ten years, the Pilgrims thought it only natural once they were in America, to hold their own Thanksgiving.

"The Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock on December 21, 1620. The men went ashore every morning to work on building the colony. At the end of March the whole company of Pilgrims landed. In April, their ship the Mayflower sailed away.

"During the severe winter, 55 out of the 101 Pilgrims on the Mayflower died. In the spring of 1621, the crop was planted, and throughout its growing it was watched anxiously. The Pilgrims realized that their lives depended upon the prosperity of the first harvest. The harvest gathered in October was beautiful, to the colonists' joy. Governor Bradford ordered a three days' feast and celebration, to which Chief Massasoit and other Indian friends were invited.

"The food they had at this feast included: Wild turkeys," at this the giant turkey ruffled his feathers a little, "geese, ducks, fish, barley loaves, corn bread, and vegetables. The Indians brought five deer to the feast as an offering of fellowship," the turkey clucked a little after saying this.

"Many people believe this is the story of the first Thanksgiving," the turkey cackled on, "but some say it isn't because no special religious services were held during the feasting.

"The harvest the next fall did not yield as well as the first, and the Pilgrims had no desire for a second Thanksgiving. Their colony had become overcrowded that summer with many undesirable newcomers, who had brought no supplies, but had managed to eat up all of the Pilgrims' food. During the winter, food became scarcer every day, and the Pilgrims were glad to see spring come. But a drought set in and almost destroyed the entire crop that had been planted in April. In July, a day was appointed for special fasting and prayer, and after nine hours' of prayer, clouds spread over the sky bringing a reviving rain.

"The colonists held a day of prayer and thanksgiving in acknowledgement of these blessings of God on July 30, 1623. This is sometimes claimed to be the origin of Thanksgiving Day, because it was a religious and social celebration."

Joey squirmed a little on the ground and looked back towards his house.

The turkey flapped his wings and continued, "Since 1865, Thanksgiving Day has been an annual national holiday. Thanksgiving is the only holiday in the United States that the President issues a formal proclamation for every year.

"Do you understand why your family celebrates Thanksgiving now?" questioned the turkey.

Joey dug a stick in the ground for a few minutes and then looked up at the turkey. The sound of cool wind was all that could be heard.

"Thanksgiving," clucked the turkey, "is a day in which thankfulness is displayed by the enjoyment of the bounties of the harvest, and by a generous sharing of the good things of life with the less fortunate. Thanksgiving is a day for memories and renewals of friendships. When the family gathers together on Thanksgiving Day, it brings distant ties together. Families become closer as they share a day of warmth and meaning together." The turkey croaked out his final words before strutting back into the yard.

Joey rose slowly, looking at the turkey expectantly, as if he was still waiting for an end to the story. The sound of his name being called for lunch reached his ears so he turned and dashed toward the house. Once inside, he ran to his mother and hugged her, and then said, "Mama, do you want to know why we should celebrate Thanksgiving this year?"

One of the Villanovan's very best photographers, Jeff Page, was found early one morning on the floor of the editor's apartment working on a photo spread with Kate McDonald ... but he forgot the camera . . . oh, well, the pictures probably would have been overexposed, anyway . . . What visions did Chris Cherry see as he fainted away at APO's blood drive? . . . the 25 people who packed that auditorium for Larry Kane, editorials on Gordon Liddy that mention how much he got paid . . . and the hideous wrath of a woman scorned . . .

The WKWC editors would like to pay their final respects to our senior editors by making our predictions of what will become of our fearless leaders after that fateful day in May . . . Marianne Lavelle will form her own fertilizer firm that in time will make you forget the name Frank Perdue . . . Vince Hausmann will unfortunately go unemployed. Upon entering the job market the harsh reality will fall upon Vince that Villanova has many, many parent companies . . . Vicky Parente will fulfill a lifelong dream to become a stewardess in the friendly skies (coffee, tea, or me?) . . . Jerry Dougherty will pull a Rip Van Winkle at graduation but will finally wake up in 2021 . . . Eileen McCafferey will do whatever it is that honors majors do after graduation . . . Bill Rock will headline at The Pink Paradise as a male go-go dancer; just play "Rosalita" . . . John Chott will handle foreclosures for the elderly in N.Y. state . . . Landa Whitesides and Diane Cleary will move to N.Y. to what else . . . assist John Chott . . . Beth White will finally settle down and get married . . . to Ed McAssey . . . and they'll have 43 kids . . . Jerry Ventresca will have to ask Beth White what it is he can do . . . then Beth will end up doing it for him . . . our advisor June Lytel will continue teaching at Villanova among other things . . . thank God for tenure . . . Brian Buinieicz will mysteriously disappear into thin air . . . and a blast from our past . . . Chris Whalen will blow into graduation and then just blow away . . . and perhaps in 20 years, Dave Coskey will be available . . . as for the WKWC editors . . . love & slugs . . . Father Martin knows, he cares, indeed.

Haus Completes "Chalk Circle"

Brecht Updated

Robyn Hatcher and Dona Giammarco in "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" at Vasey Theatre.

By
DR. CHARLES H. HELMETAG

The current production of Bertolt Brecht's The Caucasian Chalk Circle in Vasey Theatre is colorful, thought-provoking and frequently very amusing. It also offers a unique opportunity to see the work of an important European director, Heinz-Uwe Haus of the German Democratic Republic.

Most of the actors in The Caucasian Chalk Circle wear masks. According to director Haus, the masks make it possible to fill some eighty roles with about twenty actors and also, more importantly, they force the actors to use their entire bodies rather than merely relying upon facial expressions. The mask was another device used in classical Greek drama. Some critics have suggested that the masks used in productions of The Caucasian Chalk Circle are meant to show the deformity and inhumanity which exists in society.

Only three characters, Grusha, Simon and Azdak, traditionally do not wear masks. These are the only characters in the play who act with humanity and sensitivity.

The large cast performs well with the masks with Michael Maggio, Muriel Ludden, Julia Garay and several others turning in memorable performances. Michael Toner plays both Azdak and an army corporal with humor, variety and enthusiasm.

Haus believes that Brecht's plays should not be staged as museum pieces in slavish imitation of the "model" productions of Brecht's Berliner Ensemble. Instead, new productions should be relevant to the time and place in which they are staged. When he staged Mother Courage in Cyprus, this led to reflections of Cypriot customs and of the Cypriot Civil War within the production itself.

What particularly distinguishes Haus' American Chalk Circle are the use of a parachute as a stage device and the casting of the central character, the kitchen maid Grusha. Robyn Hatcher, who ably plays the role, is a black actress in an otherwise all-white cast. The rulers, the judges, the soldiers, the policemen and Grusha's fiance' are all white.

Brecht also stresses social situations more than character. In the various situations in which the black Grusha finds herself one can see the black worker (perhaps the cleaning lady who takes the P & W from Philadelphia to the Main Line), the pre-Civil War "Mammy," the black athlete and the modern feminist (black or white) who can hold her own against a judge or an army corporal.

Haus also shares Brecht's view that the visual aspect of a play is every bit as important as the playwright's words. In this area both the director and the stage designer must make a contribution. Stage designer Lon Winston's set is simple, in the Brechtian tradition, but highly suggestive. It includes a gallows, a few large trunks and a cart which becomes a judge's chair, but the most striking pieces of scenery are a huge camouflage parachute and several wooden fences. The parachute serves as a theatre curtain but remains on stage during virtually every scene as a palace wall, a mountain, a stream.

In a Brechtian production, the director's special contribution in the visual sphere takes the form of character groupings or tableaux, moments of social significance which are frozen in time. In Haus's production one remembers here the tableau of the beggars and petitioners at the wealthy governor's gate and the flight of the refugees.

Basically the play is all about two nice people, a soldier and a peasant girl torn apart by circumstances. This is one Brecht play where nice people do finish last. To see how the playwright manages that (it takes a little conniving), see The Caucasian Chalk Circle at Vasey Theatre through Saturday, November 22 at the Annenberg Center November 24 and 25.

Old art promotes healing

A Way to Self-improvement

By IRENE SMITH

The art of hypnosis is experiencing a revival as hypnotists treat their subjects for a myraid of problems: from smoking and overeating to increasing athletic ability. An ardent self-improvist, I recently read an ad in a local suburban newspaper advertising a method to quit smoking and lose weight.

I was told to focus my eyes on a spot on the wall...I felt myself slipping deeper ...my mind and body had become separated.

Always in need to lose a few pounds, I decided to investigate the matter more thoroughly. A phone call revealed that weight loss was achieved through hypnosis conducted over three sessions. Intrigued, I made an appointment and eagerly anticipated the awaited date.

Many myths surrounding hypnosis have some people convinced that once in a state of hypnosis they enter a deep trance where the hypnotist can control their mind and actions. This is untrue. Actually what occurs is that the body enters a state of complete relaxation, physical and mental. In this stage of relaxation, the subconscious mind is more open to suggestions for change. Suggestions to curb one's cigarette habit or eating patterns are absorbed and incorporated into a person's behavior. When undergoing hypnosis, the individual enters into a heightened level of awareness where concentrated attention screens out external stimuli.

The phenomenon of hypnosis as a healing art goes back thousands of years to the Eygptians and Greeks whose priests ministered to the sick largely by trance and suggestion. During the Middle Ages, the practice died out because of the belief that those who practiced the art were witches. Today, however, with laboratory data and clinical experience proving the effectiveness of the practice, there is a growing awareness that for selected people hypnosis can be a powerful tool in controlling pain, phobia and habits.

At my appointment, I was seated in a deep, comfortable reclining chair and was given an introduction to what hypnosis does, its conditioning affect on behavior. The hypnotist, John Beitzel, has been working at his profession for a little over a year.

Beitzel received his English degree and teaching certificate at Penn State. He taught for a short period of time and decided to change professions after hearing of a friend's experience with a hypnotist. "Some friends of mine, heavy smokers, went to a hypnotist to quit smoking and were able to quit. I had some interest and I took a course in southern New Jersey." From that course Beitzel set up practice and became a member of the Association to Advance Ethical Hypnosis.

The hypnosis was a simple affair. I was told to focus my eyes on a spot on the wall and concentrate on it. A tape recorder in the background played the sound of waves crashing on a beach. In a soothing voice I was told to breathe deeply, relaxing all the muscles in my body, releasing the tension. I felt myself slipping deeper and deeper into a state of semi-consciousness. All I was aware of was Beitzel's voice telling me how I was drifting into hypnosis.

After reaching a state of utter relaxation, the hypnotist concentrated on suggestions designed to change my eating habits. When I was awakened, I felt as though I had been in a deep sleep. I had been conscious the entire time but felt as if my mind and body had become separated.

The actual hypnosis is rein-

"Nashville" Leads Cultural Film Schedule

By SHARON WINTERS

The cultural film series at the Connelly Center is coming to a close much too rapidly. Only three films are left: Nashville; Nosferatu and Jules and Jim. These movies will air at the cinema at 6:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. for the next three Sundays in a row.

The last film to appear at Connelly was the Brusati film, Bread and Chocolate. This Italian film with English subtitles was a winner in every sense of the word. It had pathos and comedy as well as a message for the viewer.

The hero of the film was continually caught between despair and hope. Every time that he decided to give up his dream something would pull him back to try again. After many turmoils, he discovered that simply being himself would be the solution to his trials.

The film portrayed well the evolution of the character. At first, he was living for his family and his hopes for their life together. Later, he transcended mere existence by realizing that his life involved principle, purpose.

Foreign films can, indeed, be a good experience when they are made well. When the acting and direction utilize the medium with care, the subtitles are almost necessary. Bread and Choco was such a film.

The visual expertise of Br in Bread was evident, even memory. The images in the were so clear that the words redundant. Although the film spoken entirely in Italian, the carried the medium's tradem of universality with ease.

Nashville will be the next in the cultural series. It will air November 23. This Alt directed film has gotten deserved praise over the years its fine use of celluloid.

Transylvanian madness co to the silver screen Nosferatu on December Dracula, this time directed Herzog, lives once more.

The last film in the series French director, Truffaut. and Jim will round out the S movies at Connelly.

On December 10, Prof Sharrett will lecture on "O of Dreams and Horror" at 7 p Bartley Hall, Room 209. T ture is a free event sponsored the Cultural Film Series mittee which is chaired b Joan D. Lynch. The other three are: Warren Miller's Ski Robert Wise's U.F.O.; Ghostly Tales Revisited and Dandy.

"Foxfire" Beckons Involvement

By SHARON WINTERS

The Foxfire series is a richly cultured anthology of the peoples of the Appalacian region. The current book, Foxfire 6, is a continuation of the lives and lifestyles that inspire in their richness.

Residents of Appalacia tell their own stories, in their own words. The narratives conjure images of sitting on a porch swing in the summer while the "community elders" weave lush tales of life when they were young.

Realism and the simple life are the dominant features of the Foxfire culture. Simplicity should not be confused with capacity. The simplicity depicted in the volume is a lack of clutter; living life unencumbered through harmonious interaction with the environment. The people learned to live with their land and the land provided their sustenance.

"I Did the Best I Could With the Brain Nature Gave Me," is the story of Ben Ward, an inventor, pinball addict and self-fashioned scholar despite 50 shock treatments given to him when he was a young man. The story of Ward does not fit into the stereotype mountain man. He had the capacity to solve problems with his powers of observation; his intellectual capacity far surpassed his nine years of formal education.

Ward, also, was not the typically religious country inhabitant. He believed in powers that govern the universe, rather than a white-bearded god. Various life experiences, including his love of reading, shaped his thinking. Ward's attitudes and opinions were quite different from his fellows, "I have been in conflict with my neighbors on politics and religion for as far back as I can remember," he said.

The simplicity of Ward's life was that he was able to live, survive, as long as he wanted by using the talents that he had to build the life that he wanted to live. He used the tools and resources in the immediate enviornment; he employed people who became his friends and admirers. Further, Ward was an honest man who believed in paying a fair price for what he received. It didn't matter that the other person was ignorant of something's worth. Subsequently, he paid more than another might on occasions; however, he was also known to pay less too.

Ben Ward's story was related by those who knew him when he was alive; included were quotes by him.

Jake Waldroop, from Macon County, North Carolina, narrated his own life. He recounted his childhood and travels, a trip to Washington state that ended with a measles epidemic.

Waldroop still likes his fishing and hunting although he's 91. He lives in the house that he built when he was a younger man. Waldroop is largely a self-taught man who learned to live with the land.

The common thread, philosophy, throughout Foxfire seems to be education. Not the kind of education from a sterile enviornment, but a vibrant, vital type of learning that makes one feel a part of life.

Learning by doing is in the book. Instructions are provided so that any interested person could try to make carved toys, locks or handmade instruments. Also, learning by doing created the book. Foxfire is an ongoing project for students in a northern Georgia high school.

Foxfire not only includes books but also magazines, television shows and albums as well as other activities. An English teacher, Eliot Wigginton, began Foxfire magazine with his ninth-and tenth-grade classes.

Wigginton discusses his philosophy on teaching, and learning, in the introduction of the book. He feels that students require a feeling of belonging in order to learn. Wigginton cited the cold atmosphere of large schools as inhibiting students. During his years of teaching, he has noticed that if students are given an area of the classroom to engage in constructive activity they will do well and interact. However, if students are taught in an atmosphere where they can not be a part of the school they will be listless and uncaring.

The concept of belonging is very important. Someone that feels comfortable enough to contribute will, in larger measure than most people could imagine. Wigginton's students have proved to be excellent examples of this concept.

Belonging is also the central thread that binds and frees the people who appear in the Foxfire book. The community spirit, cooperation, and purpose makes people like Waldroop and Ward come alive. They don't seem to be mere words on a page; rather, they appear as vital beings who cooperated with nature and other people to net meaningful, knowledgeable lives.

Foxfire is a shared human experience that happens to be in print. It is the kind of medium effort that inspires one to act. Foxfire beckons involvement by being involved.

forced by self hypnosis to continue shaping one's new behavior and eliminate old habits. Most experts estimate that 50 percent to 90 percent of the population can be hypnotized to some extent. Those who are good hypnotic subjects are those with good imaginations, excell in artistic endeavors. Those who fear hypnosis or who are stubborn and overanalytical will not respond to hypnosis. Hopefully, these people will respond to some other method of behavior modification.

I questioned Beitzel on the success rate of his subjects. Those who smoke report that 70 percent quit cigarettes entirely by the end of the program. The secret lies in the consistent everyday conditioning. Giving in to an old condition like snacking between meals or indulging in high caloric foods can cause one to revert to old habits.

In all, I am optimistic about the experience. I have noticed a change in my eating habits. I am no longer prone to over eat at meals or have an insatiable craving for sweets like I used to.

Subtle Sultans Smile and Swing

Mark Knopfler, Dave Knopfler, Pick Withers and John Illsley.

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

"All this cold, gray brave new world music . . . I wouldn't play it to a cage full of hamsters."

Joe Strummer,
CREEM Magazine

There is a mellow place in between "studied" and "casual" that makes the Grateful Dead and Wishbone Ash very important to those who love to get down in a relaxed manner, and not out of self-defense. Dire Straits has a similar knack, one that bands like AC/DC sorely need: Ted Nugent sure can play the guitar like it's a motorcycle, but Dire Straits' Mark Knopfler plays it like it's an instrument. Dire Straits' three studio efforts had nearly singular results, a consistent hypnotism due to the jazz influence on their subtly shifting time signatures, and Knopfler's gift for brilliant vocal understatement.

Onstage, the band is loose. Like smoke curling from the stack of a slowly rolling hobo boxcar, Knopfler's blues leads opened the show and continued to deliver throughout. Brother David Knopfler on rhythm guitar is responsible for the exciting melodies from which the carefully constructed songs evolve. Dire Straits' performances are far from mechanical, but thoughtfully, almost somberly, creative. Introspection is the key, and at several points during their show at Emerald City, the stage grew completely dark.

Even though they come from England, Dire Straits has an almost uniquely American sound. While they dance and laugh like the Dead onstage, their main influence seems to be going through Dylan to Woody Guthrie. Setting Me Up salutes the film about the great poet-hobo-philosopher, "You say I'm the greatest bound for glory," and, also like Guthrie, Dire Straits sings of the lonliness in the chainless lives of sailors, cowboys and other American romantic heroes. Not very many thematic surprises (Romeo and Juliet, Expresso Love and Sad Rock, all performed at Emerald City's show, are far from unusual song titles), but the treatment they give these subjects is thoughtfully self-reflective (the subjects themselves become symbolic of more important meanings.

The American music scene, at least, needs Dire Straits to remind us that being the best doesn't mean being the loudest, fastest or strangest in never-ending one-upmanship: It means saying something meaningful as well as one is capable of saying it. The fact that New Wave has promoted diverse musical styles makes Dire Straits' musical integrity that much more noteworthy.

"You step inside but you don't see too many faces, Coming in out of the rain to hear the jazz go down. Too much competition too many other places. But not too many horns can make that sound."

TLA: The end is in sight

By ALICE FISHER

If you have nothing to do on a Sunday afternoon, try taking the subway to South Street in Society Hill, go in and out of the shops, then, as time approaches, you can slip into the TLA theatre, 3rd and South Streets, and enjoy one of their Sunday matinee, cultural films.

Tales of Hoffmann, the film version of Offenbach's fantasy opera with dance, will be shown on November 23. Produced and directed by Michael Powell, the film has become celebrated for its rich color and spectacular sets.

Alexander Korda's highly acclaimed Rembrandt starring Charles Laughton, Gertrude Lawrence and Elsa Lanchester will be shown November 30. On December 7, Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor star in Franco Zeffirelli's colorful adaptation of Shakespeare's rollicking comedy, The Taming of the Shrew. The film has a nice earthiness, and the Burton-Taylor screen chemistry is electrifying.

The last of the cultural films being shown this semester will be Edvard Munch (December 14). Along with Vincent Van Gogh, Munch was the founder of the Expressionist movement in painting. His genius as well as his obsessive nature are fascinating to observe.

TLA Cinema announced that, Jan. 4, 1981 will be its last evening of operation.

TLA owner Al Malmfelt said, "We simply ran out of resources in our fight to stay in existence. The legal battle was becoming so drawn out and expensive that when a settlement was offered I had to accept it."

The last TLA program will be highlighted by such popular TLA standbys as Harold and Maude, Women in Love, The Harder They Come, King of Hearts and La Cage Aux Folles, (the last two featured on The Final Day), special Holiday Week Matinee showings of The Wizard of Oz (Dec. 26-30) and The Children of Theatre Street (Dec. 31-Jan. 4), as well as features never before shown at TLA, such as Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Maitresse, The Tin Drum, The Innocent, The Europeans and Rockers.

Another Band Rides the Bus

By JERRY ARTH

Is it possible for a band to bring together such diverse influences as Chuck Berry and The Talking Heads, along with various ska groups, and synthesize them into the freshest rock 'n' roll since The Sex Pistols? With their debut album, Minimum Wage Rock & Roll, the BusBoys from L.A. assert themselves as possibly the most exciting new wave act to appear in a long time.

The band itself is an anomaly — with the exception of a chicano drummer, the BusBoys are all black. This is particularly noteworthy in light of the fact that the last black rock 'n' roll star was Jimi Hendrix, who has been dead for over ten years. And what's even more rare is that the BusBoys play new wave rock. And play it WELL.

Brian O'Neal, chief song-writer and keyboardist; his brother Kevin, bassist; lead vocalist Gus Louderman; guitarist Victor Johnson; keyboardist Mike Jones; and drummer Steve Felix compose the BusBoys. Each grew up under rock 'n' roll and each is a competent musician. However, most of their appeal comes from the biting, mocking lyrics of Brian O'Neal and the exuberant delivery of Gus Louderman.

KKK a politico-rocker in the best style of The Sex Pistols and The Clash, typifies the BusBoys sarcastic attitude toward racial taboos: "I am bigger than a nigger/Wanna be an all American man/Wanna join the Ku Klux Klan/Play in a rock & roll band."

Bus Boys serve up tasty rock.

Again their willingness to break down prejudicial barriers is exemplified by There Goes the Neighborhood and its chorus: "There goes the neighborhood/The Whites are moving in /They'll bring their next of kin, oh boy/There goes the neighborhood, boy, boy, boy." But the BusBoys are not a bitter band; rather, their songs are infectiously danceable, tongue-in-cheek rockers which hold a great optimism towards life, no matter how base it may seem, as in the title cut, Minimum Wage: "I wash the dishes, I mop the floor/I'm glad I'm alive, who could ask for more."

The BusBoys bring many different elements of rock together in this fabulous first album, from the Chuck Berry-influenced Johnny Soul'd Out, across the musical spectrum to D-Day, which could have been done by The Talking Heads. They add new color (no pun intended) and vitality to a musical genre which tends toward stagnation. I only take exception with one thing — in the song, Did You See Me, the BusBoys sing "I bet you never heard music like this by spades." Wrong. Very few people of any color have made music as good as the BusBoys have.

WKVU's Dream Tape

By BOBBY CARMEN

WKVU Radio sports, with the assistance of the basketball office, has done it again. For the third time in two years, they have produced a ficticious basketball broadcast in the hope of landing a major basketball recruit. The tape was made for Pat Ewing, a seven-foot, one-inch center from the Boston area, who is the most highly recruited basketball player in the nation.

The fictitious game involves Villanova and Kentucky in the NCAA finals in April of 1982 in the Louisiana Superdome. (The actual site for the NCAA finals in 1982.) The tape involves a play-by-play description of a game, with the script written by WKVU Sports Director Al Oxenreiter and Asst. Basketball Coach Marty Marbach. Halftime and post-game interviews were also included. Crowd noise was added over the broadcasting and the final product was given to Ewing upon his visit to Villanova.

Oxenreiter did all of the play-by-play work, and Bob Herman, another member of the staff, added the color commentary. Joe Jasek and Jeff Page then helped to engineer the final result.

It is evident that this is a unique style of recruiting, for it originated at WKVU, and as far as anyone knows, it is the only tape of it's kind in the country, or for that matter, the world.

Now, the ball is on Pat Ewing's end of the court. He likes the tape, but will he come to Villanova? Only time will tell. Oxenreiter, WKVU, the basketball team, and Villanova can only wait . . . and hope.

Icecats Defeat Lehigh...Again

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats continued their winning ways this past weekend beating Lehigh for the second consecutive week by a score of 4-2. Once again Chris Mancuso and "Killer" Whitaker were integral parts of the fifth Wildcat victory of the season. Mancuso and Whitaker have now scored at least one goal in five of the team's six games this season.

Lehigh was out for revenge on Saturday after losing the previous week in their home rink by a score of 4-1. Lehigh came out storming, keeping the Wildcats bottled up in their own zone for the opening minutes of the first period. After a short regrouping period, Villanova began to play their style of game and scored the game's opening goal. Hustling sophomore Jim Ragold redirected a Jeff Beck shot over the shoulder of a stunned Lehigh goaltender to give the Icecats a 1-0 lead. Five minutes later the same combination of Ragold and Beck connected to give the Cats a 2-0 lead. Beck carried the puck into the offensive zone, made a pretty move, then shuffled a pass to Ragold standing at the goal-mouth. It was Ragold's second goal of the game and fifth of the season. Goaltender Tom Margiotti shut the door on Lehigh for the opening period and the Cats had a 2-0 lead after the first period.

Once again Lehigh came out flying at the periods beginning. This time they did not give the Icecats time to regroup and cut the Villanova lead to 2-1. The game had now turned into a close checking physical type game with much of the action taking place in the neutral zone. With five minutes left in period two, senior defenseman Rod Lane kept the puck in at the Icecat blueline and noticed an unprotected Whitaker standing at the goalmouth. Rod quickly slid a pass to the uncovered Whitaker who made no mistake with it and the Cats once again had a two goal lead.

As if Villanova did not know it Lehigh took it to them once more in period three. Margiotti was sensational in goal but the Lehigh onslaught was too much as they closed the gap to one goal five minutes into the period. For the next 14 minutes both teams played to a stalemate with Margiotti shining in the Villanova nets. Lehigh pulled its goalie in the final minute to try to salvage a tie but the Icecat defense stiffened. With a faceoff to Margiotti's left with only 30 seconds remaining the puck came squirting through a pile of players to a lone Lehigh player who slammed the puck towards the goal. Margiotti came sliding across with stacked pads to smother the puck and once again save another game for the Icecats. In the ensuing action, Mancuso gathered the puck at center ice and shot the puck into the open net to give the Cats a 4-2 victory. Coach Probst stated, "Lehigh was more hungry for this game than we were. We were very lucky to come away with a win. But then again, only the good teams can win on an off day."

The Icecats will return to league action on Sunday when they host West Chester State at the Skatium. Game time is 12:00 noon.

Cats Exhibit Pre-Season Promise

By BETH WHITE

Last Tuesday's basketball exhibition game with Obras Sanitarius of Argentina served its purpose as both a pre-season display to the fans of the Wildcats' strongpoints and on-the-court demonstration to the coaches of what the team needs to work on.

The 96-88 victory for Villanova continued the tradition of posting victories over their Field House exhibition game opponents, but this win was harder fought than those of previous years for two reasons: Obras Sanitarius is probably more competitive (and more physical) than other teams the Wildcats have faced in their pre-season; and the relative inexperience of the 1980-81 Wildcat basketball team is certainly a factor.

Of the 13 players on Villanova's roster, six are walk-ons. However, senior Co-captain Tom Sienkiewicz feels that, "We could definitely reach our goal of 20 wins for the season if we play to our capabilities. We're probably a few steps behind last year's team at the beginning of the season," continues the 6'2" guard, "but with hard work and practice, I think we can be as good."

Senior Co-captain Alex Bradley feels that although the team lost a lot of experience from last year (most notably, guard and former Co-captain Rory Sparrow, who graduated last year), the team "is basically the same. The walk-ons are not a handicap," continues Bradley, "and even though there were a few strategic errors in the first half (like throwing the ball to the wrong side of the court), the team, especially the guards, did better in the second half." The 6'6 1/2" forward pointed out that the game was useful because the team was able to "realize what we're weak in and what we'll need more work on." Bradley is impressed with the progression he has seen in the walk-ons and notes that they look to the starters for leadership. "It's our job as starters to build up the lead to give them the playing time and the on-court experience they need," concludes Bradley.

Head Coach Rollie Massimino cleared the bench with just three minutes left in the game to "let the other players in the game. I'm not interested in running up the score."

Massimino praised Heriberto Schwaiwes, the coach of the predominately Argentine team, asserting that he and Schwaiwes were "good friends" and that the Villanova team "had to be ready for a lot of things, especially defensively."

The Wildcats' opponents were "bigger, more experienced and more physical," explains Massimino. Most of the Argentine team were 6'4" or above, and their center, James Zoot, towered at 7'0". Massimino credits his opponents with not allowing center John Pinone and Alex Bradley underneath (the basket), "which not many teams can do."

Massimino, beginning his eighth year as the Wildcats' head coach, feels that the team needs to work on their "defense and execution of the plays," and that "the transition game is horrendous." Part of the problem may have been that the team has scrimmaged only 40 minutes since the official beginning of the team's allowed practice time (26 days).

However, the picture is not all grim for the Cats. "Stewart Granger is more in control of the ball this year," affirms a pleased Massimino, "and Frank (Happy) Dobbs made six baskets in a row (early in the second half)." Dobbs is the Wildcats' freshman recruit out of Allderdice High School in Pittsburgh, Pa. Dobbs scored 14 points for the Cats, along with sophomore guard Stewart Granger. Sienkiewicz tallied 16 for Villanova and center John Pinone was high-scorer for the Cats with 22 points and 16 rebounds. Bradley pulled in seven rebounds while adding 13 points to the scoreboard. Carlos Raffaelli and Timothy Bryant each tallied 22 points for Obras Sanitaruis.

Obras Sanitarius is touring the United States and competing against each of the eight teams in the Big East conference, the league which Villanova is a member for the first time this year. The Argentinians fell to the University of Connecticut 79-71, but won over Boston College 89-80.

Women Runners Claim National Ranking

"Put some pep in your step and some pride in your stride." These were the words of Cross Country Coach Jim Thompson as he encouraged his women harriers on the long road to the national championships. Last Saturday the course came to a successful end in Seattle, Washington at the AIAW Women's Cross Country Championships.

The Villanova Women's Cross Country Team took 11th among twenty two teams in AIAW Division II.

Sue Shea finished 12th overall and was named to the All-American Cross Country Team of 1980.

The next across the line for the Women Wildcat Harriers was co-captain Carol Gilsinger who finished 35th. Gilsinger has been improving steadily all season. The two juniors, Shea and Gilsinger, give the women strength in their front running pair.

Suzanne Shea of the women's cross-country team converses with coach Jim Thompson after she crossed the finish line first for the Wildcats.

Amelia Cain took 3rd for Villanova and finished 78th. Finishing Villanova scoring was co-captain Bev Reilly and Eva Marie Berardi. Reilly, steady woman on the team, placed 90th while Berardi, suffering a sprained ankle mid-course, took 110th.

The results were encouraging, four finishers among the top one hundred and all seven runners returning for another season.

Harriers Place Second in District II Championship Meet

By BOB CONWAY

For the third year in a row the Villanova men's cross country team finished second in the NCAA District II Cross Country Championship held November 15. Penn State, the number two ranked team in the country won the District with impressive style.

Penn State compiled a remarkable 37 points, while Villanova totaled 71 points. The third place finisher was Bucknell. Bucknell was the team that surprised Villanova three weeks ago by beating Villanova to win the IC4A Championship. Princeton and Georgetown filled out the top five teams. These five teams will represent the NCAA District II in the NCAA Division I National Championships being held November 25 at Wichita State.

On this cold, cloudy Saturday the Nittany Lions showed everyone that they deserved their number two ranking as they collected second, third, fifth, eighth and nineteenth place honors. The number one position was captured by Fairleigh Dickenson's Solomon Chebor. He covered the 10,000 meter course in a fine time of 29:19.3. Villanova was able to finish 23 points ahead of Bucknell due to the fine performances of Amos Korir (6), Sydney Maree (10), John Hunter (13), Marcus O'Sullivan (18) and Brian O'Keefe (24).

Senior Amos Korir did well in his second to last race for Villanova. Korir's eligibility ends with the end of the 1980 cross country season. Korir will try to continue his fine performance in his last race. Senior Sydney Maree, who was having difficulties getting untracked in the early going, found the groove last Saturday as he finished with a time of 30:07.2.

John Hunter has been steady all season long. He turned in a time of 30:13.2. Freshmen Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keefe have been doing well all season long.

The Harriers second place finish gives them momentum as they gear up for the finals in Wichita, Kansas.

Walk-Ons Add Dimension

By LARRY GOANOS

When the 1980-81 edition of the Villanova Wildcat basketball team takes the court to open its season against Merrimack College next Friday, five players without scholarships will be in uniform. These players are known as "walk-ons" and they will form an integral part of the team this season.

As any player or coach will tell you, it's not easy to succeed as a walk-on candidate. These walk-on players must endure many early morning pre-season work-outs, and eventually, long, hard, try-outs, without any assurance that all of their effort won't be wasted. Almost thirty walk-on candidates vied for the five openings in the roster. After the final cut had been made, those thirty players had been pared down to five team members.

Although Marty Lutschaunig was cut from the squad last year, he worked on his game during the summer and has come back to make the team. "Marty deserves credit," commented Head Coach Rollie Massimino. "He never gave up and now his hard work and perseverance have paid off." As a 6'1" guard, Marty's accurate shooting and quickness impressed Coach Massimino more than anything else.

Entering his second year as a Wildcat hoopster, Kevin McKenna is a 5'11" guard from Upper Merion High School, where he only started two games in his basketball career. "Kevin is our unsung hero," says Coach Massimino. "He keeps everyone on their toes and working hard."

According to Coach Massimino, Louis Pagan possesses "tremendous jumping ability and toughness." Louis is accustomed to the Villanova basketball system because he played for Coach Massimino during the summer of 1977 in a summer league back in his homeland of Puerto Rico. "I trained hard over the summer," said Pagan. "Yet I was still surprised to make the team."

A graduate of Allentown Central Catholic, Jeff Sherry is an aggressive ball player with potential. "He's a real hard-nose type of player," noted Coach Massimino. "He could get in some playing time once he gets into the chemistry of our system."

For a player who "didn't go out there expecting to make the team," John Sices made out fine. The 6'5" junior forward is the biggest of all the walk-ons. Coach Massimino feels that "He could get some playing time if he keeps progressing. He's constantly working on learning our system." Sices hasn't set any goals for himself yet. "I just want to wait and see how the season progresses."

This season's schedule is a rough one for the Wildcats; Villanova is now in the Big East Conference, which contains such powerhouses as Syracuse, Georgetown and St. John's. Perennial national power Notre Dame is also on the slate, as the Cats will try to avenge last year's one point loss.

The return of Alex Bradley, John Pinone, Tom Sienkiewicz and Aaron Howard, all starters on last year's Eastern Eight Championship squad, will give the team the experience it needs. Sophomore guard Stewart Granger will round out the starting five of what appears to be a team with great potential.

Wildcats Crush Crusaders

By KERRY LYNCH

The Wildcats overwhelmed the Holy Cross Crusaders in a high-scoring, record-breaking 45-13 mismatch last Saturday in Worcester, Mass.

While the offensive line played an extremely well-executed Wishbone to a rushing attack of 321 yards, the defense had five interceptions, held the Crusaders to 168 yards rushing and scored two touchdowns.

This victory, which marked the return of tackles Howie Long and Jim Still, puts the Wildcats within reach of a winning season.

Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck was five for five in extra point attempts and contributed three more points on a career-best field goal — 48 yards. The 48-yarder was two yards shy of a school record.

The Cats hit paydirt on their second possession when QB Pat O'Brien dirscted them to a six-play, 61-yard touchdown score. A forward pitch on an option play to Greg Bedesem pushed the Wildcats 21 yards into Crusader territory. Sydnor's nine-yard catch and Don Ziesel's 9-yard carry up the middle gave O'Brien the ball first and goal at the Holy Cross one-yard line. He faked a hand-off and untouched, carried the ball to the right and across the goal line.

The second touchdown came on an interception of a pass from Crusader QB Boisture intended for Redding. Cat linebacker Anthony Griggs plucked the ball out of the air and returned it 26 yards for the touchdown. Griggs said, "I was playing a certain coverage to drop back and the ball was in my zone, it all happened pretty quick." The interception was the third of his career and the touchdown his first.

Coach Dick Bedesem said, "I thought the defense played very good and very bad. They gave up a lot of yards versus the pass, but they got the turnovers and the interceptions for touchdowns.

The defensive line did so much. Kullman seemed to be in the right spot for several crucial plays. His first quarter fumble recovery gave Villanova its first possession and he had several good stops on the Holy Cross passing game. Dave Martin had an interception, a kickoff return and a punt return for a total of 35 return yards. Joe Makoid and Tom Anthony each chipped in with interceptions to tally 155 return yards for the Wildcats.

Sophomore safety Chris Yurkow intercepted a pass intended for Redding at the Villanova four-yard line. He started downfield and good blocks from Long and Still left him free after another 20 yards. Yurkow said, "I could see out of the corner of my eye and I knew there was nothing between me and the goal line." That "nothing" was 96 yards, a touchdown and a new school record for the longest return on an interception.

Late in the first half, O'Brien directed a series of passes at wide receiver Willie Sydnor to move the Cats into scoring position. O'Brien threw a 42-yard bomb and Sydnor (six catches for 104 yards) had to fight for it in the air against Crusader defensive backs Poeter and McNally. The catch positioned the Cats at the Cross four-yard line and there Passman bulled into the endzone on the next play.

The Cat offense took over again in the fourth quarter for two last touchdowns. Freshman QB Kevin Ingram conducted a series of handoffs to Craig Dunn who carried the ball four times on the same play pattern. Ingram ran in from the 12 on a right option to score his first career touchdown.

The last score came on a series of short hand-off carries after a 42-yard run by Dunn. Mike Keppick carried in from the one-yard line for his first career touchdown.

Just as the game seemed to be over, the Crusaders scored on a series of passes when tight end Reks bulled in from the three-yard line. The two-point conversion was unsuccessful.

The season record, after the blitz of Holy Cross, upped to 5-5 and the deciding game is Saturday against Temple at Villanova Stadium.

A CHANGING PERSPECTIVE

By PATRICK FLYNN

The time has come to retract a statement that was made in this space about a year-and-a-half ago.

Editorial

It was March 1979, when the regrettable line was blurted out. The unsophisticated slob who writes this column was delirious over the closing of the college basketball season and was being strangled by the optimism of a new baseball campaign. It was the gap between the two seasons that caused this Neanderthal to write, "The NBA doesn't really get exciting until playoff time and hockey never really gets exciting, period."

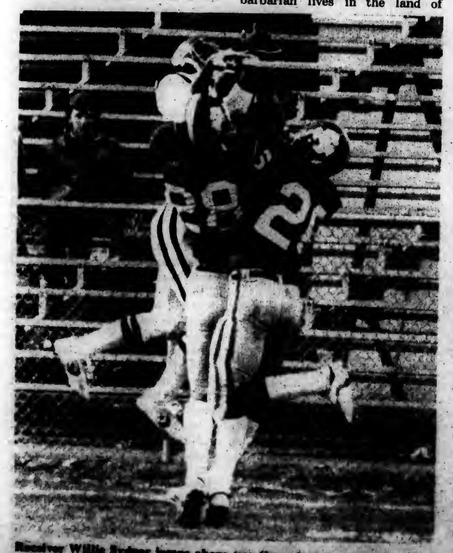
Perhaps it was force of habit that made it happen. You see, this barbarian lives in the land of minor league hockey, with the Baltimore Clippers of the Southern Hockey League only blocks away and the Washington Capitals some 40 miles down the road. Neither club will ever be used as advertisement for the world's fastest game. So at the time, hockey seemed like a great way to pass the time if you were stranded in Saskatchawan waiting for moose season to open.

Living among Flyers' fans wore off some of this crude ignorance. Many games have been viewed on TV, with increasing interest, in the past two seasons. But hockey just doesn't come across well on the tube. It's just too fast to fit television's maniacal desire for eternal close-ups. Until you have a team to root for, you'd be better off watching reruns of "My Mother, the Car."

So while the game was making a good impression, it still seemed like a filler between baseball seasons. There lingered the conviction that the rabid Islanders' fan who inhabits the other half of my room only acted that way out of consolation for the heartbreak that comes with being a Giants' fan and a Mets' fan for so long.

Until Saturday. You see, partly out of divine providence and mostly out of the generosity of a good friend, the doubter was able to catch the Flyers-Red Wings game at the Spectrum. And, wrapped around two marvelous traffic jams and a pair of stomach aches, one from missing hinch and the other from eating one of those "hot soft pretsels" they pawn off outside, were several hours' worth of first-rate excitement. A game that looks and sounds so beautiful. A real treat. A cup-runneth-over afternoon.

I stand corrected.



Receiver Willie Sydnor jumps above two Crusaders to snag a catch for 42 yards.

Traffic Safety Questioned

By ANNE SUYDAM

ing a car accident last which a Villanova student ly hurt, concern for cam-blic safety has been raised. main concern is about the of Lancaster Pike and Avenue. This is a heavy traf-and many students cross from the main parking lot. enting on the safety of rner, Rev. John E. Deegan, vice president for student id "A number of proposals been submitted." Some ideas the possibility of depressing ter Pike to allow students over the road, the con-ion of a pedestrian bridge the lowering of the speed After research, however, the speed limit of 35 miles per is considered safe."

Deegan commented that of the proposals have come ght" because of the ex-pense. He also felt that a foot-bridge would not stop the students from crossing in the middle of the street or from the areas where they park their cars. Deegan said, "I really don't know what more you can do. What we have done seems feasible." A delayed light has been installed and hand operated light controls are in use.

Ron Slego, a civil engineer with the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, feels that nothing more can be done. Slego went to Villanova and remembers when he used to cross Lancaster Pike from wherever he parked his car. When asked about the possibility of a construction of a footbridge at the corner of Ithan Avenue and Lancaster Pike, Slego felt it would be "worthless." He feels that the students would not utilize it and that there is no place to put a foot-bridge at this corner. "It is a really difficult problem."

Slego also explained that foot-bridges are usually built over interstate highways where there is no access over the road on foot. He feels that the only way a bridge is fully utilized is if it is mandated. He said that, "Our department is sensitive to public opinion" but he just does not know what more can be done about the intersection on Lancaster Pike and Ithan Avenue.

Slego was asked if another person were hit or killed at this intersection, would that be reason enough for his department to take action. His reply was "probably not." He explained that if any action were to be taken, the pressure would have to be put on by the university itself. He said that full student support, administrative support and Radnor Township support would have to be gained before his department could consider any action. Slego commented that this corner is a "tickly situation."

The University of Pennsylvania constructed a footbridge over 38th Street in 1975. Beth McDonald, a secretary in the university's physical plant feels that the bridge has been put to good use. "There is no other place to cross other than walking up to the corner. It has been put to good use because the residencies are on one side (of 38th Street) and the main campus is on the other side."

V.U. Student Injured in Accident

By BILL CLARK

A Villanova graduate student s struck by an automobile while ossing Lancaster Avenue on onday evening, November 24.

According to Radnor police, ula Paprcka caster Avenue approximately 80 feet from the intersection with Ithan Avenue when she was hit by a car driven by David P. Schroeder of Ardmore.

The accident occurred during a slight drizzle. Radnor police listed the road condition as "wet" due to heavy rain throughout the day.

Paprcka was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital where she was in intensive care under "guarded" condition.

"She was in bad shape," said Officer Crawford of Radnor police. "Her legs were broken and I think she had skull injuries."

According to the police report of the incident, Schroeder's car, a red Peugeot station wagon, was travelling west on Lancaster Avenue at approximately 30 miles per hour. The speed limit on the road is 35 miles per hour.

The report also said that Schroeder's car had a green light at the Lancaster-Ithan intersection.

Schroeder's car was travelling in the passing lane. There was a vehicle on his right, so he was unable to swerve to the side of the road. He then applied his brakes and skidded into the girl.

"Man, I didn't see her," said Schroeder after the accident. "She just ran out against the light."

The account given by David Papone, a Stanford Hall resident and witness of the accident, differs with the Radnor report.

"I heard no screech," said Papone. The car did not come to a stop or slow down.

"The car was going very fast. "I'm sure it was going over the speed limit," continued Papone.

Papone also disagreed as to the location of the accident. "The car did not hit her that far down (80 feet). She must have been thrown pretty far."

Jim Maguire, another witness, said he was approaching the intersection from Ithan Avenue when he saw Paprcka. "When I got to the road, she was halfway out trying to cross. When I was at the corner, I had the red light," said Maguire.

"She saw the station wagon coming, but she didn't know which way to go to get out of the way," said Maguire.

"She wasn't crossing 80 feet from the light," added Maguire.

Students Testify At PUC Hearings

By ANNE SUYDAM

A hearing regarding the safety the pedestrian crossings at the ova train station was held by the Public Utilities Commission (PUC) yesterday in the Connelly Center.

Judge Martin R. Fountain presided over the hearing, and representatives from the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT), Septa and Amtrak were present.

The hearing began at 10 a.m. with an on-sight viewing of the Route 320 bridge, pedestrian tunnel and train station. The hearing then continued with testimony from Villanova faculty members and students in the Wayne Room of the Connelly Center.

Evelyn Behanna, assistant dean of nursing, was asked if she would ever use the Rt. 320 bridge, and she responded, "No, because I am not going to take my life into my hands." She also said that she felt, as a female, that the tunnel is unsafe due to the possibility of being attacked if alone. Behanna testified that she feels the only safe

Senate Effectiveness Examined

By BILL ROCK

According to figures released by the University Senate, approximately 53 percent of the resolutions passed by the Senate over the last six years have been approved by the President or the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Angelo Armenti

Since 1974, according to these figures, 97 Senate resolutions have been forwarded to the President, with 51 of them being approved. Nine have been rejected outright, while the Senate has received no word on another seven. The remaining 31 have been "acknowledged, considered, or returned."

In the 1979-80 school year, 11 of 16 resolutions sent to the President or Board were approved. The one resolution rejected was a Senate motion to delay the vote of the Board on the Labrecque Committee report on athletic policy. This ad-hoc committee recommended the construction of a multi-purpose indoor athletic facility.

According to Dr. Angelo Armenti, chairman of the Senate, this is not a bad record. "Ultimately, the effectiveness of the Senate has to be based on approvals (of resolutions sent to the President), he stated. We are batting 50 percent. That cannot be considered a failure."

Armenti believes that the Board of Trustees does see the Senate as a valid organ of the University.

"Students and faculty have more say in governance than ever before. I am not saying it is sufficient, but it is more than ever before."

"The Board recognizes the Senate as a legitimate body," he stated. "I think many people misunderstand the charge that was originally given to the Senate.

"The Board gave certain responsibilities to the Senate when it was created. These responsibilities were very carefully delineated. It has no authority to make policy; it can only recommend. It cannot implement policy either. Therefore, the Senate is recognized as legitimate, but within the confines of its definition."

Armenti admitted that even senators tend to forget what the powers of the Senate actually are.

"The problem between the Board of Trustees and the Senate comes when we mistake how much authority we have," he said. "We have to remember that if the administration does not agree with what we propose, that's the end of it. As a practical matter, though, it should be noted that when the Senate has voted almost unanimously, the Administration has almost always approved the measure. They are not legally bound, but they have felt the force of moral force."

Armenti concluded by stressing that the chief benefit of the Senate is that it insures that students and faculty have input into decisions that affect them.

"One of the most important accomplishments has been establishing protocol for the selection and evaluation of deans which provides for student and faculty participation," he stated. "Students and faculty have more say in governance than ever before. I am not saying it is sufficient, but it is more than ever before."

Student-Faculty trip to London during the Spring Break (February 27 through March 7) is being prepared. Trip includes seven nights accommodations in a hotel centrally located in London. Price is $629 with a Philadelphia airport departure on the 27th of February. Please leave name, address and telephone number in Dr. Reino's box in the English Office (201 Vasey Hall). Please act quickly to reserve a place. Side tripe to Tower of London, Shakespeare's birthplace Canterbury Cathedral, and Stonehenge are planned.

Big Brothers /Sisters

On Sunday, December 7, we will hold our Christmas Liturgy and Party. All are encouraged to attend since this will be the last time we will get together with our little brothers/sisters for the semester. The festivities will begin at 11:00 a.m. and end around 5:00, and they will be held in the East Lounge. We remind all to bring a small gift ($2.00-$5.00) already wrapped so that Santa can distribute them. Please tell your little brother or sister to be in the schoolyard by 10:15. Looking forward to seeing everyone there.

There will be one final meeting on Monday, December 10 in St. Rita's Chapel at 4:45. Please try to attend!

Campus Ministry

A Catholic parish in Pottsville, PA is in need of a young man to work for around one year with "... the kids of the parish and of our immediate area. They have a fatalism that is devastating and along with this is a serious drug and alcohol problem."

They are "looking for a man (so that he could live at the rectory) who would be willing to spend lots of time and effort working with our high school students and young adults."

Because the parish, is poor the pastor can offer only a stipend, room and board.

Interested persons should contact Gary Belkot in the Campus Ministry Center.

The Augustinians will sponsor a retreat at Villanova December 28-30, for men who may be considering the possibility of a vocation to the religious life or priesthood. For further information — contact: Fr. John Stack, O.S.A., 108 Corr Hall, Ext. 7595.

S.N.A.P.

The Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania will hold the next meeting on Tuesday, December 9 at 7:30 in Bartley 112. A Christmas party is planned for this date.

Drama

The Annenberg Center will be quite festive in December when a production of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol opens in the Zellerbach Theatre for two weeks from December 17 through 28. Staged by the McCarter Theatre Company, Dickens' famous Christmas story has been adapted by Nagle Jackson who already has had great success with the play as produced yearly at the Milwaukee Repertory Theater.

The McCarter production at the Annenberg Center features a large revolving set designed to be an imaginative visual experience, depicting the rich color of industrial London circa 1843. The audience can share Scrooge's fear as he encounters the ghost of Jacob Marley and the three Christmas ghosts, sympathize with the plight of Tiny Tim and the Cratchit family, and finally be rewarded with a happy ending for all.

The play, directed by McCarter's Artistic Director Nagle Jackson, features G. Wood as Scrooge. Mr. Wood portrayed Scrooge in the Milwaukee Repertory Theater production directed by Nagle Jackson, and has been at Annenberg in Moby Dick Rehearsed, Hay Fever, and The Miser. The role of Jacob Morley will be played by Jay Doyle who appeared recently in Moby Dick Rehearsed, and many other McCarter productions. The rest of the company are from the McCarter resident acting ensemble and include Robert Lanchester, Gary Roberts, Bruce Somerville, John Mansfield, Libby Boone, Richard Risso, Chris Hanlin, Greg Thornton, Harriet Hall, Karl Light, Tom Robbins, Leslie Geraci, Marci Rigsby, and Jay Doyle.

Dean Questions Student Remarks

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

A Villanova student was recently called to Acting Dean of Men Jerry Martin's office because of a remark the student made regarding Villanova's alcohol policy in the September 19 issue of The Villanovan.

Senior Paul Pizzani was quoted in the On Campus section of The Villanovan, saying, "I feel people should drink whenever they want. If people coming from out of state, it's a real problem. The policy is getting a little ridiculous. If anyone tries to break up one of my parties, I'll shoot them." The remark was made in response to a question asking students what they knew about Villanova's alcohol policy and what they thought the policy should be.

Explaining why he asked to speak to Pizzani regarding his remark, Martin said, "I find it necessary to talk to a good number of students about their responsibilities to the community. As a rule, the reason I would talk to students about their responsibilities would be if somebody reports students, but it is often that I have questions about students carrying out their responsibilities."

"There was a question regarding Paul's understanding of the alcohol policy. I don't think Paul was surprised or distressed about my sharing my concerns with him. He wasn't getting himself in trouble at all. I felt a responsibility to Paul as someone I know and as a Villanova student. Our responsibility is to have an impact on students — to make a difference in people's lives," commented Martin.

"I don't think Paul violated any regulation — I just had a concern," emphasized Martin, explaining, "I try to communicate these concerns. It distresses me to hear from a presumably intelligent person that they don't understand the problems," said Martin.

Pizzani, asked about the meeting, concurred with Martin, saying, "He was really nice about it. It was no big deal. He just wanted to make sure I understood the alcohol policy and he explained it to me. He said if any of my friends didn't understand it, to have them come in and he would explain it to them. He only talked to me for a few minutes."

This is not the first time the Dean of Men's office has questioned remarks made in the newspaper regarding the alcohol policy.

On September 26, Martin's secretary called the Villanovan office asking for the name of a student whose letter to the editor appeared in the September 26 Villanovan. The letter questioned Villanova's alcohol policy and the student's name was listed as being on file with The Villanovan. The secretary was informed that such names are not given out and that she should speak to the editor-in-chief about the matter. The matter was pursued no further.

Free of Summons, Prof Still Wary

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

A Villanova professor who refused four times to obey a call to testify before a Federal grand jury is no longer under subpoena, at least for the present time.

Dr. William Waegel, assistant professor in the sociology department, was subpoenaed by the U.S. Attorney's Office to testify on information divulged to him involving the planning of a criminal act.

Contacted last week, Peter F. Vaira, U.S. attorney for eastern Pennsylvania, stated, "There is no situation involving Dr. Waegel. He is not under subpoena by my office."

Commenting on his current status, Waegel claimed that the only thing preventing another subpoena was his threat to go public with the "full story" of his conflict with the Federal government.

Waegel said he would have to hold his revelations back for now because they were the "trump card" in his dealings with Vaira's office. "They can come back with it (the subpoena) later," he reasoned.

The U.S. Attorney's Office was criticized by Waegel for "taking the path of least resistance" rather than conducting an exhaustive investigation of the case in question. The most comfortable thing for them to do is to pin on me," he insisted.

"That's the craziest thing I've ever heard of in my life, to be upset that someone would take a shortcut in an investigation," said Vaira in response to Waegel's remarks regarding his office's investigative practices.

Waegel does not believe that the government has any vendetta against him. If they did happen to, however, he said that "the only possible cause for that could be my refusing to crack. They're not accustomed to that."

Regarding the defense fund set up by some of Waegel's colleagues to cover the cost of his legal counsel, Dr. Barry Young, also an assistant professor of sociology and one of the organizers of the defense fund, disclosed that as of December 3, $1700 had been raised, $300 short of the $2000 estimate for the legal fees. (The original estimate of $2900 for defense fees has been lowered.)

Contributions to the defense fund were reportedly still coming in as late as last week. Young was encouraged by this, noting that an inter-office memo was the only notice given to faculty and staff save for an article printed in the November 7 issue of The Villanovan.

Most of the contributions to the fund have been donated by faculty and staff members, but Young acknowledged that students have provided a portion of the support.

The organizers of the defense fund are considering two alternatives if sufficient funds are not soon received to cover Waegel's defense fees. According to Young, one alternative under consideration would involve a rally to possibly be held in the Connelly Center mall area; the other calls for the placement of collection cans throughout the campus.

"I feel people should drink whenever they want. For people coming from out of state, it's a real problem. The policy is getting a little ridiculous. If anyone tries to break up one of my parties, I'll shoot them.'

Grad Introduces Anti-Abortion Ammendment

By KATHY SCANLON

State Senator, Steven Freind, a Villanova graduate, introduced an anti-abortion amendment into the legislature this past September.

The bill, known as the Hyde Amendment, prohibits federal funding to finance abortions except in cases where the pregnancy is a result of rape, incest or endangers the life of the mother.

This past June 30, the U.S. Supreme Court made a decision in favor of the pro-life movement by ruling the Hyde Amendment constitutional. On November 18 the bill was passed in final forms and is now in the hands of the governor. The governor's decision to sign or veto the bill is due December 19. He has 30 days, rather than the usual 10, to make the decision due to the fact that the legislature is out of session until January.

"If the bill is vetoed," said Freind, "and I sincerely hope it will not be, an attempt will be made to override it."

Freind has no doubts as to the effectiveness of the bill if it is passed. He states, "Last year 10,303 tax-funded abortions were performed. If my bill had been passed then, only 98 would have been performed. The bill will cut abortions by 99 percent."

Friend explained that the wording of the bill was chosen very scrupulously. "Too many loopholes can be found if we're not careful. For instance, the Hyde Amendment uses the phrases endangers the life of the mother." If the phrase 'health of the mother' were used, women could demand an abortion for reasons as trival as a pimple."

Planned Parenthood and other women's groups are actively lobbying against the bill. A large rally was recently held in Harrisburg.

Dorm Fires Set

By BILL McKERNAN

A series of fires swept through Sullivan Hall on Saturday night, November 22.

According to Anthony Martin, acting dean of men, there were ten instances of fires in trash cans in public areas. Most of the trash cans were in the hallways and stairwells.

Martin also said that some notices on doors were set afire.

There was no major damage to Sullivan Hall, according to Martin. No one has been accused of setting the fires.

Jeff Page Photo

Martin stated that it is possible to find the people responsible. "It is extremely unlikely that no one saw anything," said Martin. "The smoke could have caused some very serious problems."

During the week of November 16-22, all residence halls on campus participated in announced fire drills.

The purpose of these drills, according to Martin, "was to get resident students more concerned with fire safety."

Martin stated that another reason for the drills was to test the accuracy of the equipment. Reports confirm that most of the alarms in Sullivan Hall failed to ring.

Martin expressed concern for the abused fire equipment. "We need to know, for the safety of all residents, that the equipment is in good shape," said Martin.

Martin considered the drills a success, and stated that they are planned for next semester.

Editorial Staff Selected

The Villanovan elected William Clark to serve as ditor-in-chief for the Spring and Fall semesters, 1981. Clark will take the place of senior English major Marianne Lavelle, who has served as Editor since last December.

Clark is a junior accounting major who has covered news for the paper since his freshman year. This year, he has served as assistant news editor.

New associate editors will be Robert Courey, a sophomore electrical engineer major, and Sharon Winters, a junior communication arts major. Courey has written features stories since his freshman year, and served as features editor last year. Winters has written for the paper since January and served as assistant entertainment editor last year.

Managing editor will be Christine Kitzmann, a sophomore business administration major. Kitzmann has been with the business staff since her freshman year.

Sophomore Cindy Savarere will take over as business editor, and Dawn Miller, also a sophomore, will be Advertising Editor.

News editors will be sophomores Mary Anne Granger and Anne Suydam. Both Granger and Suydam are communication arts majors.

To serve as features editors will be Laurie Almeda and Melissa Araya, both communication arts majors. Communications and business major Kathi Iannacone will serve as a assistant features editor.

To serve as entertainment editors will be junior English majors Amy MacLachlan and Chris Slawecki. Jerry Arth, sophomore Honors major, will be assistant ntertainment editor.

Criminal justice major Jim Femia and psychology major Bob Conway, both juniors, will co-edit the sports section. Serving assistant sports editor will be sophomore Kerry Lynch.

Photography editors will be juniors Charlie Guida and Jeff Page.

Tuscany Rediscovered

Summer Trip to Italy Sponsored

For the tenth consecutive summer Villanova University and Rosemont College are jointly sponsoring a month long travel and study program in Italy.

For the month of June students will live in the town of Siena, near Florence, and take courses in History, Art History, Italian language and literature, and Studio Art. They will visit Florence frequently, as well as Pisa, Padua, Perugia, Assisi, and Monte Oliveto. There will be two days in Venice, and two in Rome, where additional lectures, gallery tours, and sightseeing will be conducted.

Also planned is a trip to the medieval hilltop cities of Tuscany, where urban civilization first emerged out of the somber gloom of the dark ages.

"Tuscany has been the focal point of civilization since prehistoric times" says Dr. Radan, director of the program.

"The larger cities, such as Florence and Siena, as well as the hilltowns of Tuscany, have an uninterrupted artistic tradition which continues to our day. This is probably the best part of the world," Dr. Radan continues, "for understanding the important role which the arts have played in the development of civilization."

The program is open to college, pre-college, and non-matriculating students and adults for college credit or just for the sheer fun of it. Up to six semester credits are offered for the month of study.

In past years participants have come from a wide variety of colleges, geographical locations, and academic backgrounds.

Housewives and graduate students, young and old, complemented each other in a warm and comfortable atmosphere.

One year several students won prizes in a local art show, much to the amazement of the Italian students. An exhibit of the artwork produced by last year's participants will be held in the Villanova art gallery in the Connelly Center from February 2 to 6, 1981, with an information reception and slide presentation on Wednesday, Feb. 4, 1981.

Courses given are: History of Italian Cities; Art History (the Italian Renaissance); Italian language — conversatiqnal, basic Italian, Dante in Italian or in trans lation; Studio Art — watercolor and drawing in an inspiring countryside and exciting townscape.

The Renaissance is a natural focal point for the course work, but living and studying in Italy provides a total kind of experience; a special opportunity to learn, absorb, and enjoy Italy's many facets, the warmth and beauty of its people, its history, and its culture.

The 1981 price will be $1,[illegible] Airfare is additional at a [illegible] group rate. Participants can spe[illegible] additional time in Europe af[illegible] the program ends. The cost [illegible] cludes three meals a day in Sie[illegible] which is the headquarters for t[illegible] program, all transportation a[illegible] transfers in Italy, all hotels on [illegible] overnight trips and in Siena, a[illegible] tuition for 6 credits. Presidential Address Approved

By ANNE MARIE URBINATO

In an effort to enhance student-board communication, the University Senate voted in favor of recommending that the Board of Trustees invite the student body president to address their spring meeting.

The motion, introduced by Student President Henry Amoroso, was changed from the University Senate granting permission to allow the Student Body President to attend to it just recommending that the board invite him. The senate passed the new motion by a 25-2 margin.

The Senate Planning and Priorities Committee also submitted a budget priorities report as requested by the October 24 meeting. In the report, one committee grouped priorities for allocation of excess monies in three categories. They recommended that fund-raising development and energy conservation be considered highest priority while financial aid and faculty salary adjustment be considered high priority. Academic and dorm acquisition were ranked least among priorities.

Faculty Senator Kondolean requested time for the Senate to consider the report and call an extraordinary meeting in December or January for further discussion. They passed the motion with no oppositions for a January meeting.

The senate passed a motion also introduced by Amoroso requesting the Ad-Hoc committee to address the need for the beautification of campus grounds.

Also on the agenda was the status report of present course/teacher evaluation policy. Presently, they are surveying chairpersons and students and will submit their results by the end of January.

Commenting on the passage of the motion, Henry Amoroso, student body president, said, "I think it is the establishment of an important part of communication between the students and [illegible] Board of Trustees.

"The whole rationale behi[illegible] this address is to establish co[illegible] munication and to bring many [illegible] the student concerns to the Bo[illegible] of Trustees," said Amoroso.

"A similar resolution w[illegible] passed a few years ago by t[illegible] Senate. But this motion also i[illegible] cluded the Faculty Assemb[illegible] chairperson and the Vic[illegible] President for Academic Affai[illegible] No action was taken by the Bo[illegible] on this motion," said Amoroso.

"I am very hopeful that Fath[illegible] President Driscoll will accept th[illegible] motion. I feel it is very importa[illegible] to open up this avenue of co[illegible] munication," said Amoroso.

Faculty Meeting Bars Students

By VINCENT HAUSMANN and BILL CLARK

[illegible] Villanovan reporters were [illegible] entrance to a Faculty As[illegible] meeting convened to dis[illegible] an investigative report on the [illegible] roversial Presidential ap[illegible] ment of Vincent Sherry, as[illegible] professor of English last [illegible]

[illegible] students approached the [illegible] Assembly chairman, Dr. [illegible] Hahn, of the political [illegible] department, at the [illegible] mber 25 meeting requesting [illegible] mission to attend. A motion [illegible] made by Hahn to discuss the [illegible] ibility. After some ten [illegible] utes discussion among the [illegible] ty members, the students [illegible] denied entrance.

Jeff Hahn

According to a source who wished to remain anonymous the vote was 12-10.

"It was a divided vote," stated Hahn. There was considerable sentiment on the part of faculty members to admit the reporters to the meeting. Others felt that the discussion would be constrained. Obviously, the majority felt this," continued Hahn.

The reporters had assured the assembly before the vote on entrance that they would not quote anyone without their authorization.

The Faculty Assembly constitution does not state that meetings are closed to the general public.

"There is nothing in the Faculty Assembly charter that prohibits us from having a closed meeting," declared Hahn. "There is nothing in the constitution that requires a public meeting."

Hahn stated that the move was nothing personal against the newspaper but that the meeting was closed to the general public.

"The Faculty Assembly is independent of the Senate," continued Hahn. "It makes its own rules."

Hahn relayed that aside from the no entrance vote the members discussed the committee investigative report on the appointment, compiled by Dr. Hahn, Dr. Michael Burke, and Rev. Lawrence Gallen.

"We received the report and discussed it. We passed a resolution accepting the report and drafting a resolution setting up protocol for an ad hoc committee to investigate the issue," stated Hahn.

Hahn confirmed the investigative report's finding that a discrepancy exists between the actual paractice of hiring faculty and the written material that pertains to hiring.

"The practice has been more positive than what was written," continued Hahn. "This resolution will draft something so that what is written will conform to what is actually done in practice."

The Sherry appointment broke with tradition of adhering to faculty recommendations in selecting new faculty members. The investigative report also concluded that "outside sources, including a major donor," influenced President Driscoll's decision.

With regard to the influence exerted by wealthy donors, Hahn stated: "In principle, the question was discussed at the meeting. We look with disfavor concerning the involvement of wealthy donors in the job selection process. That is flat and clear."

"The major problem with this issue," relayed Hahn, "is to ensure the role of the faculty in the hiring process. In this case, we were not properly consulted and that is very important."

PUC Hearing Held

[illegible]sing facility would be a pedes[illegible] bridge.

[illegible]ister Mary Cribben, an as[illegible]iate professor in the graduate [illegible] and sciences department, [illegible]ified that she uses the tunnel, [illegible] said, "I am feeling less confi[illegible] these days with the attacks [illegible] people."

[illegible]even Villanova students gave [illegible]timony, and all stated that the [illegible]te 320 bridge is unsafe for ped[illegible]rian crossing. The students [illegible]id that there is no room [illegible] a person and two cars to be [illegible]sing at the same time, and two [illegible]dents said that they have almost been hit by cars on the bridge. The students also felt that the tunnel is inadequate for the railroad crossing, mainly because of the frequent flooding and poor lighting of the tunnel at night.

Discussing the case before the hearing began yesterday, James Patterson, the attorney representing Villanova, explained, "We want to avoid a decision that the railroads will solve the water problem and then it will be all right, because that's not all right as far as I am concerned." He stated that he and his partner, Larry McDowell, want to convince the judge that the present facilities for getting across the bridge are unsafe.

The PUC also heard testimony regarding the case October 7, at the State Building in Philadelphia, and it was established then that the pedestrian tunnel is adequate but that the Rt. 320 bridge is not. However, the tunnel still presents two main problems, flooding and night safety.

The issue of pedestrian safety at the station was raised after the death of a Villanova student in October, 1979. The student was killed trying to cross the tracks when the tunnel was flooded due to a rainstorm.

A decision regarding the case is still pending.

Lights Installed

By JAMES DELORENZO

After a few weeks delay, Villanova's Goudreau Stadium is now equipped with lights. The six lighting standards, each 100 feet tall, were erected Wednesday after Radnor Township's approval of a zoning variance.

Thomas Trucks, director of Maintenance, said there was no major problem at the township meeting on November 20, although one neighbor was worried about the possibility of larger crowds at night games. The neighbor also was concerned with the problems related to other night games, but the lights were not opposed themselves. With the higher light standards, Trucks said, it was easier to focus the lights directy on the field.

The major question thatheld up the project was whether the stadium lights were a new structure or an addition to an already existing structure. The height of new institutional structures is limited to 50 feet in Radnor Township.

Since the bases for the poles were built in September, Trucks was worried that the poles would not fit on the bases correctly, but "everything went perfectly and no adjustments were neeeded," said Trucks.

Trucks was glad that the lights were finally erected, because he worried that they would be vandalized on the ground or develop defects that would affect their performance.

"This will be a great addition to the community," said Trucks. "It will make the field more usable to students."

"Before, intramurals had to stop when it got dark. Now, we can extend that time to possibly 10 p.m." he continued.

Trucks expects that the lights will be working within two weeks. This delay is due to addtional wiring that is required.

The erection of the lights completes a three-phase renovation project at Villanova stadium. The Astroturf field and Rubaturf track were completed earlier this year.

There was an error in the November 21 story entitled "Minority Increase Urged."

The story stated that Barron Perry was hired as an admissions officer for the recruitment of minorities. In reality, he was hired as Director of Admissions and Recruitment for University College. His responsibilities include the recruitment of minorities, but are not limited to such recruitment.

The Villanovan regrets the error.

Incidents Show Students as Outsiders

Students Deserve Information

"A state which dwarfs its men, in order that they may be more docile instruments in its hands even for beneficial purposes — will find that with small men no great thing can really be accomplished."

John Stuart Mill
On Liberty

The contribution of the student body at Villanova is often overlooked. Student tuition and other fees represent roughly eighty percent of Villanova's revenues. Our academic and athletic achievements bring prestige and money. In fact, the main purpose of this university is the education of students.

Because students are such a vital part of this institution, we deserve to be informed about its actions and beliefs. Yet, two separate and seemingly unrelated incidents reported in this week's issue show that students at Villanova are still considered to be "outsiders."

The first incident involves a student being called before the Dean of Men about a comment in the "On Campus" section of the Villanovan. The question asked the student was "What do you know about Villanova's alcohol policy and what do you think it should be?" Coupled with this is the Office's attempt to uncover the identity of a person writing an anonymous "Letter to the Editor" about the same subject.

Apparently, the Dean felt that these people were misinformed about the school's alcohol policy. No one can blame the Dean for trying to explain the university's position to these people. That is part of his job.

Perhaps, though, the administration overlooks the reason that students are misinformed. Certainly, many other students are unaware of Villanova's alcohol policy. And yet, why doesn't the administration make an attempt to fully explain it to everyone?

The Villanovan reported on the school's alcohol policy in a previous issue. In trying to do the story, however, we were confronted with many administrators unwilling to discuss the issue or trying to cover it up with public relations jingles.

The students at Villanova deserve better. Perhaps the best way to be informed at Villanova is to make a radical statement and wait for someone to come to you to explain the reality of the situation.

The second incident concerns two Villanovan reporters who were not permitted to attend a Faculty Assembly meeting. When these two reporters entered the meeting, they were told to leave while the faculty members present voted whether they could attend. A majority of the faculty voted against this.

The issue being discussed at the meeting was the Presidential appointment of a faculty member. This issue concerns not only the faculty, but everyone at Villanova. If some impropriety was committed, everyone should know, not just a select few. After all, it is the students who paying the majority of faculty salaries.

This paper also reported on the Presidential appointment in previ issues. Yet, we were fought most of the way by people claiming that issue was "none of our business." The issue at hand is not whether Villanovan knows about the incident; the issue is why the incident curred at all.

On these two issues (and certainly many more), the Villanovan been virtually the only source of information for the student body. This our responsibility, and one that will be taken seriously.

Hopefully, the Villanova community will make our job of report the news much easier in the future. Communication is vital to the ma tenance and development of everyone at Villanova. It is important that do the best job possible.

In the meantime, we will continue to fairly report all the news Villanova, whether it requires investigation or not. After all, if we do who else will?

Hey! The cards are on the table . . . Plain as day!

ime to Realize a Serious Problem

Minority Recruitment Important

The recent election of Ronald Reagan is being interpreted as a victory the free-enterprise system over the "welfare state." The so-called oral Majority" and other conservatives think it is more than that.

Senator Paul Laxalt, Reagan's chief campaign aide, has already introced a "family protection act" which would repeal most aid-to-education ograms in favor of more grants to state and local governments and other ts in federal spending programs.

The general feeling is that everyone should be given complete freedom the marketplace and our society will be a fair one. Welfare and other cial programs will undoubtedly be cut.

This general feeling also seems to be spreading into other sectors of ciety. Most newspapers and magazines are reporting on increased anti-nority violence throughout the nation. Unfortunately, many people tie norities to the "welfare state."

Perhaps there is the feeling that minorities are somehow asking for o much from society. Perhaps they have complained for too long.

Our society must begin to realize that minorities, and particularly ose of the inner cities, have the same dreams, hopes, and needs as yone else. They want to be given a chance.

The irony of the situation is that many minorities are not able to com-te equally in the marketplace. The reason for this is that they do not assess the very things that many right-wing groups are trying to deny em; a decent standard of living and a quality education.

It is sad, especially sad, because we can do something to rectify the uation. But many of us do not even recognize that a problem exists.

Most of us at Villanova come from middle and upper-class back-ounds. We come from "suburbia." We do not see the need for social pro-ams in our daily lives.

Try going into inner city slums and tell those people that government s done too much for them. Just try.

Unemployment among inner city youths runs approximately fifty per-nt in some areas. Some say that government has done too much. These ople say that government hasn't done enough.

One answer to this problem of increased welfare rolls is to give the sadvantaged the skills required to perform meaningful work. This in-olves recruiting minorities for our colleges and technical schools. This in-olves Villanova.

Two reports, one by the Social Action Committee of the University enate and another by the Middle States Evaluation Committee, have said at Villanova has not done enough to recruit minorities. The Middle tates report said "we believe one reason for the deficiency in this area is the unfortunate identification of minority students as academically disadvantaged students."

These students are no less intelligent than anyone else. But, most minority youth are not afforded the opportunity of going to prestigious "private" schools. Many go to school in fear.

Villanova, as a Christian institution, has a social responsibility. An effort must be made to attract qualified minority students. The effort must be more than symbolic. It must be tangible and sincere.

No one claims that this effort will solve the problem that exists in our society. It goes far beyond our Main Line abode.

Sociologists, philosophers, and politicians have offered proposals to rectify the inequities that exist in our society. Their successes have been token at best. Yet, the problem will never be solved if Villanova and society do not make an effort.

Accidents do not have to happen

A Safe University Should be First

As the accident toll increases on campus, the swiftness of preventive ction must also increase. So far, the measures to prevent injuries and atalities at Villanova have fallen short of adequate.

Villanova is located on the intersection of two major highways. Route 20 and Route 30 are heavily travelled with fast-moving traffic. The speed imits (the limit on the roads are 35 m.p.h.) are not sufficient to insure the afety of the large, pedestrian student body.

Earlier this year, recommendations were made for the installation of crosswalk on Spring Mill road. However, prior to the crosswalk construction, several things must be done: a sidewalk must be constructed rom the Conrail parking lot to the crosswalk; the St. Mary's gate below he overpass must be closed and a new entrance must be built.

Students continue to cross Route 320 through the overpass because it s easier than walking up the road to the traffic light near the law school.

In fact, students will continue to use the unsafe method of crossing he street and going through the underpass because it is easy. The gate of t. Mary's is open for them to use; they will endanger their lives because he school is accessible to them at that portion of the route.

It is evident that the gate must be closed and a new one opened near he proposed crosswalk. Of course, the proposed walkway must be taken ff the drawing board and given life in order to insure lives.

Another difficult area is the highway in front of the University. Route 0 has recently claimed another injury; a student is still hospitalized ecause of the threat that this major highway poses. It is unrealistic to ove the road or the University. Alternative measures must be taken.

Villanova has a large hedge across the front of the campus. This enures that students do not trample the lawn; they must use the sidewalk nd "take the long" route around the front lawn. The walk connects to alkways on the grounds. A similar solution could be utilized to prevent students from harming themselves.

A fence or hedge could be used in front of the parking lot on Route 30. This would prevent students from crossing the street at various points rather than walking to the traffic light.

A fence, of course, is only a half way measure. Other possibilities remain. An overhead walkway is feasible on Routes 30 and 320.

The crucial point is that something must be done to prevent jaywalking. On a resident campus, this is difficult to do. Too many students are constantly in a hurry to get to class, lunch or other activities.

The most viable, remaining option is to make buildings, such as St. Mary's, accessible from only one point. Also, make the main campus accessible at just one place.

Students may grumble and groan because they must walk a few, or many, extra steps; but, perhaps, they will have the lucky circumstance to be able to live to grumble: some others in the past were not so lucky.

University officials may also grumble about the extra money they must spend, but it must be spent if future accidents and deaths are to be prevented. The attitude of "it won't happen again" is completely irrational. As a student stands at the cross-walk of Lancaster, waiting for the light to turn red, he can often count the number of cars that run the light once it does turn red. Close calls happen every day because a student steps off the sidewalk as the light changes, and manages to jump back in time enough to avoid being hit by the truck that didn't stop.

This issue comes down to a matter of priorities. Is the University willing to put in money and time to insure the safety of its students? Or will this money go to some other cause, such as buying Christmas trees for the Connelly Center?

Before the alcohol policy, before the limitation of parties, the University must see that the lives of human beings should be given the highest priority.

Response Nuclear Debate

Dear Editor:

Relative to the Article by Kim Rushton on November 14th, 1980 entitled: Union Debates Nuclear Energy," the writer would seek to provide some constructive comments.

The Meeting on November 10th purported to be a debate, however, the news article fails to offer any comments by proponents of nuclear power, which apparently accounts for the lop-sided vote at the end of the presentation. It might have been more realistic to have a speaker from the Atomic Industry Forum or Americans for Nuclear Energy as opposing speakers to Marsha Pripstein's revelations. It would seem that the Political Union's presentation was totally one-sided. It is amazing that even two persons voted for nuclear power generation under these circumstances.

Pripstein cites Three Mile Island and apparently drops it at that point. The maximum radiactive release in this incident was 8 milirems. Anyone can get considerably more exposure than this by walking through New York City's Grand Central Station any day of the week. Further, power plant employees continue to work in reactor areas until they have had an exposure of somewhat more than two hundred milirems without suffering any ill-effects. They are closely monitored by health physicists.

The nuclear power industry, when compared to other industries, is in its infancy. Much professional expertise and talent has gone into the development of nuclear power generation. In the space of thirty years, the progress has been phenominal even with the obstacles provided by disruptive and ill-advised antagonists and others that should know better. However, not one person has been killed or injured in a domestic power plant arising out of a nuclear failure since its inception. Power companies have voluntarily retired their pioneer plants when they no longer matched newly developed advanced technologies thereby suffering large production losses. This, even though power company profits are closely controlled by a Public Service Commission in most, if not all, States. The NRC provides additional controls on the power industry. Other industries have not exhibited such self-restraint, nor can they offer like records of progress and safety.

For several years, the electric power industry, nuclear power advocates and concerned citizens have been striving to get a national commitment to develop techniques for reprocessing spent nuclear fuel rods rather than abandoning their energy producing capabilities to permanent waste disposal, thereby depriving future generations of this most valuable national asset. The Carter administration foolishly abandoned these efforts in 1977, because they were not politically popular.

Despite what the China Syndromes purport, and the other irresponsible speculatings and fantasizings by the movie industry and the sensationalisms of the press and television, nuclear power plants can not 'blow up'. Nuclear reactors and nuclear munitions are as distantly related as fish and fowl. There is an infinite mathematical unlikelihood that a melt-down could occur at a plant. However, such an occurrence would be a localised incident, and would be cleaned up in the same manner that the military would 'sanitize' equipment, material and weapons after battlefield exposure to nuclear munitions.

One needs to realize that the anti-groups that exist in our country are being encouraged in their activities and demonstrations by the news media even though such groups are being mislead by known dissidents. Those that engage in this negativism and national self-destructive activity are defeating progress, are unwittingly aligning themselves with the OPEC extortionists and are adding to the economic instability of our nation. Given the same kind of opposition, the steam combustion engines — even the wheel — would never have advanced to present day usages. Yet, over the years, multitudes have lost their lives in the development and use of these energy producing innovations.

Sincerely yours,
Walter W. Arendt

Thank You

Dear Editor,

As the coordinators of the 1980 Hunger Awareness Week, we would like to use this letter as a means of thanking the many members of the Villanova community who contributed to the success of this week. Much work was done beforehand but without cooperation and participation in the events provided, the message of Hunger Awareness Week would be meaningless except to a handful of people.

We sincerely feel that the majority of individuals here at Villanova did benefit either through their own efforts or the efforts of others. These include Fr. Driscoll, whose presidential resolution encouraged the "entire Villanova Community to support the programs provided by Hunger Awareness Week," the Villanova faculty who informed their classes of these programs as well as participating themselves, the Campus Ministry who sponsors the week, and finally the Villanova students, who hopefully have gained some insight into the severe problem of world hunger and possibly have asked themselves, "What can I do?". Thank you once again.

Sincerely,
Jeff Kirchner
Patty Ryan

P.S: A few Hunger Awareness statistics which we have thus far:

* Approximately 1700 people participated in the fast, including 300 commuters and faculty.
* 52 runners completed a total of 356 miles during the "Run for Hunger"
* The LXA "Kidnap for Food" raised $250.00
* Approximately $225.00 was collected during the "Concert for Hunger" and
* letters were written to United States Representatives and Senators.
* Approximately $1000 was collected at the student masses on Nov. 23.

A final report will be given when all the statistics are in.

Rough Game

Dear Editor,

Violence is not unusual in football today, but I never thought I would see as much of it as I did during the playoff game between DTD and The Wave. The team members of DTD did everything short of taking off a few heads. For example, due to DTD's "unnecessary roughness," members of The Wave suffered a broken nose, bruised knee, and a severely cut lip and gums, not to mention a holt of other assorted injuries. It seemed that DTD was out for blood rather than a win.

Why must DTD's football team play such a dirty game of ball? I have watched games all during the intramural season and have found most of them to be clean, well-played games of ball. There is no reason whatsoever to resort to such tactics that result in members of the opposing team being badly hurt. I hope that the members of the DTD team clean up their game in the future so that ill feelings towards that frat will not abound and opposing teams will not need to be transported home in an ambulance.

N.M.

Complaint Inconsiderate

Editor:

The following happened the week before Thanksgiving, but deserves much attention, no matter when it occurred. Topic: the competence of certain Villanova employees.

On November 12, I was a participant in an intramural playoff game in which a member of the other team was injured on the last play of the game. He suffered a cut and was lying on the field bleeding. The referee ran to the intramural office to notify security, but after approximately five minutes no van appeared and I ran to the office where I saw the ref still on the phone trying to get through to security. Immediately I ran to Dougherty Hall, got hold of a guard and told him to send a van to Mendel Field to pick up an injured intramural player. His response: "The field right here (pointing to Austin Field)? "No, the other one," I said. "What building is it near," he said. I told him Mendel Hall. Then he said, "Where the soldiers practice?" "Yes," I said.

As if this wasn't enough, while he waited for a 10-4 from the van driver, he lectured me on how rough us "guys" play and someone was bound to get hurt.

The following Sunday I was injured in a game, and following a visit to Bryn Mawr Hospital, I stopped at the infirmary for an icepack. The infirmary had no icepacks, but all the hot water bottles my knee needed.

Following class Monday, I called security for a van for a ride to my dorm and was told it would arrive in a couple minutes. My second call went in before the van arrived — 10 minutes later.

The next day I called security for a van at 5 p.m. and the following conversation took place: "Can you walk?" asked the guard. "No, I'm on crutches," I said. "You have to call 645-4444 (Ithan Gate)," he said. Before I could get in another word, he hung up.

Later that day I notified a guard in Dougherty cafeteria I needed a van for a ride to my dorm. First he asked how I knew he was down there. Who cares? That was irrelevant.

The next conversation tops them all. Wednesday morning I called the Security Office and asked for a van at the St. Mary's loading dock. The woman, in response, asked me why not in the front of St. Mary's. After I informed her I was on crutches and the loading dock was more convenient, she said, "Well that may be easier for you, but it's too congested for the van to get there."

Tell me about the congestion in the St. Mary's parking lot and also tell me why some members of the Security Department are arrogant and inconsiderate. Fortunately, most guards were courteous and considerate, but then that's their job.

World Hunger

To the Editor:

Being a freshman at Villanova, I was quite amazed at the crusade Villanova students took to combat World Hunger. The importance of this world dilemma is often ignored. Everyone at Villanova took part in Hunger Awareness Week. T events began on Sunday night November with mass at the main chapel. Diane M was present to explain the current W Hunger situation, she is a member of committee to fight World Hunger. Hunger problem is closer to home th and others had realized. There are fami on welfare in Philadelphia, that only 38 cents per person allocated to them each meal. It is impossible to provide type of nourishing meal with this amo

Villanova students executed vari programs throughout the week. T programs included a Run For Hunger, fasting of lunch, and the collection of goods for the needy. Signs were poste the cafeterias, making us aware of the waste of food at Villanova. One of the exciting events of the week was the napping of various people around cam

This is an annual event organized by bers of the LXA Fraternity. A group o perclassmen were dressed like ty Mafia gangsters. Their costumes incl dark pin striped suits, machine guns black limousine. They captured diffe people on the campus and held them ransom. The ransom money was donated to charity.

Another part of Hunger Awareness W was the student support for the boycot the Nestle Company. Nestle is marketi baby formula in various countries th causing disease among babies. This dis is known as the "Baby Bottle Disea which results in diarrhea, malnutrition often death.

Through all these actions Villa students have taken a great step tow acknowledging and conquering the W Hunger problem. Almost all Villa students participated in some type of tribution or sacrifice. The students sh be commended for their actions.

Local Talent Issue

To the Editor:

Alex Bradley, John Pinone, Sienkiewicz, Aaron Howard, and St Granger compose a formidable startin as the Wildcats prepare to start the 19 Basketball season. Villanova may just the best starting five in The Big Five the success of this year's basketball will depend heavily on the support the ters receive from the bench. With 'walk-ons' filling out almost half o roster, along with freshman recruit P Dobbs, the depth of the Wildcat's ben suspect.

Villanova was able to land only one man in their recruiting efforts for season. It is unfortunate that recruiting efforts are concentrated from the Philadelphia area, and dir into such areas as New Jersey. Philade is a perennial producer of basketball t yet Villanova did not see fit to makin year's Philadelphia High School s this year's Villanova freshmen, as mu they saw fit to lure players from outsi area. St. Joseph's University recognize potential of Toney Costner and A McFarlan, both from Philadelphia, have incorporated them into a baske squad unmatched in talent and anywhere in the area. Why d Villanova prefer Philadelphia playe don't know. The only players Philade has ever produced are Wilt Chambe Mike Bantom, Michael Brooks, E Banks, . . .

Abortion Wrong

Editor,

I was appalled to read in the Editoral tion of the Villanovan the letter from l Armstrong which actually speaks out favor of abortion.

The quality of life, what is the quality of e? Who decides what the quality of life ans? To me and it would seem that Carol rmstrong and many of you reading this uld agree that the quality of life is that hich entitles every human being to a life which that person's rights are guaran- d. The quality of life is that which gives ery person the right to grow, develop, and ture as a human being.

To use the phrase quality of life to prove at a woman has the right to a safe and gal abortion is indeed contradictory. The us is indeed a complete developing man person, our conception is the beginng of our life.

It is at this time that I would like to stop d discuss Carol Armstrong's point about ligious denominations not being able to ree when human life begins. It is not for a ligious denomination to decide where man life actually begins. This is somening that only a scientist can tell us. And ience has told us, from the time of conption the fertilized egg is a human being. Bernard Nathanson who actually ran an ortion clinic is now anti-abortion because his work in para-natalogy.

Abortion is not a religious issue as Carol rmstrong would like for us to believe. ither is abortion a political issue, it is a man rights issue. We must work as diously as those civil rights leaders who ught for what they rightly believed in. The fetus is a person with rights. Many ople, people such as Carol Armstrong uld claim that the fetus is part of a man's body and that she has a right to r body. Yes the woman does have a right her body but she does not have the right the body within her or in other words the tus. The fetus is indeed dependent upon e mother to survive but are not each of us pendent upon certain conditions to surve? Who of us can be independent of our rroundings or of our environment? The tus has a right to grow and develop and hen it is ready, when it has matured it is rced to move on to a new and more allenging process of growth and development.

To protect against the possibility of egnancy our society has created contraptives. Once again Carol Armstrong has monstrated how confusing the abortion sue can be.

If a human life amendment were to be ased then Carol Armstrong is correct in ying that the IUD would have to be probited. The IUD scrapes the walls of the erus after the egg has been fertilized thus stroying a human life and therefore perrming an abortion.

The birth control pill however would not d could not be prohibited because it does t destroy the fertilized egg, therefore the rth control pill does not cause or produce ortion.

I cannot approve of abortion. If an older man or a poor woman find themselves egnant and they do not want the baby, the swer is adoption not abortion. There are ndreds of thousands of couples who uld be more than willing to adopt and to se a child, abortion is a poor answer to an wanted pregnancy or an unwanted child. When a person who is pro-abortion or -choice brings up the question of rape, I st once again question their knowledge this area. Pregnancy through rape is extmely rare and it can often be prevented if victim seeks medical help immediately. We must always keep in mind that the tilized egg is a human being. When we d that a person is sick we try to cure m. So it is with what is termed a eased fetus." If a fetus is recognized as ng diseased usually the fetus can be ed or the problem corrected. We must p in mind this fetus is a human being as stated above no less of a human being than you or me. Do we kill a person because that person is not perfect? I firmly believe that every person, every fertilized egg has the right to live. We have many handicapped and mentally retarded people who I believe can teach us who are "perfect" much about life and living.

In closing I believe the gift of life comes from God and that no person except God has the right to take that gift away. I urge each of you to consider what your life is and what it means to you. I also ask you to consider your family and friends and how important they are and just how much they mean to you. I urge you to consider the human rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and just how important these basic rights are to the human being within the womb. I then challenge you to be Pro-Life.

Informed Action

To the Editor:

As a member of the committee sponsoring the recent Peace & Justice Day which focused on the Nestle boycott, I would like to comment on the article entitled "President Warns of 'Boycott fever!' Henry Amoroso implies in his comments that our group is uninformed of the infant formula problem and that we are trying to incite an unjustified boycott of Nestle Corporation. The fact is that we formed our committee in Sept., 1980 specifically to investigate the infant formula controversy. This investigation led us to contact INFACT (Infant Formula Action Coalition) who is sponsoring the nationwide boycott as well as contacting Nestle Corporation to find out their position on the matter. We corresponded with both groups and received literature from INFACT and Nestle. We also asked Nestle to send a representative to present their position to us; however, Nestle replied that "the controversy has outlived its usefulness" and would not send any representative. After researching both sides of the issue, our committee unanimously agreed that a boycott of Nestle products was justified and was the best response to the infant formula crisis. We then planned Peace & Justice Day in order to inform the entire Villanova community of this crisis and of the nationwide boycott.

Amoroso also states that "Nestle . . . has confronted that problem. They have stopped advertising their product in the Third World," and that Nestle has complied with the marketing guidelines published by WHO-(World Health Organization)-UNICEF conference. The fact is that Nestle has done neither of these things. In May, 1980 a 16 page report entitled "Infant Formula Promotion, 1980" was released which lists documented violations of the WHO-UNICEF guidelines. According to this report, Nestle has violated every WHO-UNICEF guideline conference proposed in some manner since March, 1980. Obviously, Nestle has not complied with the WHO-UNICEF guidelines. Also WHO-UNICEF has not released any statement as to whether Nestle has complied with the guidelines. Rather they are reconvening in January, 1981 to assess the current situation and to see if some sort of legal enforcement of the guidelines might be possible.

Also, Amoroso states that we should look to other groups and see how they are responding to the boycott. He cites that the "Archdiocese of Cincinnati does not plan to respond to the boycott . . ." He fails to mention that there is a 10 page list of organizations who do endorse the boycott, including such groups as, Clergy and Laity Concerned, National Council of Churches, United Auto Workers and so on. Of course we cannot base our decision on the position of other groups but must investigate the matter ourselves..

I would like to emphasize that Amoroso's initial point, that we make an informed decision, is a good one and that is exactly what we feel we have done. I'm confident that when Mr. Amoroso investigates the matter himself, he will reach the same conclusion that we did.

Finally, I would just like to comment on the front page coverage given to the article in question. Granted that Henry Amoroso is president of the student body and is thereby newsworthy; however, the article contained only his opinions on the subject and should have been presented as an editorial.

Nestle Matter

To the Editor:

Through you I would like to convey my congratulations to Henry Amoroso, student body president, for his comments on the Nestle matter. He is quite right in saying that both sides should be heard. It is specious for the anti-Nestle people to say that the Nestle Company declined an invitation and therefore their position is not available. What is Nestle supposed to do, respond to every petty ad hoc protest group that wants to give attention to itself? Secondly, the Nestle position is available and therefore if the, so called, Peace and Justice Organization wanted to be educative rather than propagandistic they would have sought it out and provided it.

Sincerely,
John J. Schrems

Much Maligned

Dear Editor:

These past three months all of us in the Villanova community have read in various local papers that Villanova University does little to enhance the surrounding environment.

So it was that the Resident Student Association decided to ask residents "who do not contribute a thing to our surroundings" to donate loose change to a very worthy cause. The cause was thirty Thanksgiving Day baskets to the needy people in St. Rita's parish which is located in Philadelphia.

The much maligned residents responded graciously. The residents, in true Villanova spirit, responded by donating over $1,000.00 to our cause.

I would like to thank all those who donated their time and money to this worthwhile project. The Hall presidents cannot be thanked enough for their work in making this project a huge success. A special thanks to the men in Stanford and Sullivan who combined to donate close to $500.00.

Truly, the character of the students at Villanova shined through in this cause.

The question of safety has been raised frequently in the past months. In light of this, the Villanovan asked students: "Do you feel that campus safety at Villanova is inadequate? If not, what do you think could be done to improve it?"

The safety is adequate, but the security guards are totally inadequate. The security guards could loosen up with the students and stop treating us like we are intruding.

Suicide is a Bleak Reality

Society's Unspoken Illness

By LAURIE ALMEDA

Death — nobody likes to think about it. Suicide — a subject which people prefer to ignore rather than discuss. Suicide — an aspect of life.

When a person dies a natural death, emotional effects such as grief, loneliness, and disbelief are felt. Death by suicide causes all of these emotions; it also causes guilt. "Suicides leave guilt behind," states Dr. Richard J. Neville, director of the Villanova Counseling Center. "This guilt affects the family and friends; they wonder what they could have done to prevent the death."

Survivors of suicide victims must deal with the problems of facing other people, explaining the reason of death to those who question, and of facing their own personal guilt. Dr. Edwin S. Schneidman, author of "On The Nature of Suicide," wrote, "The suicidal person places his psychological skeleton in the survivor's closet."

Every person has the potential to commit suicide. Self-destruction is a choice open to human beings. If an individual is unable to cope in society, suicide often occurs as the last step in his failure of adaption.

Suicide is the second most frequent cause of death among college students, exceeded only by accidents. "I've never heard about as publicized suicide among undergraduates since I've been at Villanova," stated Neville. "But there are some accidents that I might question." The count of deaths by suicide goes up when it is realized that some students kill themselves in what are called "accidents."

Students feel pressures beginning from early childhood. Often, a student may feel unable to meet the competition that college presents. Students may become terrified of their inability to compete successfully in college. Personal failure shatters personal confidence; it also brings disappointment from parents.

"Students who commit suicide are more likely to be overachievers than underachievers," commented Neville. "Getting a B in a class, or all F's, can bring about a suicide. Feelings of isolation and depression also cause suicides among students."

Sometimes a person goes to college and never really makes a close friend. Other students might describe him as being "shy" or "strange." Actually, the student may have no one to confide in. The student becomes isolated from the good feeling of talking to someone who wants to listen — who never says "go away" and "be quiet."

The loss of communication a student experiences often includes the loss of communication with parents. Sometimes a troubled student compensates for loneliness by increasing his study and absorption in schoolwork. Sometimes the student enters a deep depression.

Depression often begins slowly; the person experiences feelings of apprehension and discouragement. A person may not remember when it all began, but he notices that he has a case of "the blues." The person may see the future as looking bleak, and he thinks there is no way to change it. A person suffering from depression may imagine that he has cancer or some other severe physical ailment. A preoccupation with death and dying is common among someone suffering from depression. Ordinary duties become difficult to perform. A person suffering from depression cannot concentrate, and has extreme difficulty in making even a simple decision. The depressed person has a lack of energy; he is always tired.

Among suicidally depressed people, physical complaints are quite common. Severe insomnia — with early morning awakening, the inability to get back to sleep again, poor appetite, and weight loss often occur in the suicidally depressed person.

A depressed person tends to become less social, preferring more and more to be "on his own." "A sign of depression in a student is when his behavior radically changes," stated Neville. "This change in the normal pattern of behavior or the student's desire to be alone more often is a sign of depression."

Potential suicide victims often indicate their intentions in one way or another. Studies of persons who had taken their lives have revealed that many suicide victims visit their physicians for one reason or another within a few months of the act. Another danger signal is when a person speaks or threatens to take his own life. "Any attempts at suicide, or threat of suicide, should be taken seriously," commented Neville. "Especially if a student has a plan. People feel guilty about getting involved, but they should try to do something to help."

Initially, threats of suicide are appeals for help and intervention by the potential suicide. "Suicide is not an attention getting act," stated Neville. If no one is concerned about a potential suicide's appeals for help, he may not set a time and method for his self-destruction. Suicide does not often occur impulsively, it is most often the end to a long struggle with adaption.

A stress situation often brings about the act of suicide. Because he feels guilty about an action done in the past, or he feels depressed about the prospects of his future, a person may turn to suicide. Poor health, economic troubles, death of a loved one, divorce, family problems, and final exams are all stressful situations which overwhelm a suicidal person.

During Christmas time and finals there is a high rate of suicide among students. Students feel the pressure of having to achieve the high mark on the final. Some students may wonder why they feel depressed during the "joyous time of the year." "Holiday time resurrects family problems," stated Neville. "A student may not feel capable of coping with those problems, so he resorts to taking his life."

Taking an interest in a suicidal person's problems is one way of helping. The attitude of people towards the troubled person is a major factor in whether or not he takes his life. The suicidal person may be experiencing hopelessness,

Balloon Ceremony: Hostage Comment

By SHARON WINTERS

Fifty-two balloons will be released in front of the Connelly Center at 12:45 p.m. Monday, December 8, in a symbolic ceremony on behalf of the American hostages' captivity in Iran, now 400 days long.

The idea of using balloons is different, according to Dr. Adolf S. Butkys, Professor of Business Administration. Ringing bells 52 times and ceremonies with Christmas trees have been used by others in the past, cited Butkys.

More importantly, the balloons will represent a symbolic freeing of the hostages, according to Butkys. Also, the balloons will travel some distance, perhaps 50 miles, to spread the message, he said.

"Let Our People Go," will be the message attached to the balloons with a yellow ribbon. The ribbon is also a symbol of release or freedom, said Butkys. The Junior Chamber of Commerce used the yellow ribbon about a year ago, Butkys said.

The ceremony will involve many campus organizations. They will join together to form an ad hoc committee, the Villanova Student Coalition.

The president of the Consumer Club, Sharon Cossin, sent invitations to other University organizations to join the ceremony. Some groups have already reacted.

The local media have been invited to the event. Butkys related. Further, any organization that wants to join can, even if the group has not formally announced their participation with the ad hoc committee, he said.

The original ceremony was planned over a week ago, but Thanksgiving interfered with plans, said Butkys. The ad hoc group has begun replanning the event, he said.

The families of the hostages have been informed of the Villanova coalition plans. The Families Liason Action Group (FLAG) in Washington D.C. was contacted a few days ago by Dr. Butkys.

FLAG has released information about Villanova activities on behalf of the hostages before in their press releases. Dr. Butkys believes that many people in the country are aware of the University's activities because of this.

Earler this semester, Dr. Butkys and some students sent a letter to Iran appealing for the release of the captive Americans.

There have been small, sporatic efforts across the country, but students have not been very active in this area (concern for the hostages), according to Butkys.

"Eventually they will be released," said Butkys. The negotiations are just a "smokescreen," he feels.

"Iran wants to get rid of them without losing face," Dr. Butkys said. The Iranian people must feel that they got something, he believes.

"All Iran got was publicity," Butkys said. He believes that the hostages will be released, probably sometime before January 20, the day of the inauguration.

Injured Co-ed Recovering

By KATHI IANNACONE

"She's doing really well now," expressed Fran Cariello, sister to Anne, who was hit by a car over two months ago.

On September 17, at approximately 7:30 p.m., Anne Cariello, freshman nursing student from Long Island, was jogging against traffic along Montgomery Avenue when struck by an oncoming automobile. Roommate Chris Suprenant and close friend Paul Anatrella were accompanying Anne at the time of the accident.

Anne remained conscious but she was in a great deal of pain. She was rushed by ambulance to Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Some of the injuries suffered by Anne were a broken femur, tibia and fibula in the right leg. She remains in the cast for eight weeks. Also, in her right knee, all of the lateral ligaments were torn. Anne's left leg was put in traction for approximately six weeks. She underwent plastic surgery for the cuts and wounds on her head.

While at Bryn Mawr Hospital, on the evening of her accident, a pin was placed in her right femur and the excess wounds were stitched. Anne was scheduled for surgery the following Friday morning, but complications arose, and Anne went into a coma. The surgery was subsequently cancelled.

Anne remained at Bryn Mawr Hospital until October 3, when she became aware of her surroundings and was "safely" moved to Good Samaritan General Hospital on Long Island.

"About a week ago she started to be really alert," stated her sister. "She has been asking about Villanova and all of her friends. She's able to recognize us all."

Now that Anne is progressing, she is being exercised regularly and she is finished with traction. Within the following weeks, Anne is being transferred to Brunswick Hospital for intensive rehabilitation."

When asked if Anne would be able to return to Villanova, Fran replied, "If not in January, then positively in September."

December 1980

Desert Hospital of Palm Springs, California was pleased to have had the opportunity to participate in the Nursing Career Day at the Villanova campus. I was very impressed with the RN candidates we met, and I'm sure they will be a great credit to their profession just as they are a credit to their school.

It was a pleasure meeting:

Alice	Douglas	Marybeth
Andrea	Eileen	Michelle
Ann	Elizabeth	Nancy
Anne	Jeanne	Pamela
Antonette	Karen	Patricia
Berta	Kathy	Peggy
Carol	Katy	Polly
Cindy	Lisa	Rosemary
Darryn	Lorraine	Susan
Diane	Lynn	Suzanne
Donna	Mary	Theresa
	Mary-Jo

Many of you expressed an interest in our hospital, and we at Desert Hospital are very interested in having you join us. In order to meet your needs we are beginning an internship program in June 1981. We will be sending further details. Thank you for your hospitality. I am looking forward to hearing from you.

Chanukkah Reflects Jewish Heritage

By MARIE CROSSAN

Throughout the Jewish community, Wednesday, December 3 marked the beginning of the feast of Hanukkah. Known also as the Festival of Lights, Hanukkah, (Chanukah), is an eight day long celebration traditionally commemorating the rededication of the Temple. This year's feast continues until December 10.

There are various legends that surround the feast of Hanukkah. One such legend states that, following the occupation of the Temple by the Syrian Greeks, the temple supplies were stolen and the Temple desecrated. To light the Temple, only one flask of oil was found-enough to last only one day. Miraculously, this one flask lasted eight days. To commemorate this event, the following year those eight days were declared a feast.

Another traditional explanation for the feast of Hanukkah involves the Temple itself. It is said to have taken eight days to erect and whitewash the new altar and to install the new sacred utensils. These eight days were then set aside to honor and remember the hardships the Jews endured in order to salvage their religious beliefs.

Despite these two widely accepted theories, some still insist that there is an aura of doubt which surrounds the idea of the lights. Some see the candles as a remnant of a much older holiday which was assimilated into the newer feast. Others see it as having relevance to the political situation of the time period. Hanukkah is also seen as a nature festival. This idea dates back to the dedication of the Tabernacle while the Jews lived in the wilderness.

Hanukkah differs from all other Jewish holidays in one important respect. Its origin lies in the light of history and this tradition stands clear and bold. The events commemorated in the Hanukkah celebration left an imprint on the entire course of history.

Hanukkah is a joyous celebration within the Jewish community. It is a time of giftgiving and family unity. Traditions which surround the holiday include culinary as well as festive delights. In some parts it is customary to eat traditional cheese dishes. For the most part, in America, the traditional potato latkes, (similar to potato cakes), are served with meals.

One of the most ceremonious traditions involves the lighting of the Menorah. A candelabra of nine candles, the Menorah is a part of most all Jewish homes. Each day during the eight day long feast, another candle is lit, until finally, on the eighth day, all eight candles including the center one are lit.

Gift-giving is a relatively new aspect of Hanukkah. Each day each person receives a gift. Following the lighting of the Menorah the small gift is opened.

Other traditions include games such as the spinning of the dreydel. It is played with a four sided top named the "trendel" which bears Hebrew inscriptions. The inscriptions stand for the "nes gadol hayah sham," which means, "A great miracle happened there."

While Hanukkah is a community celebration, it is also a very personal one. Each family has its own traditions and customs surrounding the festival which makes it unique for themselves. What is to be remembered, however, is that Hanukkah is a time of remembrance and thanksgiving. For the Jewish community it is a time to rejoice.

To all of the Villanova Jewish community, a very joyous and happy Hanukkah.

LXA Kidnaps For Hunger

By KATHI IANNACONE

Lamda Chi Alpha fraternity (LXA), for the third year, participated in the campus-wide hunger awareness program. Headed by Vice-President Tom Critelli, the frat continued in its tradition of a kidnap for hunger.

It all took place on Monday, November 21, when approximately eighty-five brothers and associate members of LXA set out to capture organization presidents and staff heads. Their purpose was to retain these people until the proper ransom was paid for their release.

As a group, the members of the fraternity paraded around campus, dressed as gangsters, and physically took into custody various Villanova personalities. Each person they seized was then brought to the Belle Aire Terrace of the Connelly Center where he/she was placed in a staged jail setting.

Roughly thirty persons were kidnapped. Among those were previous VILLANOVAN Editor-in-Chief, Maryanne Lavelle, Lucy Gorski and Chris Mueller of the Union, Marc Tuchman and Father Martin.

A minimum of $25 bail was set for most of the campus organizations, although some of the smaller groups were quoted a smaller fee. The ransom was paid in cash or, in some cases, canned goods. The total money raised amounted to $400.

All money and food was then turned over to the Campus Ministry who then sent it to Africa and needy neighbors in Philadelphia.

It all turned out very well," explained Critelli, "I'm especially thankful that everyone was so cooperative, mainly the Connelly Center which donated its facilities for our use."

DKE's Sold Into Bondage

By MIKE GIAMMARCO

Thirty members of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity sold themselves into bondage Wednesday night November 19. It wasn't a desperate action resulting from a hopeless social life, or even a crew of pledges at the mercy of their masters. In fact, it was all voluntary to raise money for the Cerebral Palsy Fund. The activity was organized by Mike LaVilla and Bob Dvoretsky. Mike had contact with Cerebral Palsy at his home in long Island, and decided that the organization would be worthy recipient of the money raised.

This was all done using volunteer frat brothers who put themselves on the block and were auctioned off by Mary Ellen Walsh. She read self-descriptions written by each "slave" to the potential bidders, displayed the merchandise, and began the bid at a three dollar minimum. All slaves were blindfolded to retain the confidentiality of the bidders. Once sold to the highest bidder, a slave owed his time, from 12 noon until 8 p.m. on Sunday, to his 'new master(s)'.

The 150 person audience at the Dougherty "Day Hop" consisted mainly of female bidders. The slaves reassured the bidders of their worth by shouting, "We'll do anything", "Use us," and "I'm yours . . . cheap!"

Pete Marengi, DKE secretary, was the first slave dragged to the block and was bought for ten dollars by Johanna Smith; who had decided to "Give him back to his mother." After John Cusick lost his freedom to "J&T," they were still "undecided" about what to do with him.

Mike LaVilla undoubtedly deserves the title "most desired" because he was sold to five co-bidders led by Lori Dobbs. After investing eleven dollars, they admitted that he was "So adorable, we just had to buy him!"

Dan Ahern set the pace with a twenty-one dollar sale to Nancy Armstrong and Lori Donatelly, and for a while he was the most expensive slave. This was followed by "prime stock" Bob Dvoretsky himself, who vividly displayed his potential. Bob was expected to rake the most in, but could only scrape up twenty-one dollars from Patty Bradley, Valerie Koch, and two co-sponsors who had previously agreed to "totally abuse him," only because "he deserved it!" Bob's price was topped by John Gallagher for an astounding thirty dollars, by two eager co-sponsors Mary Foley and Barbara Fazekas. It seemed for a while that John would be the undisputed "most valuable slave," but the surprise came when DKE pledges and Susan Fogley, bid against each other for the ownership of the pledge master himself, Pete Jirak. The bidding climbed to thirty-three dollars before the pledges backed down, not anxious enough to shell out that much for the sake of vengeance.

With the help of thirty brothers (all were sold), and the cooperation of campus co-eds; the first DKE community project raised $375 for Cerebral Palsy.

Cerebral Palsy is not a disease. It is the result of brain damage affecting the mental processes controlling muscular action and coordination, and is caused by a lack of oxygen. An interruption of oxygen, vital to fetal brain function, can occur either before, during, or after birth. Negligence is certainly responsible in some cases — such as a mother's poor health due to smoking or alcohol — but problems may also result from a malnourished mother, or a virus contracted during pregnancy.

The fetus or new born, as a result, is afflicted with certain signs of CP, which appear shortly after birth and become obvious through adulthood. Motor dysfunction includes: loss of manual dexterity, seizures, vision, hearing, speech, and learning difficulties; at worst, psychological and behavioral problems.

The disorder cannot be cured in the accepted sense of the word, but control can be achieved through therapeutic aid and social counseling. In specific cases, orthopedic or neurologic surgery may correct some physical deformities. Braces and tension-reducing medication may help as well.

United Cerebral Palsy, formed thirty years ago, is an organization funded and operated solely by volunteers concerned with helping people who are physically affected by a condition which has claimed over 700,000 people. Statistics at present estimate 10,000 CP births each year. It is considered the most widespread lifetime disability in the United States. UCP offers countless services and facilities for adults and children with CP. They rely on donations and activities such as the one held by DKE for support. Volunteers are the lifeblood and sole driving force of the organization which has established 250 state and local affiliates serving not only CP patients, but the disabled in general.

UCP describes their situation: "The most hopeful aspect of cerebral palsy is that it can be prevented if women take care of their health during pregnancy, or better yet, before conception. UCP's research program has made significant inroads into preventing cerebral palsy, and today only half as many babies are born with the condition as twenty years ago.

United Cerebral Palsy's dual mission of mainstreaming disabled persons into society and preventing cerebral palsy is a big challenge — one you can help UCP meet by becoming one of our volunteers — UCP's most valuable resource."

presence of Yoko on what was hoped to be a John Lennon album. The second one is the way in which the songs are mixed. The album would have benefitted from making one side John and the other Yoko, as was done with the Live/Peace in Toronto album. Their styles just do not blend well. Oh, time has not been kind to our hero. He seems to have become weather worn and bitter and one need only look at the back cover of the album to evidence this, as John stands, arms folded, next to Yoko, glaring angrily at the world that stands before him. The youthful optimism seems to have vanished into the cold brick walls of the Dakotas.

The Main Point Reorganizes

By SHARON WINTERS

The Main Point has been a community tradition since 1964. The Bryn Mawr coffee house has the distinction of nurturing young talent.

Before they were accepted by the general public, performers like John Denver, Jim Croce, Doc Watson, Lily Tomlin and Robert Klein delighted the Main Line audience.

Over the years some acts have gotten the distinction of being Main Point regulars. The Dillards, Tom Rush, Eric Andersen, Michael Cooney and Dave Van Ronk, to mention a few, are names that seem almost synonomous with The Point. If they are playing in the area, the Main Point is sure to be the place.

Times have changed and so has The Point. The earlier days were the folk/protest era. Tom Paxton was a regular performer in those days. Other musicians and singers were John Denver (yes, he was a protest singer once), Janis Ian and Buffy St. Marie.

The Velvet Underground may seem like an unlikely group to play Bryn Mawr but they did, February, 1970. Captain Beefheart played The Point a year later.

Some fans don't realize how near some performers have played. In 1973, Bruce Springsteen was at the local coffee house. Bruce actually performed at a place just several miles down the road. The atmosphere at The Point holds a maximum of 270.) must have been intimate: all Point shows tend to be.

David Lindley, Bruce Springsteen, and Jackson Browne back stage at The Main Point.

As time passed, the Main Point began showcasing rock music to please their everchanging audience. This was a good move musically; however, the neighbors of The Point complained about the noise and tried to have the coffee house closed.

In 1975, Bruce played the Bryn Mawr stage again. The same year, Patti Smith did a gig at the coffee house. Other performers that year included Tom Paxton, Dr. Hook, Don McLean, Tom Waits, Elvin Bishop and Commander Cody.

Other artists to play The Point were: Johnny's Dance Band; Warren Zevon; Pure Prarie League; Dick Gregory and Firefall.

A notable surprise appearance occurred at The Point in 1975 when Pretty Things played a show. Jimmy Page of Led Zeplin jammed on stage with the band.

The Main Point, this small Bryn Mawr coffee house, has hosted some of the finest artists in the country over the years. Despite its "Folky" reputation, The Point has provided a wide variety of entertainment.

This coffee house has managed to survive many crises. Neighbors' complaints and financial stresses have been problems that The Main Point has dealt with and overcome through the years.

In the coffee house's recent history, it has added a store: Beside The Point. Plants, handmade pottery, jewelry and dried flowers are some of the interesting items displayed.

Another Main Point addition recently has been the inclusion of craft classes. This December, classes will be held to teach people how to make Christmas decorations. The classes are on December 7 and 14.

Unfortunately, the Main Point is not in the best shape at the moment. The coffee house is undergoing another crisis. Financial difficulties have limited the performers. Most of the November shows this year were cancelled. The only artist scheduled to play this month is Stan Rogers on December 14.

The Main Point is experiencing a reorganization. The future of this community tradition is in doubt. The community would, indeed, be lessened culturally if The Point were to cease operations.

Outlaws, Foghat Close U.S. Tour In Philadelphia

By PETER DiPASCA

It has been a long year for Foghat and the Outlaws. Both groups have been touring with each other for most of the summer and fall. The final stop of the tour was the Spectrum in Philadelphia on November 16. By the way both bands performed, however, one might think that the tour had just started. The two groups played as if unaffected by the rigors of the road and delivered a show not to be forgotten.

The concert began at seven o'clock with the opening act, Max Webster, a five-man band from Toronto, Canada. The heavy metal sound of this band slightly resembles that of Rush, another Toronto-based group. Max Webster, who are currently promoting their new album, Universal Avenues, played for approximately thirty-five minutes. Foghat was the next band to play.

Foghat, led by lead singer "Lonesome" Dave Peverett, exploded on stage with their hit, Slow Blue. The band proceeded to play a few songs from their new album, Tight Shoes, along with their old favorites, such as Fool for the City and Slow Ride. The group then left the stage and returned to perform their classic, Last Want to Make Love to You, as an encore.

This concert, incidentally, was the last performance for lead guitarist Rod Price. Price decided to leave the band and to retire after the 1980 tour. No, new replacement has been named yet. Foghat, consisting of Peverett, Price, bassist Craig MacGregor and drummer Roger Earl, was originally a blues-oriented band. However, Tight Shoes, their tenth album, signals a change in direction toward a harder-rocking yet more melodic sound. Although this may seem as a big change, Foghat should continue to be a huge crowd-pleaser.

After viewing the first two bands, the audience was already filled with anticipation of seeing the Outlaws. The Outlaws, introduced as "The Florida Guitar Army," opened their show with a song off their Lady in Waiting album, appropriately entitled, Stick Around for Rock and Roll. The songs in the rest of the show were taken equally from all seven Outlaws albums. Songs from their first album, The Outlaws, included There Goes Another Love Song and the instrumental, Waterhole. From their Playin' to Win album, the Outlaws performed You Are the Show and Take it anyway You Want it. Other songs included Bluewater, Hurry Sundown and Holiday.

The first part of an Outlaws' concert, when compared to other concerts, may seem very short, but no one plays an encore like the Outlaws. The title song from their new album, Ghost Riders, was played, followed by their biggest hit, Green Grass and High Tides, a song that can last anywhere from twenty minutes to a half hour.

The guitar duties throughout the concert were distributed between the outlaw's three guitarists — Hughie Thomasson, Billy Jones, and Freddie Salem. During "Green Grass, however, all three teamed forces and turned out an awesome stage show.

This last song was typical of the whole evening — wild stage shows, hard-driving guitar solos, and pure, intense rock and roll.

The Eagles Caught Live

By AMY MACLACHLAN

The Eagles double live album greets the public as a pleasant, unexpected surprise. In order to keep in step with the usual progress of the group, fans should not have expected another installment for at least three years. The Long Run, last year's addition to the growing Eagles' anthology, was well received and satiated appetites for new material. Fortunately, while working on their studio release, the members of the Eagles were also recording live cuts during their various concert tours. Thus we finally have an available record of this group doing what they do best, appearing live.

Joe Walsh reminds us of his presence in the group through his two songs on the album. Life's Been Good needs almost no comment, other than that it is basically a great song and, when performed live, it is unmatchable. All Night Long appears on the sound track of the movie Urban Cowboy, but not on any previous Eagles album. The live version once again shows Walsh's fluency with the electric guitar and his unbelievable ability to stimulate the live audience. His talent seems wasted in the recording studio.

Three songs from The Long Run are included in this collection. Timothy B. Schmit, the group's newest member, sings his touching I Can't Tell You Why with a delicacy that is hard to attain in the presence of an excited crowd. Needless to say, this version is very successfully done, with a great deal of feeling, spotlighting Schmit's phenomenal vocals that are reminiscent of his Poco days. Other selections from The Long Run include a rock and roll version of Heartache Tonight, and the title track, The Long Run.

The choices taken from Hotel California include the old favorite Life in the Fast Lane, performed with style and excitement that are alone the Eagles'. Wasted Time, rarely done in concert due to complex orchestral arrangements, satisfies the fan's curiosity as to how this delicate song is handled

THE PROMISE OF PSI Positive Self-Image TRAINING

"You have within you, right now, the natural power to become more than what you are. The power to rid yourself of old habits and fears. The ability to become the person you would most like to be: happy, healthy and fulfilled.

Unfortunately, if you are like most people, you have not yet come to master that power.

This is the promise of my PSI Training Seminar: to help give you the ability to forge a new personality . . to throw off the handicaps of timidity and indecision . . . to drop the destructive bad habits of smoking and overeating . . . to gain deep relaxation . . . to achieve peace of mind . . . and come in control of your life."

WHAT IS THE PSI TRAINING SEMINAR?

The PSI Training Seminar is a system for personal improvement that works! It has been designed for use by anyone: professionals; students; business people; housewives . . . everyone interested in becoming more than what they are.

In one evening, just four hours, you will learn how to attain anything you are able to visualize in your mind. You will learn HOW TO use your human computer to motivate yourself to desirable action at will . . . HOW TO use your conscious mind to direct your thoughts, control your emotions and ordain your destiny by influencing the power of your subconscious to affect and control emotions, instincts, tendencies, moods, attitudes and feelings . . . HOW TO form desirable habits and eliminate undesirable habits at will . . . HOW TO set goals — high goals — and HOW TO achieve them.

The PSI Training Seminar is a safe and reliable method that will help you realize your full potential through positive thinking, tapping the subconscious, goal-setting and self-hypnosis.

Why is self-hypnosis part of this program? Because all positive change requires a reinforcement that self-hypnosis best provides. Through self-hypnosis you can alter your normally unreachable subconscious self-image and become the kind of person you would most like to be.

WITH PSI YOU CAN:

- Increase Self-Confidence
- Eliminate Tension
- Become More Assertive
- Sleep More Restfully
- Overcome Fear & Worry
- Improve Reading Retention
- Eliminate Negative Habits
- Stop Smoking
- Lose Weight
- Control Anger
- Improve Memory & Concentration
- Stop Nail Biting
- Increase Energy & Productivity

Positive Self Image Training Seminar:

It can be best described as a 4-4½ hour program that teaches self-hypnosis for personal improvement. Over 9,000 people have used PSI training to help stop smoking, increase self-confidence, lose weight, improve memory and concentration and more.

Lennon Goes Loco With Yoko

By ROBERT M. MCGOVERN

Despite all the rumours that have been floating around for the past five years, John Lennon is indeed alive. After the release of Walls & Bridges in 1974, John decided to take a break from public life and retire to family and business matters. He was successful on both counts, especially in the financial area, as he is now worth a reported $150 million. (Whatever became of the leader in the fight against the establishment, the man who once sarcastically sang "there you stand with your L.A. tan and your New York walk, and your New York talk . . . ") Enough you say of John's personal life. I guess you haven't listened to this album yet.

One thing that must be said about this album straight away is that this is not a John Lennon solo album with Yoko passively sitting in on a few songs. It's just what the cover intimates, a collaboration by John Lennon and Yoko Ono, a double fantasy. As for the idea behind the album, it is original for John, something new, as this is his first solo concept album.

The purpose of this entire album is to present a dialogue between two intimates, namely John and Yoko. That it indeed does. However, it appears as though Yoko is deaf to what John is saying. The bulk of his contributions are very sincere expressions of all aspects of affection, while Yoko's responses in turn are sarcastic and biting. Doesn't seem to be the basis of a lasting relationship to me.

(Just Like) Starting Over, the single, begins the album and as does Beautiful Boy, has a three bell intro, and one would be certain that it is used as a device to draw your attention to these songs. And rightly so; this pair of songs is undoubtedly the best on the album. Starting Over is a terrific rocker displaying well John's deep roots in 50's rock'n'roll, while Beautiful Boy is a charming expression of John's love for his five-year old son Sean (who, coincidentally, was born on the same day as his father).

There are three contributions by Yoko that, unlike the other four, cannot go without recognition. Give Me Something is faultless in regards to the instrumentals and even the vocals aren't that bad, by far the most commercially accessible material that Yoko's ever done. Yoko takes us back to the 30's on I'm Your Angel which surprisingly is a very interesting little ditty. What else would one call a song that comes from way back when?

As for the remainder of John's material, there are definite allusions (instrumentally) to his earlier material. Cleanup Time, a nifty rocker which just the right amount of funk carefully added, suggests some of John's later outings, most notably Walls & Bridges. Watching the Wheels and I'm Losing You should more like earlier solo endeavors, with some primal scream (thankfully better contained) added so that we all wouldn't forget it.

The final selections by John Woman and Dear Yoko are of course, for Yoko. Woman is an apology for all hurts caused, past or present and Dear Yoko is a statement of his everlasting love for Yoko.

The idea behind this album, as can be gathered, is supposed to be the expression of love between two people, but Yoko fails to carry out her half of the arrangement. I'm Moving On flows from I'm Losing You, but not in the same vein. John's dialogue is tender, loving and down right beautiful, while Yoko's responses are harsh and castrating, almost as if she refuses to forgive John for any past wrongs. Similar sentiments are apparent on Beautiful Boys, a song that compares Sean to John, extolling the virtues of youth (naivete and freedom), while condemning the sins of age (complacency among them). A seemingly very critical of John as a person. But on Kiss Kiss Kiss Yoko seems to be very pleased with her lover as she ends the song with her patented banzai vocals interspersed with the sounds of an apparently fantastic orgasm (we'd always heard stories about John's virility). Nonetheless, one must wonder if Yoko's values are in the right place.

The shortcomings of this album are obvious, most notably the live. This version, although slightly different, still manages to maintain the same height of f eling as the studio version. Again, the title track, Hotel California, is also performed.

The songs chosen from Desperado include a version of Saturday Night, which is the b et cut on this album, and Doolin Dalton Reprise. Desperado is not omitted and the arrangement is, of course, perfect.

The only new selection on this album is Seven Bridges Road. This tune really does justice to the incredible harmonies the members of the group are famous for achieving.

Overall this album is very well done. One can be especially appreciative when taking into consideration the difficulty of choosing only a few songs from the vast repertoire the Eagles have accumulated over their long musical career.

JUST WHAT WE NEEDED

The Cars Motor Into Spectrum

By JERRY ARTH

"I'm just like everyone else, and I'm writing down things that people feel, sort of taking notes on the human race. I'm just a test pilot for mass hysteria."
Ric Ocasek

Mass hysteria was indeed the evidence on Tuesday, Nov. 25, as The Cars pulled into the Spectrum as they continue the tour for their latest release, Panorama. The Cars ignited the large crowd with their high-tech, new wave rock 'n' roll, leaving them sated and stunned.

Having improved immeasurably as a concert band, The Cars whipped through a tense, tight hour-and-a-half set, playing virtually all of their three album repetoire. The musicianship was flawless, and the staging, dramatic and understated. Whoever designed The Cars' stage (David Robinson?) did an incredible job; the brilliant silver and white geometric design perfectly complemented The Cars' cold, existential music.

The band's greatest response was drawn when Ric Ocasek, The Cars chief songwriter, took the mike to sing, mesmerizingly, such classics as You're All I've Got Tonight, and songs from the new album like Touch and Go, Panorama, and Gimme Some Slack. His frozen detached style was absorbing, as much so as his free-verse lyrics.

The rest of The Cars performed excellently as well. The singing of bassist Benjamin Orr, the band's sex symbol, was more than adequate; it isn't as atrocious as it once was. Elliot Easton's guitar playing was perfect, precise and well-defined, not pretentious or showy. And, needless to say, The Cars' true musical leader, Greg Hawkes, performed on keyboards with typical savoir faire and style.

The opening act, The Romantics, did a credible though unremarkable set, playing mostly material from their new album, National Breakout. They did, however, delight the audience with the big hit from their debut LP, What I Like About You.

But the evening rightly belonged to The Cars. With their highly futu istic, sophisticated sound, combined with approximately minimalistic staging, The Cars were a perfect example of highly-polished artistry. And obviously the audience appreciated it, for the band played four encores.

Hurt Portrays Merrick in 'The Elephant Man'

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Every so often, a film reveals something about that which we value most, the spirit of humanity. People who take such a film to heart sometimes become wonderfully awakened from the hypnotic rhythm of life in the global market, to be born into a new world through which runs the golden thread of the divinity. If The Elephant Man, a wrenching portrait of the life of John Merrick, is powerful enough to change some one person's perception of life, that person is most fortunate.

There are virtually no flaws in this film, as it touchingly relates the inspiring story of Mr. Merrick. John Hurt, in the most difficult lead role he has yet played, could have easily slipped into overstating the tragic dimensions of Mr. Merrick's life; instead, he flirts with the timidness Merrick developed after years of bearing the eyes of people who gawked at his appearance and ignored his spirit. This beast housed beauty of such magnitude that his timid apologies for the beast are excruciating and unnecessary. While watching this misshapen hulk of a man's gallantry and listening to his lust for life, one is seized by the desire to applaud and embrace him.

It is difficult to write with tears in your eyes and the awareness of murder in your soul. The Elephant Man is also about the man left in the wake of the Industrial Revolution, and his brutal murder of truth, beauty and sensitivity in the frenzied rush toward Wall Street. How is one to accept the fact that this man, or any man, is doomed by circumstances beyond his control, and is further yet beaten for physical weakness and laughed at for his intellectual strength, with anything less than the horror of self-realization?

So for those who confront The Elephant Man on purely personal terms, the rewards are worth the price of admission countless times over. Of course, one is always left with the freedom to choose to turn away. Everyone except John Merrick. . .

Kansas : Audio-Visual

By SUE BRENIM

The American-bred rock band Kansas performed at the Spectrum on Saturday, November 22. As laser lights projected the band's name onto the backdrop, they entered before an enthusiastic audience with Beethoven's 5th Symphony.

They offered a variety of favorites from their last six albums: opening with the title song from The Point of No Return, into Icarus: Born on Wings of Steel, from Masque, their third lp. Steve Walsh, lead vocalist and keyboard player, has one of the more polished voices in rock with a wide range, an emotional quality containing control, and is powerfully dynamic. Kerry Livgren, innovative lead guitarist and keyboardist, together with Walsh writes most of the music and lyrics for Kansas. Their image-producing lyrics are mystical, idealistic, and reflect hints of medieval ballads.

Steve Walsh of Kansas

They continued to perform one song from each of their solo efforts, both released this past year: Walsh's energetic hit You Think You've Got It Made; and The Mask of the Great Deceiver in which Livgren displays his creative musicianship. Kansas successfully combines rock and roll with classical music. Their style is one of complex tempo changes, with stop-time rhythm arrangements which contrast dynamically with beautifully flowing melodies.

Since their first album was released in 1974, the members of Kansas remain the same. They are Robby Steinhardt, violinist, viola player and lead vocalist. Steinhardt adds contrast in the form of interesting interplay between his lower, rougher sounding voice and his ability to harmonize with Walsh's high-pitched, clean vocals. Rich Williams, guitarist, helps complete the full sound behind their music by filling the empty spaces with carefully selected riffs. The double based drums are precisely handled by Phil Ehart, who along with bassist Dave Hope is responsible for the extreme tightness achieved by Kansas.

Attired in athletic shorts, Walsh actively fronted the encore. Kansas exited with as much class as when they entered.

'Fantasia'

By ALICE FISHER

Most people have the unfortunate misconception that the late Walt Disney created films for the young only. Fantasia is a case in point that proves that adults can enjoy the genius of Disney just about as much as the kiddies. This motion-cartoon is geared not only toward the imagination of the young, but also toward the appreciation of the adults. Everyone loves leaping toadstools, evil sorcerers, Mickey Mouse, and dancing hippos in full, vivid color doing impossible stunts. But it would take a grown-up to notice the perfect detail and subtle humor and to wonder at the talent of a man who can intricately choreograph pen and ink to the immortal compositions of Beethoven, Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky.

No child would care that one of the worlds greatest orchestras lead by one of the greatest modern composers accompanied Disney in this masterpiece and a chance to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra under Stravinsky is more than worth the money. Only an adult would realize that this is a "one of a kind film," made by a "one of a kind" man, whose technique will never be copied. We'll live through a dozen Star Wars and Alices in their Wonderlands and they will remake the Wizard of Oz for every type of Dorothy that comes down the lane, but there will be only one Fantasia.

Anyone who grew up with Disney should see the film just to bring back the old days of Tinker-Bell and Bambi. The above rantings and ravings don't interest you? The film is a natural high — you don't need a joint to carry yourself away to fantasy land.

A Star Is Made?

Tommy Dee, hero of 'The Idolmaker'

By ECHELMEIER YOUNGER

Who says dreams never come true? According to Tommy Dee (Paul Land) and Caesare (Peter Gallagher), dreams can become reality.

United Artists presents a movie release by Howard Koch, Jr. and Gene Kirkwood starring Ray Sharkey as Vincent Vaccari, Tovah Feldshuh as Brenda Roberts, Peter Gallagher, Paul Land and Joe Pantoliano in The Idolmaker.

The 1950's was time of ideals and ambitions and where dreams were no longer conceptualized as dreams but viewed as a reality. Caesare and Tommy Dee, products of Vincent's experiments, were transformed from New York's hip street, leather jacket wearing kids, into tailored-fitting continental dressed music idols.

Vincent Vaccarri, a multi-talented singer/songwriter, felt he didn't have the idol appeal, so instead of being an idol himself, he created them. Vinnie promoted his artists from a small New Jersey club to sock hops run by local D.J.'s, to the National Bandstand and then fainally to his own concerts.

The Idolmaker presents to the movie-goer an idea of what the music business is all about by exploring the cut-throat aspects of what it takes to make and be an idol.

Watercats Drown Colonials

By BETH WHITE

Villanova Watercats are on way to realizing their goal of ning season this year with first meet ending in a 69-24 y over George Washington rsity.

Bob Baltera

The Watercats claimed 12 first-ce finishes out of the 13 events the meet, and three members of e team finished with two or re wins to their credit: junior Dan Ahern (in the 200 back-stroke, 200 individual medley, and as backstroker on the winning medley relay team), senior diving captain Mark Feldner (who amassed more than 220 points on just two dives), and senior co-captain Tod Russell (in both the 100 and 200 meter free style).

Tod Russell

"Even though the score doesn't show it," commented Head Swimming Coach Ed Geisz, "we earned our victory. A lot of the races were down to the wire, where one swimmer just out-touched the other." Geisz was pleased with the performance of his team, commenting that he was "impressed with 70% of the times, and disappointed in the other 30%." But, according to Geisz, "That's not unusual for the first meet."

Geisz commends the Watercat co-captains, seniors Bob Baltera and Tod Russell, as "great leaders. The other swimmers look to them for leadership, and they add something to the team every day."

Baltera, the more vocal of the duo, believes that "This year's team is just as good as last year, if not better. We only lost one butterflyer from last year's squad, so I definitely think that we can have a winning season." The Watercats

Harriers Place Ninth in Nationals

Korir Earns All-American Honors

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Cross Country team traveled to Wichita, Kansas on November 24 to take part in the 42nd annual N.C.A.A. Cross Country Championships.

Villanova, who was looking for a top ten finish, did so finishing ninth in a field of 25 schools. More impressively however the Cats were the second eastern school to cross the finish line, behind a strong Penn State team who finished third. The University of Texas-El Paso powered their way to yet another cross country title placing three runners in the top four finishers. Finishing second was the University of Arkansas who was followed by Penn State.

The Wildcat cross-country team Charlie Guida Photo

The Harrier's received banner performances from Amos Korir, John Hunter, Sydney Maree, Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keeffe. Korir, who was competing in his final collegiate cross country meet, ended his outstanding career with a 21st place finish, good enough to earn All-American honors. According to Coach Jack Pyrah, "Amos ran a super race. It was only fit that an All-American ended his cross country career as an All-American."

John Hunter finished 56th in a field of 350. "Hunter ran probably the best cross country race of his career. John is usually an 800-Meter runner but he ran outstanding," continued Pyrah.

The Wildcat coaching staff was most impressed by the races ran by freshmen Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keeffe. Pyrah commented, "the two freshmen ran very well. They are both half milers or milers but it was not obvious by the way they ran. They both showed great composure in their first national meet."

When asked about the team's finish, Coach Pyrah replied, "we went out there hoping to finish in the top ten and we did it, but more importantly we beat both Providence and Bucknell who beat us earlier in the year. We were all very pleased by the team's performance."

Mancuso Defies "Sophomore Jinx"

By JIM FEMIA

The "sophomore jinx" is one of the strangest and most unexplainable phenomenon in the world of sports. Ask Walt Dropo, who during his rookie season with the Boston Red Sox in 1950, pounded out a league-leading 140 R.B.I.'s and batted .350. By August of the next year, Dropo was playing second base for Pawtucket, the Red Sox farm team. Ask Mark "The Bird" Fidyrich who captured the hearts of every baseball fan throughout the country winning rookie-of-the-year honors in 1976 and has not played a full season since. Ask others such as Detroit Tiger Lou Whitaker, Boston's Fred Lynn or maybe football's Jim Plunkett. But last season's Mid Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference's Rookie-of-the-Year Chris Mancuso has not been bitten by the "jinx" yet. The sophomore center has collected one goal in six of the team's eight games and has scored two or more goals in four of the games.

"The jinx never really entered my mind," stated Mancuso. "I knew if I worked hard and kept pushing, the goals would come. Having Barry Whitaker on the right wing again this season is a big plus and Frank Segreto has worked in great with us."

"Sal," as known by his teammates, earned Rookie-of-the-Year honors last season scoring 17goals and passing out 16 assists for 33 points, which ranked him second on the team. He was also selected for the second team all-star squad.

So far this season Chris leads the team in scoring with goals and assists. He plays on the power-play, kills penalties and does anything else Coach Skip Probst asks of him.

Coach Probst boasts of Mancuso being the slickest center in the league. "He's just super with the puck, he'll never make a stupid pass or hog the puck. He's a super playmaker with a great mind for the game." Probst then spoke of selecting "Sal" as assistant captain for the 1980-81 season. "From the first day he stepped on the ice I knew he was a leader. Chris is a quiet leader but a good leader. I know it is unusual to name a player assistant captain after one season but I have the utmost confidence in Chris." Probst then added, "I do not think Whitaker or Segreto have scored a goal this year when Chris has not assisted. He has a great future at Villanova and I am a lucky man to have him around for another two years."

When asked about his fantastic start Chris explained, "He's been hard work by everyone on my line. Barry and I have been together for two years now and Frank has fit in nicely. But having a good year personally is not as important as winning the cup. We can win it all this year but it is not going to be easy. We are going to have to play together as a team and hopefully things will fall into place."

Four weeks into his sophomore season Chris Mancuso is living up the "jinx" to rest. "I just hope I continue to help out the team. I don't start thinking about the jinx that might catch me, so to cope with that, I do not think about it." As long as "Sal" does not think about the "jinx" the Icecats just might have a chance to win their first ever Hanningan Cup.

finished last year's season with a 9-5 record.

Baltera describes co-captain Tod Russell as "more quiet, a silent leader." Russell agrees that the squad is as good as last year, especially considering that most of last year's team is returning and transfers Daryll Linder and Paul Clark will be eligible to compete this year.

"The team has a lot of spirit, probably even more than last year," concludes Russell.

The Watercats' first home game is against Kings College today at 3:30 in the Field House pool.

Past Events Recalled

By JERRY VENTRESCA
SPORTS EDITOR '79-80

I remember the first article I wrote for the Villanovan, back on February 16, 1979. The assignment was intramural basketball and I became familiar with names like "Bang Gang," "Simple Dreams," "Gimmie-The-Ball" and "The Noms." What the heck is a nom?

I had more trouble fighting off guys from my wing, who had a resident basketball team and wanted a write-up in an article on the intramural league, than getting a team's won-lost record. That was easy. Either teams were undefeated or had a "Write us up anyway, we'll definitely make the playoffs" attitude. Sure, a 2-2 team definitely has a shot at the playoffs — and the football team is in a rebuilding year, for the fifth year in a row.

As is still evident, but to a lesser extent since the installation of the Astroturf and Rubaturf, Villanova needs modern athletic facilities — an indoor track, fieldhouse, weightroom and lockers.

In a lengthy article, I made it obvious most athletes on campus were very dissatisfied with the facilities open to them. They used words such as "small," "terrible," "hideous" and "ridiculous" to describe the facilities. The article surely didn't favor the administration, so I promised I would follow it up with another article expressing the administration's point of view. That article never came about, because every Thursday at the printers a section either has too little space or too little copy. That particular Thursday there was too little space and I wasn't the editor then, so the administration article got axed. But we all know what has happened to Villanova Stadium recently.

Editorial

However, there were to be a few articles never to make it to the Villanovan, not because of lack of space, but because they were too controversial or "the administration would be on our backs" if we wrote about a certain topic. Listening to my superiors and wanting to stay out of trouble, I never pursued the topics why Villanova turned down an offer to have a stadium built at no cost or why a female in the athletic department was forced to resign or how did a certain student organization spend a large sum of money on a weekend at Notre Dame. These are all rumors I was told . . . sure.

My most interesting experience as a writer came last year when the football team played at Cincinnati. An all-expenses-paid trip and the school picked up the tab on all my meals. This was no time to be conservative. I came back to reality when the Cats dropped another one and it was a quiet ride home.

Then there was the Olympics — the Residence Halls Olympics — which got off on the right foot last semester and was promised, if the program was a success, could include all undergraduates eventually. These Olympics, unlike the Moscow ones, went on, and still exist, despite a letter by a student expressing his dissapproval of a program closed to commuters. First of all, I appreciated the concern over one of my articles, and secondly, I never thought too much of opposing viewpoints.

Later that semester, George Bush visited the campus, but the big news in St. Mary's was the all-St. Mary's Final in the Resident Basketball League between Third World and Athlete's Foot. And from that champion Third World club, Jeff Sherry moved on as a successful walk-on with Rollie's team.

Hoopsters Stomp St. Francis

BY LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcats overcame a 33 point performance by St. Francis guard Eric Greene to defeat the Terriers, 95-73, in the fieldhouse on Tuesday night. The victory improved the Cats record to 1-0 while St. Francis fell to 0-1.

The Wildcats started the game sluggishly; shot after shot rolled around the rim but refused to fall. St. Francis took advantage of Villanova's slump to stay close as the lead see-sawed back and forth. The Terriers were kept in the game by Greene's sharp shooting from the outside and quick penetration to the hoop. Greene wasn't the only player on the court who could penetrate however, as Stewart Granger soon showed. A few quick driving lay-ups by Granger re-established Villanova's control of the game. "He (Greene) was penetrating on us so I felt that it was time for me to do it to them," said Granger. "Greene was real tough tonight, but he's a typical schoolyard player, as was their whole team," he added.

The second half opened with Alex Bradley flashing his All-Star form. The 6'-6-1/2" senior forward went on a tear, scoring eleven points in the first five minutes. "Hitting in streaks is all right, "but I can't keep playing like that," commented Bradley. I know that my games will come.

The Villanova offense settled down to a more deliberate pace midway through the second half. Wildcat ball control and a height advantage stifled the Terrier offense for the remainder of the game.

Coach Massimino wasn't totally pleased with the Cats performance. "Our foul shooting was as bad as it has been in a long time. Another point of emphasis is that we aren't getting enough easy baskets," he explained. Massimino wasn't worried about the Wildcats inability to shut down the high scoring Greene. "He was as good a player tonight as we'll face all year," noted the coach.

The Wildcats next game will be tomorrow night at the Palestra where they will square off against the Friars of Providence College. The clash will be the second of a double-header and will mark the opening of Big East inter-conference play for the season. Last year the Cats ran over the Friars, 62-52, at the Providence Civic Center.

Big East Respected

By PAT FLYNN

The names leap impressively from the sea of black and white that makes up page three of last week's issue of The Sporting News. There, in the pre-season proclamation of the top 40 college basketball teams in the land, are the names of Villanova, Connecticut, Syracuse, St. John's and Georgetown, all listed at number 32 or better. The Big East Conference, in relative infancy, has made its mark.

Another quick glance reveals four ACC schools in the top 32. And four from the Big Ten, basketball's other powerhouse. Three from the Pac-10. Three from the SEC. But nobody else can boast five.

Fans of those conferences were quick to point out, with good reason, that none of the Big East schools are mentioned in the top 10, the real proof of power in hoop discussion. True, there's not a Maryland or a Kentucky in the bunch. But there's also not a doormat like Georgia Tech around these parts either.

Therein lies the beauty of this young league. The balanced excellence of the Big East, with Boston College, Providence and Seton Hall within striking distance of the other five, will be the greatest factor in the conference's growth. Already this season's race promises to be one of the best, if not the best, in the nation. The competition, combined with a good television contract and exposure in four of the ten major media markets in the US, could send the league to the top in a hurry.

Moreover, the individual Big East schools will be able to use that competitive balance and the TV exposure as recruiting tools to pursue the nation's best players. For example, witness the strong showing that Villanova has already made in the bid for Pat Ewing, the New England big man whom Stree and Smith's Basketball Guide lists as the number one high school senior of this year's crop. The Big East schools will improve evenly and within a few years will stampede toward the Top Ten, much like the Big Ten has done recently.

In the final analysis, Villanova's entry into the Big East is perhaps the simple most important athletic event in many a year at this school. The Cats' schedule, which has always been formidable, displays this year no less than 15 games against teams which reached the NCAA Tournament or the NIT last year. That kind of company can be a catalyst for true future greatness.

There's no way to predict the order of finish this year. It's tough to ignore Syracuse's 106-18 record over the last four seasons. Or the fact that Georgetown came within a point of the Final Four last year. Or St. John's 19-1 record at one stage of the season. Or Connecticut's impressive front court. Or our own Wildcats, who return four starters from a team that won 23 games.

But, however it turns out, the dream is now reality. The Big East is here.

Women Shoot for Regionals

By MICHAEL HEALEY

If all goes as expected, the Villanova Women's Basketball team can look forward to a good season. Under the guidance of two year coach Harry Perretta, the Cats posted a best-ever 20-5 record last season. With this year's personnel a similar record is attainable. A solid nucleus has been formed with returning players Lisa Ortlip, Kathy Beisel, Mary Beth Gibson, Karen Hiznay and Stephanie Vanderslice. Newcomers Nancy Bernhardt, Andrea Burton, Sue Castellan and Maureen Coleman, solidify the team for 1980-81 campaign.

Named to the All-Tournament Team were junior center Lisa Ortlip and freshman sensation Nancy Bernhardt.

Coach Perretta's goals for this season are to win twenty games and to make the regional play-offs. No easy task, when one considers the opponents. Featured on this season's schedule are nine teams which made regional play-offs last year, including such powerhouses as Rutgers, Penn State and Cheyney State, as well as perennial foes Temple, LaSalle and St. Joe's.

The Cats started the season on a high note as they whipped Pitt 77-55, in the Dial Classic at Montclair, New Jersey. The next game proved to be more difficult as the squad fell to Montclair State, 68-60. According to Coach Perretta, "It was a game in which we played well enough to win, but came up at the short end of the stick. Some days, the ball just doesn't go in the basket."

Coach Perretta was quite pleased with his team's performance and is expecting solid showings from his players in future games. Certainly one aspect of this year's team which will help achieve a winning record is depth. The Cats are deep through ten players, and this will be a great help with the demanding schedule that has to be played.

With team effort, hard work and a few lucky bounces, it will be a successful season for the Villanova Women's Basketball Team. As Coach Harry Perretta put it, "If we play as well the rest of the season as we did in the tournament, we're going to win alot of games."

Students Get Into Training

BY KYLE GOTHNER

The Trainer's Room at the field house is a familiar spot among many Villanova athletes. It is where Dan Unger and his seven student assistants apply their knowledge of athletic training to the various ailments experienced by the athletes.

The seven student assistants are from both Villanova as well as West Chester. Four of the students are Health and Physical Education majors who are planning on careers in athletic training. They are filling their clinical requirements by putting in 1800 practical hours here at Villanova over the course of three years. The three other assistants are from Villanova; two nursing majors, senior Maribeth Harr and junior Carmine Sotorrio, and sophomore accounting major Joe Pendrak. All three are on work study with a tuition wavier arrangement determined by experience, year, and need.

All of the trainers are very helpful and all of them work together in order to help each other yet they each have their own responsibilities. Each assistant is responsible for an assigned team and their duties involved in taking care of that team require that they be in the training room to do any necessary taping for their team as well as the football team, to attend all practices, to always refer injuries to Dan Unger, and to recommend that any serious injuries or continual problems be seen by the doctor. The fall and spring seasons are the busiest times for the trainers when they sometimes must work as much as four hours a day, seven days a week.

Positions as student assistants are open to anyone who is interested. Freshman and sophomore nursing, biology, and premed majors with strong backgrounds in anatomy and physiology are primarily what the trainers are looking for, but anyone who is interested, who will be dedicated, who will want to work, and who will want to learn is encouraged to apply.

Wildcats End Winning Season

By KERRY LYNCH

The Temple Owls fell prey to the rampaging Wildcats 23-7. For Coach Bedesem and his Cats the victory was an important one, enabling them to start the '80's with a winning season.

Anthony Griggs and Joe Makold lead a crew of Cats in cutting short the run of a Temple runner. Griggs, alone, was in on 15 total tackles. Dave Coskey Photo

Coach Bedesem said of his team: "The team, despite difficult times throughout the season, rose to the occasion to be true winners."

Coach Bedesem opened his sixth season at Villanova by remarking that the 1980 squad was "the best group of young men, talent-wise, that I've seen." The Wildcats proved deserving of the praise as they ended their season 6-5.

The facts support what the fans have seen. Over the 11 game schedule, the Wildcat defense ranked third in their Division 1-A standings for fewest points scored against — a mere 137, including a nine quarter streak in which opponents were unable to score a single touchdown. Coach Bedesem stated that "it is very definitely the best defensive unit in the six years since I've been here. The Temple game was indicative of the whole defensive year."

Interfering with the Owls passing game, the Wildcat defense racked up three fumble recoveries, three tipped passes and three interceptions. The Villanova ground game paid off as the Wildcats persistently pressed into Owl territory for two touchdowns and three field goals.

Bushbeck, junior placekicker, came up with a perfect score on this final test of the '80 season. He was three for three on field goal attempts and both his tries for the extra point sailed clear through the uprights.

Exhibiting many talents all season, the Temple game was the finale in which Don Ziesel showed how explosive he is in the fullback position. In 16 rushing attempts he gained 121 yards and pushed the line of scrimmage further into Owl territory on two completed passes. His longest run, and the longest run from the line of scrimmage all season was a 56 yard carry over the right guard for a touchdown. His incredible speed on the run downfield is known in these parts as "Ziesel Power."

The Wildcats, with senior Pat O'Brien directing the plays, capitalized on a short Temple punt, putting the ball in play at the Owl thirty four. On a series of steady gains up the middle, Ziesel set up the ball at the Owl three yard line. Shawn Passman took the pitch out from O'Brien and carried left but fumbled the ball into the endzone. But once again the Wildcats were ready to rescue themselves as Willie Sydnor jumped on the ball for an endzone recovery and touchdown.

Individual talent and effort combined to make this team the winner it was.

To start, the end of the career of quarterback Pat O'Brien who ranks in the Villanova record books as all time leader in total offense with 4,157 yards. Coach Bedesem says he "always had respect and admiration for his ability." But perhaps even more important is what he says of O'Brien when he lost his starting position for several games midseason. "Pat never dropped his head, or what we call going south, as far as his intensity to get in there. He helped out Kevin, (Ingram, replaced O'Brien at quarterback) my respect for him is number one."

Captains Burke and Arcidiacono were important to the team both on and off the field. "The two complemented each other nicely."

Dan Burke, roverback, plays in the defensive secondary and always seems to be making a crucial tackle. On the field Burke is a consistent player and his coach says "Dan is a spirit type of guy."

Joe Arcidiacono, offensive tackle, doesn't get much glory in the press but his blocking is a big asset to the Wildcat offense. Coach Bedesem says "Archie is a leader by example, a good liaison between myself and the players."

Howie Long's strength and speed lend depth to the Villanova defense at the tackle position. Long, according to Bedesem, "played super football all year." An opinion reaffirmed by Blue Grey Bowl Directors when they chose him to play in the traditional Christmas Day Game.

The Temple game was a big one and Nova got the victory. The 1980 Wildcats enter the decade winners.

Likewise, Tom Jensen's future was brighter. Earlier this semester he was given another year to play college football — his sixth, which is just one shy of all the years Bluto spent at Farber College. But the Cats opened the season on a losing note — 7-3 to Maryland.

And then two months ago the Budweiser Athlete of the Week was revived, and so too the apathetic students who didn't care who the Bud Athlete of the Week was. Nominations were scarce, except from us editors and the Sports Information Director's office.

Finally, along came this year's intramural football playoffs, and I didn't want to see DTD or King's Court win it all because neither team deserved the championship following their rough tactics on the field. Fortunately neither one did, thus saving the Intramural Department from much criticism from this writer. However, I probably would've been advised not to publish such an article because it would be too controversial.

So much for free press. But the Villanovan goes on, winning its share of annual awards and serving Villanovans as a responsible paper should.

Ceremony Honors Hostages

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

A gathering of students, faculty, and other interested observers converged in front of the Connelly Center on Monday at 1:00 p.m. to demonstrate community concern for the American hostages in Iran.

Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., began the observances with a reminder that the people present at the gathering had spent Thanksgiving with their families and would shortly be celebrating the Christmas season at home. He stated that for four-hundred days, fifty-two Americans have been unable to enjoy this freedom, and he expressed the hope that soon the hostages would be reunited with their families.

Henry Amoroso, student body president, followed this with a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance, and the announcement of the name of each captive.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, fifty-two helium balloons were released.

Attached to each balloon was a yellow ribbon and the message "Let Our People Go." The yellow ribbon was a symbol of release or freedom for the American hostages.

The ceremony was formulated by the Villanova Student Coalition, an ad-hoc group organized by the Consumer Club. The club sent invitations to other university organizations to participate in Monday's ceremony.

Dr. Adolph S. Butkys, moderator of the Consumer Club, felt that the ceremony was a way to show that students are concerned. "It is amazing that there are so few students involved in this issue. The cause is a just one, and I feel it is a real benefit to society to show that students still want to be involved," said Butkys.

Butkys was pleased with the results of the ceremony. "We did what we set out to do," said Butkys. "We wanted this to be a symbolic act."

"We were very pleased with the media coverage for the event. A picture of the ceremony made the front page of the Bulletin and we also got a thirty-second spot on one of the local news shows," said Butkys.

Butkys estimated there were between two and three hundred people present for the ceremony. He said that many more people saw the event from different buildings on campus.

"We had to improvise the ceremony a bit," added Butkys. "We were tentatively promised that several band members would be present so that we could play the national anthem. It did take away some of the glamor of the ceremony."

Butkys also said that the families of the hostages have been notified of their activities. Butkys contacted the Families Liaison Action Group (FLAG) in Washington, D.C. about the ceremony last week.

He said that FLAG has mentioned previous Villanova activities on behalf of the hostages in previous press releases.

Earlier in the semester, Butkys and some students sent a letter to Iran appealing for the release of the hostages.

Budget Priorities Proposed

By DOUGLAS EARL

The University Senate will discuss a committee report on priorities for this year's budget at a special meeting in January.

The report was drafted by the Senate's Planning and Priorities Committee. If adopted, these priorities would be used to evaluate the proposed budget for 1981-1982.

The report drafted by the committee ranked priorities into three groupings; highest priority, high priority, and priority.

Falling into the first category are development and energy conservation. The committee considered faculty and salary adjustments and financial aid as high priorities, with academic capital improvements, west campus development, and dormitory capital improvements as priorities.

Dr. James Clarke, chairman of the committee, said, "Whatever the budget reflects, I'd be surprised if the university budget varies significantly from the priorities this year.

"My opinion is that this (the priorities) represents a good consensus of the students, faculty, and administration," added Clarke.

"I suspect the only concern is that on the floor of the Senate the faculty members of the Senate will try to make the faculty adjustment the most important of the priorities.

"There's no question that development and the academic areas have been neglected in the past," said Clarke.

Last year, the Senate adopted the administration's priorities as its own. In these priorities, faculty and staff adjustments were considered the first priority of the university.

Clarke feels that the committee's priorities will resemble the administration's priorities. "Our committee seems to be well represented. We have good students, faculty and administrators that seem to be concerned, which suggests that these priorities and the ones that the administration will submit are going to be very close," said Clarke.

In discussing the priorities, the committee felt that development and energy conservation deserved prime importance because they would yield a high return for a relatively small investment.

Last October, the Planning and Priorities Committee was charged to "annually evaluate the administrative priorities to see if they are in keeping with the institutional priorities."

Student Testimony Judged Useful

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Villanova attorney James Patterson and Vice President for Student Life John Deegan have expressed satisfaction with the testimony presented at last week's Public Utilities Company (PUC) hearing concerning pedestrian safety at the Villanova train station.

"I think it went very well," said Patterson. "I think the visit to the site went especially well. Having the judge go through the tunnel and go over the bridge is going to make it hard for him to say there is no danger, especially with the bridge."

Patterson feels that the student testimony given at the hearing was particularly useful in explaining the dangers women incur when they are using the tunnel at night, and in pointing out the problem of flooding in the tunnel during rainstorms. "Assuming the judge brushed aside the flooding problem, he still comes down to the last issue of whether it is safe to go under the tunnel at night."

Deegan also feels the students' testimony was necessary to demonstrate the dangers pedestrians face at the train station, saying, "There is a danger in crossing the bridge and that was demonstrated again and again by each testimony. The tunnel is not safe for women because of the way it is constructed. It is constructed at right angles, and when you go down the stairs, someone could be hiding in the tunnel and you would not see them. I think that students pressed their point and did it very well."

According to Patterson, there is no way of knowing when the judge will make his final decision on the case.

Increase Proposed . . .

Tuition Hike Judged Unrealistic

By ANNEMARIE URBINATO

The Senate Budget Committee has viewed the student Caucus' recommendations in regards to tuition increases due to rising costs in the university.

the university.

Dean Alvin Clay Jeff Page Photo

The six percent increase, according to Budget Chairman Dean Alvin Clay, is not enough to compensate for a three million dollar deficit for the fiscal year beginning May 1981.

The Administrative Committee's second draft for the forthcoming year proposed a nine percent increase in tuition and a twelve percent increase in room and board.

Although there has been an increase in outside income sources, the committee still felt that the proposed tuition increase was not enough to combat a 12 to 13 percent rise in the cost of living.

The Administrative Budget Committee also proposed a 12 percent increase in room and board. Last year, the Budget Committee felt that since resident students tended to use campus facilities more than commuter students, it was necessary to impose a greater percentage increase for room and board than in tuition.

A study by budget member Dr. Charles Zech, found that Villanova's tuition, however, was competitive to local universities.

According to a recent report of university priorities, the Senate Planning and Priorities Committee recommended that energy conservation and development be considered highest in priorities.

Chairman Alvin Clay emphasized that Villanova does not usually "run in the red" in deficits but "runs in the black, barely," in assets.

The Senate Budget Committee devised to "advise and monitor"

The Administrative Committee's second draft for the forthcoming year proposed a nine percent increase in tuition and a 12 percent increase in room and board.

Other proposed changes from the previous fiscal year's budget included tuition increases in the law and graduate schools, increases in funds for the Connelly Center and increases in university-sponsored financial aid.

A more drastic change in the second draft was a decrease in funds for maintenance. The Planning and Priorities Committee felt that although it was not the highest priority, this area should be given some consideration.

Before the budget is devised, both faculty and students are allowed to give input.

the administration's budget proposals. Any budget draft is subjected to change, according to Clay.

The last in this semester's series of Cultural Films, "Jules and Jim," is the story of a friendship between Jules, who is German, and Jim, who is French, and their twenty-year love for the same woman. It is filled with beauty, novelty, wit and loving high spirits. Jules and Jim will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema this Sunday, Dec. 14, at 6:30 and 9:00 p.m. Admission is $1.00 for students and $3.00 for the general public.

Planetarium Christmas Show

The Planetarium show, Star of Bethlehem, will be presented by the Villanova Planetarium on Friday, Dec. 12, at 8 p.m., and Friday, December 19, at 8 p.m.; in the Planetarium on the fourth floor of Mendel Hall.

Book Sale

From Jan. 12 thru Jan. 21 the Pre-Law Society will be running a used textbook sale in the North Lounge of Dougherty. We sell your used textbooks for a 10% commission and give you the rest of the money. You can also buy inexpensive used books for your own classes.

Congratulations

The Fedigan Hall Bruce Springsteen Ticket raffle was won by Bob "Schmedley" Ladzinski, a freshman resident of Fedigan. Special thanks to all who bought tickets.

Faculty and Staff Art

All members of the University community are invited to view the 1st Annual Faculty and Staff Art Exhibit on display in the Connelly Center through Dec. 22. The works of 20 artists, both faculty and staff members, display the wide range of interests of our colleaues. Many of the works are for sale. Prices and phone numbers are available in the Gallery.

Campus Ministry

The Augustinians will sponsor a retreat at Villanova December 28-30, for men who may be considering the possibility of a vocation to the religious life or priesthood. For further information — contact: Fr. John Stack, O.S.A., 108 Corr Hall, Ext. 7595.

Drama

The Annenberg Center will be quite festive in December when a production of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol opens in the Zellerbach Theatre for two weeks from December 17 through 28. Staged by the McCarter Theatre Company, Dickens' famous Christmas story has been adapted by Nagle Jackson who already has had great success with the play as produced yearly at the Milwaukee Repertory Theater.

Programs at the Annenberg Center are supported in part by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, the Mid Atlantic States Arts Consortium, the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency, and the University of Pennsylvania.

oblem of Vandalism Addressed

ing between administrators and residents of ad has addressed the vandalism in the area.

The purpose of the meeting, held on November 18, was to have the residents of Curwen Road discuss, with administrative officials, the problem of vandalism, and to see whether the problem could be rectified.

It was the intention of both the residents and administration to see that the problem was brought to the University's attention. Said one resident in reference to the meeting, "This is the first sign of any acknowledgement that they were (Villanova) in any way, shape or form involved (in the vandalism). We (residents) are all trying to work with the Villanova people, to see that this problem is resolved."

Located off North Ithan Avenue, Curwen Road is primarily an access street, used by Villanova as well as Rosemont students in travelling to and from Rosemont College. What is generally thought to be the cause of vandalism is students either going to or returning from parties which take place at either Rosemont or Villanova.

Henry Amoroso, student body president and organizer of the meeting in which this problem was discussed, said, "Vandalism on Curwen Road has been a problem for a number of years. The people have had their fences pulled down, bottles thrown on their lawns. One woman even had a hammer hurled through her window. People have to stop vandalizing these properties. The vandalism not only hurts the students, but it also gives the University a bad name."

As a result of the meeting, certain actions have been taken — others to follow suit — in order to alleviate the problem. What has been accomplished to date is that the fraternities and other groups which hold parties have been informed of the seriousness of the problem, and Campus Security will patrol Curwen Road, especially on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

Henry Amoroso said, "We're beginning to address the problem and bring some notification to it. We (Villanova) have grown in size and we are now living with these people. We have an obligation as neighbors to address the problem."

Regarding steps to be taken in the future, Amoroso indicated that there would be a warning publicized "as to the University's intention to take disciplinary actions against any student involved in noise, vandalism etc. in the area of Curwen Road. Also, a tightening of all social events which take place on campus."

In Amoroso's opinion, the meeting has been a success, for it has not only made the University aware of the seriousness of the problem, but it has also, to a degree, accomplished its intended goal of resolving the problem of vandalism. He said, "The residents were pleased with the meeting. They saw it as a very positive outcome and that Villanova was coming to grips with the problem, something which had not been done in the past." A resident of Curwen Road had similar views, "There has been a great deal less vandalism. I think the University is really trying to solve the problem."

The residents will meet with the administration in February to see what progress has been made.

He attributes the future success of the night school partly to the economy, explaining, "Many fine students who cannot attend day classes will look to night school as a means of attaining their desired education without sacrificing their jobs."

At present, Dr. Armenti has no specific changes planned for the college. He is going through a series of meetings with Dean Bruderle which will acquaint him with the responsibilities of the task he is about to undertake. Dr. Armenti noted that he is "looking forward to continuing the fine work that Dean Bruderle has begun."

Dates Set for Graduation

BY BILL CLARK

The dates for next year's graduation exercises have been released by the University. The announced dates incorporate the "Senior Week" proposal adopted by the University Senate at its October 24 meeting.

The scheduled exercises will take place on the weekend of May 16-17, one week after the last day of final examinations.

This move would give time for various activities during the week.

The College of Commerce and Finance will hold its commencement exercises on Saturday, May 16 at 10:00 a.m. The College of Engineering ceremonies will be held at 3:00 p.m. on that day.

On Sunday, May 17, the College of Arts and Sciences will hold their ceremony at 10:00 a.m., followed by the College of Nursing at 3:00 p.m.

University College and the Graduate School will hold their commencement exercises on Sunday evening at 8:00 p.m.

The Law School exercises are scheduled for Friday, May 15 at 11:00 a.m.

All the ceremonies are scheduled to take place in the Field House.

The NROTC mass will be held at 4:00 p.m. on Friday. The mass will be followed by the commissioning ceremony, which will be held at 5:30 p.m.

The baccalaureate mass for the Colleges of Commerce and Finance and Engineering will take place on Friday at 6:00 p.m. The mass for the other colleges and the Graduate School will take place on Saturday at 6:00 p.m.

The location for these activities has not been announced.

No decision has been reached in reference to commencement speakers by the university.

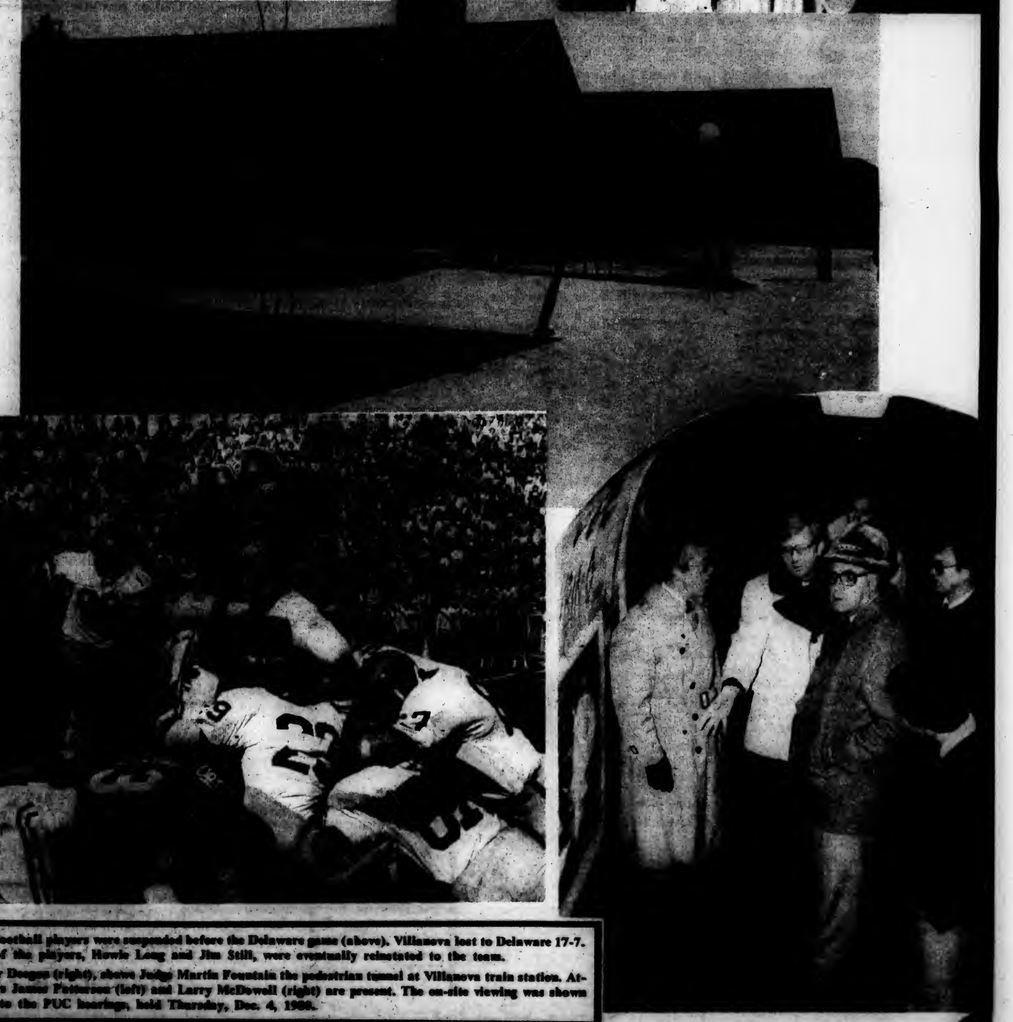
THE YEAR IN REVIEW 1980

George Bush spoke to Villanova students on April 21, 1980. He spoke prior to the Pennsylvania primary, in which he upset Ronald Reagan with 54% of the popular vote.

The Connelly Center (below) was completed in March. Cardinal Krol (insert), joined by Father President Driscoll and Mr. and Mrs. John Connelly, blessed the Connelly Center in September.



Four football players were suspended before the Delaware game (above). Villanova lost to Delaware 17-7. Two of the players, Howie Long and Jim Still, were eventually reinstated to the team.

If We Could Only Remember

The holiday season is a time to celebrate, a time to give thanks, a time to give a part of ourselves to each other. It is also a time to remember.

Another year in our lives has come to a close. During this time, we have had many successes, and yes, many setbacks. Some of our dreams have been lived, but many have not seen their day.

The important thing about these experiences is that they all have meaning. Through them, we grow, we prosper, we learn.

We can look back at an election year which brought division to our country. Many people disagreed on the issues and candidates because they were concerned about the future of our country. People were willing to take the time and listen. And yet, it all seems so long ago.

If we could only remember. The election is just a small part. Even though our votes are long-counted, the issues they represented go on.

We can look back at the winter Olympics in Lake Placid, when our hockey team accomplished the impossible. A group of proud amateurs defeated the best hockey teams in the world.

But now, it is all over. The joy and celebration that overtook our nation is now forgotten. Still, we lived it for a while.

We can look back on our hostages in Iran who have been held over four hundred days. In the early stages of the crisis, our country was outraged, but united. Flags were displayed from many homes and buildings. There were marches and concern for our fellow citizens. Somehow, our attitude has changed.

We listen to the development in the hostage crisis feeling it concern us no more. It is something for our government to handle. If we could only remember.

At Villanova, we also have experiences and events that deserve remembering.

Through an act of generosity, the Connelly Center was completed early this year. Our campus was excited about the opening. We were curious and thankful.

As the year closes, the Connelly Center has become "a part" of Villanova. It gets no special consideration. It has become routine. We seem to forget what it was like before.

There is also the on-going saga of the safety factors at Villanova. Last year, many students protested campus safety in a rainstorm because they were concerned. The death of a freshman girl crossing the railroad tracks made us realize and care. For a short time, we acted together.

The case for the crosswalk over the railroad tracks has continued a year. Last week, many students testified at the PUC hearing discussing the matter.

Many of us, however, fail to remember what caused the case in the beginning. It always seems to take an accident to make us realize there is a problem.

If we could only remember.

Response

Dear Editor:

In response to the December 5th editorial entitled "Rough Game" I feel obligated as both Coach and Vice-President of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity to address the issue at hand.

According to 'N.M.', he states, "Violence is not unusual in football today." This is wrong. Although football is a contact sport, violence is unusual in football today. Delta Tau Delta stresses good, clean, well played games of football. However, these so called "tactics that result in members of the opposing team being badly hurt" is not a part of Delta football. I believe the reason for these unfortunate injuries is due to our preparation for the football season. Physical fitness as well as aggressive play enables my team to be prepared for our games. We showed during the regular season that we play with a great deal of finesse and emotion — a love for the game. The fraternity league is, for the most part more physical than the other divisions. We did not change our game plan for the playoffs. Perhaps the reason for these "host of assorted injuries" lies not in the opposing team, but rather, in the officials, or in fact, the entire department and maybe even in the game itself.

DTD believes that the game has become "unnecessarily rough" and discussed the issue with Dr. Ted Aceto, Ed Geitz, and Dino Valente whereby it was dismissed as too much work for the intramural department to monitor the conduct of the games. If more preventive measures were taken by Villanova University, for example, the removal of a sewer cap at the goal line of Mendel field or the enforcement of mouthguards for players — then maybe, opposing teams will not need to be transported home in an ambulance. But until Villanova realizes the seriousness of this situation — we shall be victimized as "ASSASSINS."

Sincerely,
Kenneth J. Piasio

Uninformed

Dear Editor,

I would like to state in partial response to the article in The Villanovan on the Villanovan reporters who were denied entrance to a Faculty Assembly that I had somewhat similar experience. Although I represent the faculty members of the Departments of Classics, English and Modern Languages and Literatures in matters pertaining to the "welfare and service of the individual faculty members," I was not approached by those very members who complain about the lack of communication. Actually these colleagues went to seek help and solace from other quarters.

The Real Gift of Christmas Renews

...as new life will come from death, love will come at leisure. Love of ... love of life and giving without measure. Gives in return a wonderous ...n of a promise almost seen. Live hand-in-hand and together we'll stand ...the threshold of a dream.

GRAEME EDGE

The season of brotherhood is descending on the city of "brotherly ..." Glittering lights, red and green decorations and tinsel adorn the ... as it prepares for a celebration of joy that will signal the end of ...ther year.

In our cyclical world, every end is beginning; this time of year is no ...ption.

Christmas is the celebration of a birth, a renewal. The promise of this ...cent birth is available to all.

Too often, Christmas is cluttered by material gifts. The concept of ...hanging presents is a lovely idea; material comforts and even or...mental trinkets can show love in a physical way that words can not ...ays express.

Besides, Christmas is the time when that old, cheerful, red-suited ... sneaks through the darkness to leave brightly-colored bundles under ...istmas trees. Santa is everyone in disguise, a figment of the communal ...erican mind that satisfies the child in us all.

That child is what is too quickly forgotten. That young spirit seems to vanish as soon as the presents are unwrapped.

The essence of childhood is the innocent love, the wonder of wide eyes searching for truth and meaning.

Amid the material and the ritual, amid the parties and the feasts, amid the confusion and the noise, the simplicity of this season can be obscured or forgotten.

Christmas is life, brand new, yearning for meaningful growth. It's a manifestation of a human need for purity: an absence of greed, envy, pride and caring bound by restriction.

This season gives another chance to unfettered love and caring. The caring of a child, as well as the renewal of the myth of Santa, who gives without qualification; neither ask anything in return for their efforts.

It is only hoped that recipients of these symbols of love do the same; give without reservation and without qualification. Truly, to give unselfishly is a "gift" in itself. The children of Christmas have this, for awhile.

A new cycle, and soon a new year, begins with the love of this season. Perhaps, for some, the feeling of this holiday will be remembered a little longer.

Error

To the Editor:

In reference to the December 5, 1980 issue of The Villanovan, an error was discovered in the "On Campus" section. Being secretary of the physics club it was brought to my attention that Rick Vermeil is not a member of the physics department. For verification, I inquired about this matter in the physics office and found it to be true. Therefore, it would be greatly appreciated if the error were corrected and his actual major stated. However, if he would like to join the physics club, meetings are held every Tuesday at 12:30. Refreshments are served and guests are certainly welcome.

T-Shirts

To the Editor:

I fully sympathize with the Villanova Consumer Club's goal of obtaining the release of the U.S. hostages in Iran, but I think that their scheme of selling T-shirts with anti-Iranian slogans printed on them (as reported in a recent issue of The Villanovan) is counterproductive and only aggravates the crisis by contributing to anti-Iranian xenophobia. History did not begin on November 4, 1979; the current Iran hostage crisis was provoked by U.S. intervention in Iran's internal affairs for the past three decades; by its propping up of the Shah's brutal despotic regime against the wishes of the Iranian people. One can condemn the seizure of the U.S. Embassy and the taking of hostages while at the same time recognizing that the Iranians have a legitimate grievance over past U.S. support for the Shah whose ruthless reign of terror resulted in countless numbers of innocent people being imprisoned, tortured, or murdered. One can condemn the barbaric excesses of the Khomeini regime while not overlooking the fact that the Shah's regime committed even worse barbaric excesses for a far longer period of time. A recognition on the part of the U.S. government and people that it was wrong to back the Shah's criminal regime and a resolve to cease such intervention in Iran's internal affairs will facilitate the release of the U.S. hostages far more than the selling of T-shirts bearing anti-Iranian slogans.

John Lennon

To the Editor,

By the time most of you read this, it will come as no shock that John Ono Lennon was shot to death Monday night, while getting out of a street car in New York City. To some people this may not seem like such a big deal. To others such as myself, I feel we have lost not just a great songwriter, not just a liberal minded radical of the late sixties, but much more than that. Who can deny the social changes ignited by the Beatles in the sixties? Who can deny them the title, "The Greatest Rock and Roll Band Ever"? John Lennon was as much a part of all this, more so, than any of them. His mere presence on the streets of New York reminded people of his contributions to music, of his dramatic change in 1968, and of the part he played in the formation of today's society. His lyrics ring of protest, of peace, and of love . . . and now he's gone. I, personally feel a great loss through this, as many people will. John Lennon will live in our memories as do Elvis, Buddy Holly, etc.; the list could go on and on.

To those of us who loved Lennon and the Beatles, you will understand this letter. To those of you who didn't, you may think I'm making too much of it, and that it will pass over as did the deaths of others in his field.

But you're wrong. John Lennon's contributions to the music world and to society will be remembered always, like or dislike them, they will remain with us, as will John's memory.

Correction

Dear Editor:

I would like to make a correction to last week's story about the Faculty Assembly meeting. Dr. Michael Burke, Rev. Lawrence Gallen, and I prepared the investigative report and not Dr. Hahn, as reported by the Villanovan.

One of the reasons given for closing the meeting of November 25 was the faculty's concern for accurate reporting.

In light of the death of John Lennon, Villanova students were asked to give their reactions, opinions, etc.

Mark Brunn, Freshman, C & F (Accounting)

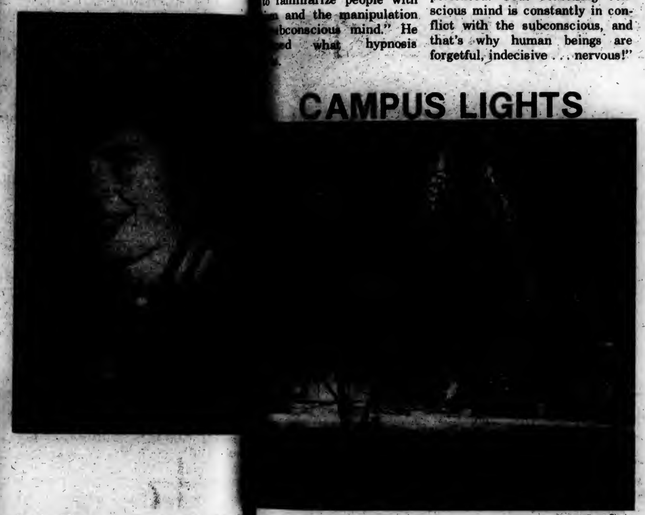
Heard about it last night. Felt real bad because he was a symbol of our time. He made history with The Beatles.

Bill Clark, Sophomore, Busine

This is the first cold bloo murder in rock's 25-year hist John was a great American poet the motivating force behind Beatles. It makes you wo what's going to happen next.

Kate McDonald, Sophomore, Communications

I was scared and shocked. It gave me an empty feeling. At first I didn't believe it, I thought it was another "Paul is Dead" rumor.



Bob Kovarovic, Junior, BSG

I think it's a tragedy. It's too bad that some maniac would want to shoot him. It's a loss to rock'n'roll.

Jeff Gautney, Freshman, Honors/ Psychology

It's terrible, incredible that such a man would be gunned down for no reason at all. Maybe they were trying to get Yoko and missed.

Susie Zimmer, Freshman, Math

"Oh, my God. I couldn't beli it." It's a real tragedy. It's too there are people in this world would do something like that.

Maggie Coyle, Freshman, Nursing

I was really surprised and kinda shocked. I didn't think anyone could kill someone in cold blood like that. The guy must really have been insane.

Ted Talis, Senior, Economics

Real bummer. It's the end of an era of rock'n'roll. Part of my Beatles' memories have been buried with him.

"It's the extension of concentration and imagination to a heightened state of awareness where the imagination becomes reality."

A subject is fully aware of what is going on, and must fully submit to the suggestions of the hypnotist.

"I cannot make someone do anything they consider wrong or immoral or embarrassing. Hypnotism is not sleep, it's merely a self-inflicted relaxation to the closest possible state of sleep without actually falling asleep. We believe that this point is where the subconscious mind may be tapped the easiest . . . your subconscious mind is a computer which doesn't reason, but records and stores every event, conversation, recollection — anything you've ever experienced. Your reasoning conscious mind is constantly in conflict with the subconscious, and that's why human beings are forgetful, indecisive . . . nervous!"

Mapes began the night with a short talk on hypnosis, discrediting the stereotyped "mind-controller" most often found in the movies and on television. Having the purpose of giving the audience a first hand experience with hypnosis, Mapes produced a demonstration using the powers of suggestion. Mapes then took thirty or so people from the audience, performed another demonstration, and narrowed the volunteers down to ten.

The ten volunteers then narrowed to three for the finale demonstrating regression. Remembering their fifth birthday, the two young men and young women were told to place their signatures on a blackboard during various stages of their regression.

"It wasn't so much that they were completely back at age five," Mapes said, "but everything from that period in their lives was completely clear and visible."

At the end of the show, Mapes discussed his workshop held Saturday, the sixth. It was a five hour program designed to break the average person into the world of the subconscious. Four of the five hours was devoted to lecture and demonstration; the last hour to personal meditation.

The fee for the seminar was $100. The public was charged $20, and the students $15. The University covered the rest of the cost.

Through hypnotic therapy, Mapes' organization is dedicated to the ideal of positive thinking. Dealing with smoking, bad habits, weight loss (as in Mapes' case), memory control, tension, and even study habits is dealt with through this suggestion.

Normal treatment usually begins by familiarizing the "patient" to the Positive Self-Image ideals, and to the use of hypnotism. The person must be willing and determined, and practice the relaxation and self-hypnosis techniques daily. Only occasional trips back to the hypnotist are necessary once the patient has learned the procedure. Interestingly enough, the same basic procedure may be varied to treat different ailments, but must be taken one at a time.

James J. Mapes, advocate of the Positive Self-Image program and hypnosis presented a show on campus to familiarize people with hypnosis.

"The basis of your personality and subsequent problems lie in your subconscious," explained Mapes. "By frequent encounters with this portion of your mind, you may place suggestions (not to smoke, etc.), when achieving your relaxed state. Occasionally, idiosyncrasies hidden there may surface, thus explaining your problem, or at least exposing it."

"That's where regression may come in. The subject needs the hypnotist for that. Placing the subject in a hypnotic state — notice I didn't say "trance" — is all that's done. From there, the hypnotist may tap his subconscious memory and take him to any point in his earlier life. The fun part is taking him beyond his birth! There's a lot of controversy as to the legitimacy of reincarnation. I feel that's irrelevant," continued Mapes.

What I've found is people suffering, let's say, from a medically unexplained ailment have always produced accounts of a previous death or illness specifically relating to the present ailment. I don't personally believe in reincarnation, but just the mere exposure of a preoccupation with the ailment signifies a mental or emotional cause — we work from there in eliminating that cause."

Henry felt that we should remember these people in our prayers and hope for them soon to be returned.

The Gospel Ensemble made their debut at the lighting ceremony this year as they entertained the crowds with their medley of Chrsitmas songs.

Following the music Father President Driscoll spoke and gave his greetings. Father expressed the message of the entire community to each of the persons present by wishing everyone a Merry Christmas. He then proceeded to light the trees.

Christmas trees were lighted both in the Connelly Center and in Kennedy Mall at precisely the same time. The trees were donned in an arrangement of multicolored lights and bright decorations.

A reception following the lighting took place in the Connelly center. Here cookies and punch were served while an array of students and faculty socialized in the Christmas spirit.

In addition to the musical arrangements by the Ensemble, the concert band played many of the traditional holiday carols while those present joined in and sang.

The ceremony proved to be a spirit filled time, "commented one student present. "When I walked away I really felt that I had a lot of happiness inside of me."

Coping with Finals Stress

By STEVE RUNK

The semester is closing and with its ending comes the inevitable climax of finals.

For most students, just the thought of final exams causes a great deal of stress and anxiety. This feeling of panic, that sometimes reaches frantic proportions, tends to lower the performance level of the student, and consequently the student does poorly on the exam.

The obvious solution to this problem is to eliminate, or at least reduce, the stress the student feels, although this is not always easy to do. Stress usually stems from a lack of confidence about knowing the material that the exam covers. The best solution for this is to make sure the material is known thoroughly and well studied.

According to Dr. Pollard of the University Counseling Center, there are several things that can be done to help reduce stress. One is to get at least thirty minutes of strenuous exercise, such as running or swimming, each day.

Another important part of stress reduction is well balanced eating habits. A student should be sure to eat three square meals a day. Pollard adds that it is also important to reduce the intake of white sugar, white flour and fats, as these take more energy to digest than they produce. Pollard also says that it is important to get plenty of proteins at exam time.

During finals time it is also a smart idea to stay away from intoxicants. A student needs clear faculties in order to handle the exams and their accompanying stress.

Relaxation is one of the key aspects in stress reduction. Dr. Pollard suggests many methods to relax, including prayer and transcendental meditation. The Counseling Center also offers workshops on how to relax.

These habits may help the student in coping with the stress of finals. But it is important to remember that these habits should be a part of daily life and they should be practiced all the time, not just during finals week. Dr. Pollard says that "a radical change in lifestyle will not work to reduce stress." If a student has not been following these guidelines since the beginning of the semester, chances are that if he begins now, it will do little to help in reducing his anxiety.

For many students, test anxiety poses a problem. The Counseling Center offers a workshop on test anxiety. This workshop takes 5 or 6 half hour sessions to accomplish its goal.

Some pointers on taking tests are: Be sure to be well prepared and know the necessary materials. Each student should get a good night's sleep, and the morning of the test, plenty of time should be allotted. Long hot showers are recommended along with a good breakfast. If necessary, briefly review notes right before the test. Arrive at the exam room a few minutes early in order to select a seat away from annoying distractions; then relax for a minute. When the test is received skim over it to be familiar with the questions and allow enough time for each section of the exam. If during the test a blank is drawn, lean back, relax, take a deep breath, and exhale slowly. If necessary, go on to the next question. On an essay test be sure to be well organized and concise in answers. On objective tests, if possible, eliminate some answers and make an educated guess if necessary. After the exam, take time to review the answers before turning in the paper.

Since the biggest problem students have is unpreparedness of the material, many use the age old practice of cramming. This practice is usually ineffective. Psychologists have found the mind can absorb only a limited amount of learning at one time. It is best for the student to save time, and grief, and study all through the semester.

A Story Of Christmas

'Tis The Season To Be Jolly

By LAURIE ALMEDA

As the dog team hauled the sled along the icy snow, the blending of heavy panting sounded muted in the winter stillness. Masses of heavy furs almost smothered the small girl who was tucked away into the back of the sled. Her breath wafted into the air in a round white cloud, which became a motionless ornament, suspended above the land of the eternally frozen. She attempted a smile, although the passionless cold snatched it away before it fully formed, as she remembered the letter which had brought her on this exciting adventure:

Dear Santa,

I'm writing this letter from my little desk that is set in front of my bedroom window. From my seat I can see the brick wall of a tall building. If I lean forward enough and look straight up, I can see the sky. Today I thought about how nice it must be to live in such a beautiful, white place as the North Pole. But the North Pole is so far away from all of us kids, and you only get to visit our lands once a year. I thought today, that Santa must be lonely once in a while, even when he lives in the beautiful North Pole. I know you have Mrs. Claus and all the elves to keep you company, but the elves are busy making toys, and Mrs. Claus has to keep watch over them. Besides, they aren't the same as us little kids. I thought today that Santa must get lonely because he never plays with any of the children he brings toys to. Brick walls are easy to tolerate when there are other children to play with. So I decided today Santa, that since you've been giving happiness out for so long, this year I'd like to know what you want for Christmas.

Love
Rose

The teamster yelled to the dogs to slacken the pace. Rose became animated; this meant she was almost there. But where is it? Rose cried to herself. She looked at the teamster suspiciously, questioning his motives for slowing the cadence to a dog-trot. Rose skimmed the horizon once more, but she could not see Santa's great white castle. The sled came to a halt. Rose began to nestle under the covers in fear of what was about to happen. Looking warily to see if the teamster was approaching to seize her, Rose turned her head to the side and, "she saw it!"

At the bottom of an immense snow bank, snuggled a dwarfish house, painted red all around with a white door, white shutters, and a white chimney. Rose sprung from her seat in excitement, but the cold nudged her back down.

"Here, little miss," bellowed the teamster as he scooped her up, furs and all, into his arms. The teamster clomped towards the house in giant strides, carrying the furry expanse like a weightless bundle. Rose peeked out over an edge of the expanse to get a vivid picture of the house they were nearing.

"Candy canes?" Rose whispered to herself. "Candy canes!" she cried as they drew near the door. Instead of icicles hanging from the eaves of the house, hung the most delicious looking rows of candy canes Rose had ever seen.

"Yup 'um miss," the teamster said in an amused tone, "you can have one if you wants."

"Oh, I could never eat one of those! They look so pretty just like that! I'll leave them be," Rose declared, proud of herself for resisting temptation. "I mustn't behave rudely before I'm even inside the door," Rose thought.

The teamster delivered great, pounding blows to the door, but the sound seemed to drift away in the cold. This place is so beautiful, Rose thought. But it's so cold! How can anyone have a merry heart living here all the time? Rose pondered.

The rapid pattering of feet sounded on the other side of the brilliantly white door. Rose thought she heard a soft click; and then the door began to open bit by bit. The teamster plumped Rose down on the border of the threshold, and clomped back to the sled. "Merry Christmas, little miss!" he belted, and the sled was away.

Shivering, Rose stood at the entry, waiting for the door to finish its laborious process of opening. Suddenly, in one sweeping movement, it lay open. "Welcome!" cried many wee voices in unison.

Rose blinked. Gathered before her was a sea of green and red pointy caps. Each face contained an elfish grin. "Welcome Rose!" they cried once again. A red and a greeen cap flashed towards her. Do I hear bells jingling somewhere? Rose wondered to herself. Tugging Rose inside, the green and the red cap slammed the door shut. The red and green cap were off in a flash, this time into another room. Rose realized the jingle came from the little bells on each elf shoe.

Off went the rest of the sea of bobbing green and red caps towards the unknown destination crying, "This way Rose!" Rose began to follow, but as she wandered down the hall, she was drawn into a brightly lit room.

Rose beheld the interior of the room with astonished eyes. Wooden soldiers, standi in the doorway, moved as her enter. Stuffed cats, and bears, and dolls lolled chairs, or on the floor, fireplace mantle. A train out from behind a chair, chugging out of the room rection in which the e scurried.

What caught Rose's the most though was the ding in the corner of th "It's the most beautiful I've ever seen!" Rose e She stood in awe of the tr was adorned with silver strung popcorn, decorations, glistening co

Yuletide Events Cheer

By KATHI IANNACONE and HELEN CAREY

Don't be an Ebenezer Scrooge at Villanova this Christmas Season! With all of the events happening around campus, there's no excuse to just sit in your room. It's time to get involved and join in the holiday fun.

One of the traditional seasonal activities occurs in the dorm. As you walk down the halls the Yuletide spirit radiates within. Doors and windows are festively decorated and the sound of Christmas carols emits from behind closed doors. Residents are sharing their holiday spirit with their friends through small gatherings and special projects.

Another popular dormitory or organization activity is that of "KRIS KRINGLE." All involved leave stockings or sox in visible places and await the coming of the secret messenger. Each day of the week a special treat is left. Kris is kept secret until the final day when he reveals himself with his last gift. A celebration usually finalizes the event.

During the season the musical organizations become actively involved. Mr. John Dunphy, director of musical activities, feels that Christmas concerts are joyous events that help to alleviate some of the pressure that many feel during the final days of the semester.

Among the musical concerts this season was the annual tree lighting ceremony held this past Monday, in which two of the musical organizations were featured. The concert band and the Gospel Ensembel, in their first performance at this ceremony, joined together to rekindle some memories of those old fashioned Christmas tunes known so well to all.

In addition to the musical aspect of the ceremony, there were many readings and holiday greetings given by school popularities. A reception followed the event in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

The Main Chapel will feature another aspect of the musical traditions here at Villanova. The Villanova Singers in conjunction with the Women's Glee club will perform their specialized selections Saturday, December 13 at 7:30 p.m. This concert has been a part of the Villanova tradition for the past 15 years. "It always tends to fill the air with that added touch of holiday spirit," commented one of the club members.

Among other contributions towards spreading good will and cheer is the social work that some of the students are performing. Visiting the aged, shut-ins, hospitals and orphanges rank among the top prorities. Singing, talking, and the giving of holiday treats are the usual activities of the visits.

The spirit is riding high here on campus. But don't be stubborn like old Ebeneezer, who almost found out too late. Find out now what Christmas is all about. Grab what V.U. has to offer and create a little joy for yourself!!

Christmas

Rose jerked her head in the direction of the noise. A red cap stood waiting impatiently. "We're waiting for you!" it called before it dashed once again towards the great doors in the back of the house.

Backing off slowly, Rose reentered the hall. The soldiers drew the doors to the room shut. Rose reached the great door and it opened — revealing a sea of caps dancing and tumbling about.

In an overstuffed, faded chair, he sat.

"Welcome Rose!" he bidded in a deep hearty voice.

"Santa?" Rose mumbled, staring in disbelief. She felt a sudden alarm and dared not move.

"Ho, Ho, Ho, my child!" he roared. "There's no need to act like a frightened fawn!"

Rose smiled. In sudden comprehension, she raced to the man sitting in the chair. Leaping into his lap, she embraced him, circling her tiny arms around his large neck and wispy locks of hair and beard.

"I thought you were lonely," Rose said timidly, amidst a burst of tittering from the elves. "I thought the cold of the North Pole makes a heart grow cold," she mumbled. "I wanted to give you a Christmas present so your heart would be warmer and you would be happier."

"My dear Rose," Santa whispered, "you have learned the true meaning of Christmas."

Warmest Wishes For A Happy Holiday Season

Santa's Mailbag

Say Santa,

You know I been good and pracicin' real hard and the boys too. So, I was kinda wonderin' that maybe you could bring us all here a few presents. I wanna go first 'cause well you know, I'm the Boss. Maybe, just maybe, if you could get me a nice, new, automatic, panoramic, dial-o-matic, super-grating, calibrating, stimulating, green, mean, never-before-seen, pair of clean jeans?

The Big Man's gonna go next because he's faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive, able to leap tall women (I mean buildings) in a single bound. He wants a combination laundromat-pizza parlor so people can eat and do laundry at the same time. I'm tellin' you man, they're gonna sweep the country, really.

Well, the rest of the band have wishes, but they can't be repeated, so come on Santa, come to Joisey.

Bruce "The Boss" Springsteen

Dear Santa,

Please tell Ronnie that it was all a joke and give me my job back for Christmas.

Sincerely,
Jimmy Carter

Dear Jimmy,

You're wish is granted. You can be President on Christmas Day. Ronnie says that it's all right.

Yours truly,
Santa

Dear Santa,

We have been looking forward to Christmas for a long time now. It has been nearly a year since you last visited the Good Counsel Country Club and we have had plenty of time to compile our list of goodies.

This year we have decided to surrender our olympic sized pool, miniature golf course, and private sinks in exchange for a new location. It's not that we dislike the exclusive reclusiveness of our cozy conservatory, nor do we disrelish hitching to St. Mary's, it's just that our neighborly acquaintances are usually tuckered out by the time they arrive.

And then there's the paging system . . . If Good Counselness wasn't next to holiness we would short wire the space-box and disregard our quota of five males per resident. Really Santa, have you ever had the football team over for tackle practice and have to sneak half of them through your window? While on the topic of windows, maybe you could bribe maintenance for a stepladder or two — the last "peeping Tom" fell off our Wa Wa crate and broke his leg.

If you choose to accept this assignment, the girls of Good Counsel have agreed to disclose the combination to the Vault — (36-24-36).

Hugs and Kisses
THE GOOD COUNSEL INMATES

Dear Santa,

This year, I am requesting the services of a Public Relations expert to help with my future political aspirations.

In the past week, I have made several mistakes in speaking (such as forgetting the "Pledge of Allegiance" and pronouncing the name of my school as Villa-ka-nova).

In addition to aiding my speaking abilities, perhaps he could find a "good" picture for the Villanovan to print. I know this will be difficult, but I'm tired of having my mother defend me.

Maybe you could also have enough influence to get my picture on the front page more often. After all, everyone who reads the paper represents a vote.

Sincerely,
HENRY AMOROSO
SGA President
(I mean student body president, I keep forgetting)

Dear Santa,

I've been good all year. I have tried to be neat, clean and tidy. The problem is that the students at the University won't help me. In fact, they leave messes everywhere. Sometimes, I feel like I've never been involved in anything that wasn't a mess.

Please Santa, give me some cleaner students and a few rolls of paper towels.

Sincerely,
Marc Tuchman

Dear Marc,

I've been thinking about your request and have decided to donate some cleaner students to Villanova on the condition that you take down the habitrails in the Belle Air Terrace.

Yours,
Santa

By MARIE CROSSAN

The holiday season has a tendency to do funny things to people. To the man in love, this is a time to try and think of that special gift for that special woman. This is the story of how one man handled it.

Day 1
My dearest Jim,

Thank you so much for the partridge in the pear tree!!! You are so sweet!! Take care and Merry Christmas!

Love —
Jane

Day 2
My dearest Jim,

Two turtle doves! You romantic fool! I certainly hope the two partridges are of the same sex though — I really don't know what I would do with little baby partridges! You are too sweet! Take care!

Love always,
Jane

Day 3
Dear Jim,

I must say I was surprised when I answered the door this morning. Three French Hens. You are really too kind! I forgot to tell you. I'm allergic to pears. Thank you again for everything.

Love,
Jane

Day 4
Dear Jim,

Your point is well received. Four calling birds. Unfortunately, they don't get along with French hens, turtle doves and partridges. I think you've done enough for me. Thanks.

Affectionately,
Jane

Day 5
Dear Jim,

Five golden rings! How thoughtful! They must have cost you a fortune! Speaking of fortunes, the birds are beginning to run up quite a feed bill. You are simply too generous. I'm beginning to run out of room in my apartment. (It is rather small, you know). Really, you need not do anything more for me. Merry Christmas!

With love,
Jane

Day 6
Dear Jim,

Really, Jim, I think we've done enough. Six geese-a-laying aren't exactly making my apartment that pleasant. I understand and appreciate the thought. (I think). It's just that these birds really don't get along and they are destroying my apartment. PLEASE, restrain your next generous urge.

Yours,
Jane

Day 7
Dear Jim,

Swans. Now that's original. Do you hold some sort of grudge against me or something? I only have one bathroom and these swans just don't fit. Speaking of fits, the neighbors are beginning to complain about the stench coming from my apartment. I really must insist that you stop while you're ahead. I'm afraid you are really testing your friendship. Take this as a warning.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

es,
You obviously don't know a threat when you read one. st admit I was touched by your gifts of turtle doves and , but, this time you have gone too far. Eight maids-a-ing. How quaint. The people downstairs are com-ning about the noise. The landlord is threatening to me. The Board of Health and the Parks Commission to arrive around noon. I'm being presented with some of fine. You'll be receiving the fine as well as a bill for new furniture. If you have any semblance of in-gence, you will promptly leave town upon payment of bills. I think you'd better think twice before you so h as speak to me.

Jane Smith

r Mr. Ryan,
What is this?? a Broadway production?? You are ing me out of my mind! What in heaven's name pos-ed you to do this to me? Are you a sadist? The nine-s-dancing make this pig-pen look like some sort of yard disco. The cows have eaten what was left of my iture. Unless you desire some sort of retribution for actions, I would sincerely consider a trip to Iran.

Most sincerely,
Ms. Jane Smith

Ryan,
Just a note to let you know that the ten-lords-a-leaping ved this morning. They are presently making advances rds the maids and the ladies. If you so much as at-t to come in contact with me, you will hear from my at-ey. Just leave me alone!!!

r Mr. Ryan:
This letter is in reference to the eleven (11) pipers g as well as the other gifts that have been delivered to client's apartment. A court petition has been filed inst you by Miss Jane Smith, formerly of Crestline rtments, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
You will receive a subpoena in the near future. Do not ider leaving town.
Best wishes for a joyous holiday season.

Sincerely,
Mr. Anthony Taylor
Attorney at Law

12
r Mr. Ryan,
This is to inform you that we have a Miss Jane Smith ur custody. We were summoned to her apartment by her hbors early this morning. Apparently, Miss Smith ran her apartment screaming, "I've been drummed out of apartment!! I'll kill him!! Let me at him!! I'll kill !!!"
When we arrived at Miss Smith's apartment, we found remnants of her once happy life. Have you ever con-red psychiatric testing?
It is also my duty to inform you that any attempts e on your part to see Miss Smith will be considered a at to her mental and physical well-being. Therefore, will be shot.

Wishing you a joyous holiday season,
Dr. Chris M. Tree

Well friends, (and we use the term loosely), it's that time of year again — the season of giving and good cheer and all that jazz . . . so in the spirit of the season, WKWC proudly presents our annual Christmas gift list . . . Santa, if you would, please bestow the following gifts. . .

To Ronald Reagan . . . a case of Grecian formula and a crash course in international diplomacy
To the American people . . . rotes ruck
To Poland . . . Jeff Hahn
To Daniel J. Keating Corp. . . . a number on the university location map so that prospective freshmen can know whom to see regarding administrative and faculty decisions
To the library . . . hours, a few definitive texts, quiet librarians, and a correct and more thorough search and seisure technique. The old CIA rulebook method just won't do.
To the Infirmary . . . generic versions of tetracycline so that they can use the extra money to hire a new image director
To the Villanovans for Life . . . a single-issue campaign
To Administrative offices . . . more aggressive secretaries
To Tony Martin . . . a better role to set than Dean of Men
To the Blue Key Society . . . a key to Villanova. Somewhere along the line they just plain forgot to get one, and besides, it would make a great status symbol. Binky could tell two friends about it, and they could tell two friends, and so on, and so on . . .
To Security . . . cattle prods
To WKVU . . . even more competitive elections, (we love politics, we thrive on it, we read Machiavelli before we go to bed at night, we eat our enemies for breakfast)
To future Who's Who dinners . . . a room with a view, an emcee with wit
To the Career Development Center . . . a continued buyer's market in the business world, which won't help the seniors looking for work, but which will make the CDC feel that it has some purpose
To Jack Deady . . . tickets for a fourth Bruce Springsteen concert, and Un-Grecian formula to keep that cool, grey look. Phil Donahue, eat your heart out
To Bruce . . . thank you for coming when we needed you
To professors whose papers we blew off to go see Bruce . . . it was worth it
To Marianne Lavelle . . . respect
To John Chott . . . a trip to D.C. for the inaugural
To Diane Clery . . . ditto
To Vince Hausmann . . . no more news stories, and anonymity, blessed anonymity
To Vicky Pirhanna, er, Parente . . . blame for WKWC. Even when she didn't write it, everyone thought that she did.
To Jerry Dougherty . . . a betamax so he can see Dallas and still enjoy an active Friday night social life
To Bill Rock . . . memory of when he jumped on the marble coffee table and sang Rosalita. Loudly
To Brian Buinewicz . . . (who's he?)
To Eileen McCaffrey . . . two tickets to "Let My People Come"
To Chris Slawecki . . . Jackson Browne's entire collection so that he can mellow out, and learn to love everything he hates in pop music
To Beth White . . . a lifetime of free legal aid
To Jerry Ventresca . . . space in True Confessions, to really tell the story
To Jim Ferris and Bob Conway . . . knowledge of when to edit
To Linda Whiteside . . . a happy holiday, and/or honeymoon, whichever comes first

LXA Place First in Beer Fest

By KATE McDONALD

Villanova's Greeks completed their fall season of events with the bi-annual chugging contests in freezing weather last Friday. Over 200 students gathered at the tennis courts to see LXA, with a strong performance by Jim Batsides, capture first place in tag-team guzzling with a time of 2:27. Jere Smith led LKD into second place in 2:34, and DTD's Mark Smith guided the delts to a close third place finish in 2:36. Other contenders included ZP, DKE, DPE, SPE and LTD, finishing in that order. Icy beer was also chugged by sororities DKN, led by Karen Ashdale, who topped PBD in 3:59.

Each team is composed of 10 brothers or sisters drinking from two 16 and 12 oz. cups each, respectively. DKN has never lost a chugging contest. They went wild at the announcement of their victory. DKN spirit was their support while they drank with the utmost confidence, as did LXA.

"After last year's performance, we expected to do well even though we weren't really organized," Batsides, president of LXA, admitted. "We chugged last. By that time the table was frozen and ice was floating in the beer. But 2:27 was a pretty decent time. There was lots of crowd support and we were psyched! Going last makes it more exciting too." LXA celebrated their victory by singing "Down in Tennessee," their fraternity song. "Everybody loved it!" Batsides said grinning.

Leslie Palmer, president of the Inter-fraternity Council, got the chugging contest underway at 5:30 p.m. Last year's winner, SPE, was disqualified, as well as DPE. Palmer said, "They had new members competing and this is not permitted. Both teams did admit it, though." APO judged the contest. TKO and BGT did not participate.

Points are awarded to all participating teams depending on how they finished in the race. These points will aid in determining the winner of Greek Year.

LXA will be using the same tag-team guzzlers in the spring. Batsides was confident, "We are definitely ready to defend our championship."

DTD was the victor of fraternity football, the other fall event sponsored by the IFC. Greeks will continue Greek Year competition with fraternity basketball after Christmas.

Era Ends as 'The Dream Is Over'

By ROBERT M. McGOVERN

At 11:30 Tuesday night, I received the first of four calls (one of them from a cousin in South Bend) — John Lennon, ex-Beatle, poet and intellectual, was dead, the victim of a senseless killing. It all took place outside of his home in New York City, The Dakota Apartments. John and his wife, Yoko Ono, were returning from a recording session when he was shot seven times and pronounced dead at the scene. Police described the suspect as a "local screwball." Brilliant observation, I thought; what else would you call a murderer, a man who had flown in from Hawaii just the week before for the expressed purpose of killing?

But social commentary is/will not be the purpose of this little piece of writing, nor will it be a general outpouring of emotions. Yes, John would want us to keep going on, but how could we; more specifically I, who grew up with the Beatles; listened to every album from Meet the Beatles to Let It Be to every solo album, sometimes all in succession, nonstop for hours at a time; read all the books; and sat around patiently clipping bits and pieces from the newspapers to put in scrapbooks — how could we not miss a man that gave so much to our lives? John Lennon was a man who had a song for everything we were feeling, because he felt it too. He was one of us. We could feel it. We could feel him.

This next bit is so hard to do, because it seems so ridiculous. It's history and we all know it, but it's still important. John and Paul met in the late 1950's and went on to become one of the, if not THE, most influential forces of this century, but behind this force was an even more powerful persona, that of John Lennon. From the beginning John was always looked upon as the leader of the group, the intellectual impulse throughout their works, the poet and painter, feeler of joy and happiness and pain and despair.

For the past five years, John Lennon had been living in virtual seclusion with Yoko Ono and his young son Sean. After almost twenty years of sleeping, living and breathing rock'n'roll, his wife told him that he did not have to go on doing it. So John retired to being a househusband, baking and caring for his child. But earlier this year, John and Yoko decided that they could once again record and return to take control of something that had once controlled them.

John Lennon was a new man, a man that could now face the world with confidence and not the pain he had felt before. John Lennon was a man that was starting his life all over again.

"Starting over" was always a term very prevalent in John's vocabulary. In the early 1960's, he made a name for himself as a writer with the publication of his books, A Spaniard in the Works and In His Own Write, two masterpieces of avant-garde (?) literature.

After John met his second wife Yoko in 1967, he proceeded to produce a trilogy of, most definitely, avant-garde recordings. They were Unfinished Music, 1 & 2 and The Wedding Album. All three were fine examples and expansions of the type of music first introduced in Revolution 9 off the White Album.

The arrival of The Seventies saw John Lennon bearing his political and emotional soul to the world. His political messages, for the most part, were confined to his single releases (Power to the People, Give Peace A Chance, Instant Karma, etc.). They were very powerful pleas for the world to wake from its petty grievances. They expressed an urgency for us to better the world before it was too late. But John, during this period, while trying to help the world, was also in the midst of some very intense personal therapy. He became associated with the father of primal scream therapy in early 1970 and his first album, Plastic Ono Band, seems entirely composed of excerpts from his sessions with Dr. Janov.

'Over the Hills and Far Away'

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

It takes no great eye to see that the finger of tragedy has rested on the music industry these past ten days. On December 4, the management of British supergroup Led Zeppelin announced that, due to the passing of Zep drummer John Bonham, the band will be unable to continue the Heavy Metal career that enamored them to millions of popular music fans. Then, ex-Beatle John Lennon was gunned down in the vestibule of his apartment complex, after a recording session at Manhattan's Record Plant.

Lennon's slaying is especially laced with irony. He recently ended a five-year sabbatical from the music industry by releasing Double Fantasy, a fine 14-song set about life with wife Yoko Ono and son Sean. Many people feel that the first single from the album, Starting Over, signals the end of his quest to remove the stigma of being an "ex-Beatle," which began in 1970 when he penned The Dream Is Over.

But he will probably be most remembered for these collaborations with Paul McCartney in the sixties with the Beatles. Along with McCartney, Lennon wrote more hit songs than any popular composer in modern history, and the Beatles' unprecedented success forever changed the face of modern music, both as art and as industry. The Beatles, like no one else with the possible exception of Bob Dylan, helped orchestrate the changes for which the sixties are most important.

Critics viewed Lennon as the intellectual force behind the Fab Four, and fell upon his statement that the Beatles were as big as Jesus Christ with unrestrained glee. Despite the beauty of Mind Games and Imagine, and the searing insight of Woman Is The Nigger of the World, they were less impressed with his solo career before the five-year hiatus from recording. The problem is that John Lennon was the kind of man whose essence is not confinable to the world of words.

The passing of the Zeppelin creates a real vacuum in the world of music to be played at maximum volume, but it is really no surprise that they disbanded, since the death of John Bonham left behind a drum style that may never be matched for sheer speed and brutality. Their first four albums were catalysts for Heavy Metal rock, a variation of the blues that is sometimes as subtle as wet brakes on a screaming B-29.

Recently, however, the Zeppelin had fallen on harder times. In 1975, singer Robert Plant was severely injured in a car smash on the Greek Island of Rhodes during a year of British tax exile, and they postponed their tour schedule until 1977. In 1977, guitarist Jimmy Page, one of rock's premier producer-musicians, developed a throat infection, and the first dates of the re-scheduled tour were ominously cancelled. Then, Plant's five-year-old son died of a virus infection and the tour was completely abandoned.

Zeppelin's album releases during this period were no match for their earlier works. Although pop music went elsewhere, to Disco and then New Wave, Zeppelin held onto the hard-core following typical of other Heavy Metal heroes like Deep Purple or Black Sabbath. Last year's In Through the Out Door failed to make the Zeppelin the major musical force it was in the early seventies, but few people haven't been impressed by the exciting energy in Zep tunes like Communication Breakdown, Dazed and Confused or Kashmir, at least once.

These things are important because people have made them a part of their lives; whether they hummed Lucy in the Sky with Boss Bruce Cuts It Loose ! !

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

I guess the hardest thing is to make a good thing last. . .

Bruce Springsteen at The Spectrum, Dec. 8

Music has not suffered recent years gladly. Self-centered times breed self-centered music. Writers like Barry Manilow produce hundreds of songs which are either sopping with self-pity, or are sweetened with sugar-candy phrases about love and feelings, but in any case consistently fail to express genuine human emotion.

For relief from this type of music, people have turned to music of sheer self-aggrandizement, punctuated with a dull thudding disco beat.

Sugary songs, of course, melt, and the disco songs tend to thump themselves out quite quickly. To make up for this, acts taking this

Zeppelin

Diamonds in the shower, or sang Stairway to Heaven while cutting the lawn, the Beatles and the Zeppelin were with us. Their voices will be very sorely missed. Those of us who awoke to the news that Led Zeppelin had disbanded or that John Lennon had been slain, greeted a day in which something was wrong somewhere.

music on stage will concentrate wholly on showmanship: they appear in bursts of fire, they employ elaborate lighting and stage setups. Some produce music so studio-slickened, that it can't even be performed on stage. Groups merely mouth the words to their recorded melodies while lights flash on them.

Amid this cheapness, however, a few artists have consistently written music that strikes at the heart of what it means to be human in these times.

Without exception, these are artists who try to recoup the spirit of the pioneers of contemporary music — Buddy Holly, Chuck Berry — and in doing that, are able to say something about our own times.

Rock and roll is, first, a breaking away from fluff and pretense, and secondly, a celebration of the new life the break allows.

All this is a necessary introduction, so that one may understand what it means to say that Bruce Springsteen showed three full-house Spectrum crowds last Saturday, Monday and Tuesday, what it is to rock and roll.

Springsteen's Philadelphia show was a return to roots in many ways. His current popular success has him playing to sellout crowds across the country, but it was here, in Philadelphia, where Bruce and the E Street Band began their music.

Perhaps only here in Philadelphia could you best see the whole picture, trace the whole development of Springsteen's art. It is only here that he sang his early songs which show almost the "breaking away" aspect of rock and roll: "I hid in the clouded wrath of the crowd/ When they said sit down, I stood up . . ./ Growing Up . . ."

And Springsteen opened the show with the words to perhaps the greatest breaking away song of the seventies: "Baby this town rips the bones from your back, it's a death trap, it's a suicide rap, we've got to get out while we're young . . . Tramps like us, baby we were born to run . . ."

Bruce's music has changed since the early days when his words and phrases were packed into the lines of music to the bursting point. His music is more streamlined. Retaining the familiar images, he concentrates now on the aspect of rock and roll as a celebration, and never is this more evident than at one of his concerts.

Springsteen leaps onto stage and into one rockin' after another. In 20 minutes, his audience is exhausted, but he continues the pace. The show is not fancy lighting; the stage is bare except for the E Street Band. This concert consists wholly of rock and roll music.

Because his music is so full of life and love, only Bruce Springsteen can walk out into the audience and be carried on the backs of the fans while he sings. When his band began one of his newer songs, "Hungry Heart," he held out his microphone, and 16,000 voices belted out the melody.

The Boss at his Best.

Perhaps the climax of the show was "Jungleland." Springsteen stood on one tall speaker with his guitar, while Clarence Clemons stood on the other with his saxophone. The entire audience sang together: "As we make our stand . . . Down in Jungleland."

Always at the end of his shows, Springsteen launches into a fast-paced Mitch Ryder and the Detroit medley, as if to remind everyone of the beginnings, the roots. The house lights come up, and the audience becomes part of the show. The Spectrum security guards watch a couple peacefully dance down an aisle. The guards have nothing else to do. Everyone is dancing.

Monday night's concert ended at 1 a.m., an incredible four hours after it began. Fans filed out into their cars, and some drove onto the Expressway, some of them back to Villanova. They switched the dials of their car radios for news of the concert they had just attended, or perhaps for a few Bruce tunes. But at 1 a.m. Tuesday, for some reason, all the radios were playing Beatles music . . . one song after another . . . every station . . . The D.J.'s

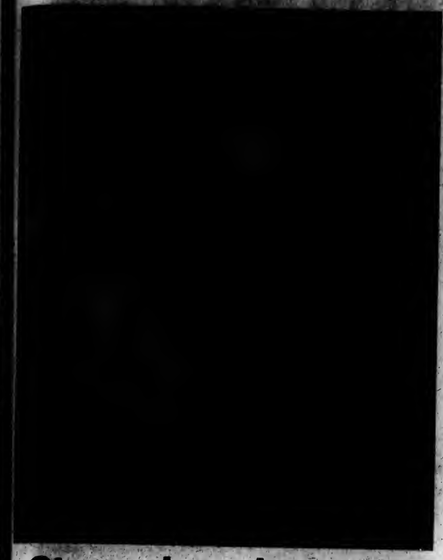
'The Demon Barber of Fleet Street' Sings Sweet



By MARY JANE GAVENDA and ROSEMARY MALLOY

In most cases, Broadway shows that go on tour are merely pale copies of the original. Somehow, they always seem to lack the excitement and polished quality that the first version created and also, they usually acquire second-string casts to fill the roles that were created by other actors. This generalization was proven wrong Saturday night when Sweeney Todd moved into the Shubert Theater for a month long engagement and swept the opening night audience off its feet. In a word, the entire production was fantastic.

Billed as a "musical thriller," Sweeney Todd combined all those opposite elements that, with the right mixing, can create a really great musical. It blended comedy with drama, music with horror, in such a way that the result was an unusual show that was as powerful as it was memorable.

Taken from the English tale, The Demon Barber of Fleet Street, Sweeney Todd is a story of self-destruction amid the low-life of gloomy 19th-century London. Benjamin Barker, alias Sweeney Todd, escapes from an Australian jail and returns to London with the intention of getting revenge on the evil Judge Turbin, who is responsible for Todd's stay in prison, and his subsequent separation from his wife and daughter. The opportunity presents itself when Sweeney Todd re-establishes his barber shop and finds that slitting his customers' throats with a straight-edge razor is a convenient way of disposing of his enemies. His ally in crime is one Mrs. Lovett, a delightfully batty baker of the "worst pies in London," who befriends the violent Todd and turns his zeal for murder into an enterprising business as she disposes of his victims by making them the ingredients in her meat pies!

This may sound like a gruesome subject unfit for musical comedy-drama material, but it comes off surprisingly well. Angela Lansbury and George Hearn are simply excellent in their respective roles. Lansbury, an accomplished actress and the original Mrs. Lovett on Broadway, won a Tony for her portrayal, and she provides the comedy in her wonderful cockney characterization. Hearn, as Sweeney Todd, gives a dramatic and engrossing study of a man reciprocating hatred to an uncaring, hateful world. Lovett's humor offsets Todd's horrifying intensity, and the chemistry between the duo is perfect.

In addition to Lansbury, many of the other key characters are from the original New York production — most notably Ed Lyndock as the judge and Ken Jennings as the trusting, pathetic orphan boy. Cris Groenendaal and Betsy Joslyn, who are lovers in the romantic subplot, round out the utterly professional main cast. Special mention should also be given to Sal Mistretta who played a minor role as the delightfully comic Pirelli, a rival barber to Todd.

Amazingly, there was not one weak link in the entire ensemble. Even the extras who portray the various street life are utilized fully. Harold Prince staged the show ingeniously, making the chorus act as stage-hands who move the realistically dark and dingy street sets designed by Eugene Lee. To Prince's credit, there is not one superfluous action or prop which would detract from the flow of the show.

Everyone does justice to the Stephen Sondheim songs which are often arranged in complex group ballads or quartets. The highlights of the evening included comic ditties like Pirelli's Miracle Elixir and the sickly humorous A Little Priest, in which Mrs. Lovett recounts the contents of her meat pies. The powerful song, Epiphany, sung by Mr. Hearn, drew the loudest applause for the night.

Except for some vagueness and inaudible dialogue in the beginning, the show was totally professional. I urge anyone who is in the Philadelphia area over Christmas vacation to see it. Tickets can be had through Ticketron or the Shubert Theater box office at prices up to $27.00 (a nice gift for mom and dad!).

Stranglers Increase Pressure

By GREG ANTON

During the recent Thanksgiving break, I finally got a chance to hit up New York City again. After fighting off traffic, flocks of Christmas shoppers, and the pandemonium at Grand Central Station, I ventured off for Club 57 at Irving Plaza to see The Stranglers. The club is tiny (legal capacity 400); however, it was easy to see without looking too far that the club does not abide by this regulation. The crowd of leather-clad rockers and hard-core punkers eagerly and recklessly awaited for The Stranglers to appear. Finally, at 1:30 in the morning they took the stage and began a night of powerful and awesome rock and roll.

The Stranglers are one of the premier bands that have emerged recently. Without a doubt, they are the most progressive and least conformist of all the bands in the British punk movement. They speak out about the depersonalization of society and the decay of the modern world. The Stranglers do it with powerful and intense rhythms and smart craftsmanship. They simple refuse to compromise.

Unlike all other bands, the dominant and most important instrument for The Stranglers is the bass. Bassist Jean Jacques Burnel plays an endlessly aggressive style of bass that provides the melody as well as the beat. Jet Black, the drummer, provides a strong beat that allows Burnel to stray from the traditional role of a bass player. Lead singer and guitarist, Hugh Cornwell, compliments Burnel and the melody. The diverse and unique sound of The Stranglers is accentuated by keyboardist Dave Greenfield. Raw power and sensational sound effects emerged from the keyboards throughout the show. The band's style is similiar to the early Clash style, yet is distinct.

The Stranglers played for about one-and-a-half hours, covering material from all of their four American-released albums, including their recent release, Stranglers IV. The band developed a friendly and intimate relationship with the packed crowd. Hugh was even so generous as to throw his pills into the audience. The intimacy was again reinforced during the song Nice 'N' Sleazy, from the album Black and White. Although I cannot print exactly what happened, I can say it was unique! The live concert magni-

Bus Boys Clean Up

By STEVEN HELMETAG

Although the title of their debut album Minimum Wage Rock & Roll suggests a sort of no-frills band, the BusBoys are one new wave band which few people can afford not to see.

Led by head BusBoy Brian O'Neal, who sings and plays keyboards, and his kid brother vocalist/bassist Kevin, the BusBoys, who performed at Emerald City Sunday night, cleaned up with an intense 70 minute stage show that few groups could outdo. What makes this band stand out from the crowd is that with the exception of the drummer, who is a Chicano, the BusBoys are a gang of black musicians playing white-dominated rock 'n' roll.

One of the highlights of the show was Minimum Wage, in which four of the group's members exchanged lead vocal segments. However, the performance of this tune could have been better still if it wasn't for the less-than-great vocal mix at the beginning of the show.

As the band performed There Goes the Neighborhood, it was interesting to notice the people in the crowd who had not heard this song previously, and their varying reactions. Although the majority of Emerald City crowds tend to be mostly young punks and new-wavers, the BusBoys' fans, who could be described as vibrant and colorful, were older and more diversified.

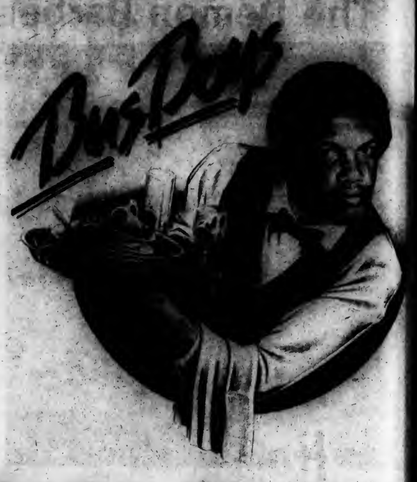
Although both of the O'Neals as well as guitarist Victor Johnson proved themselves as fine concert musicians. The band's biggest asset to their live shows is the slap-happy vocalist/dancer extraordinaire Gus Lounderman, who wears a black suit jacket over his busboy outfit, making him stand out from the others.

Johnny Soul'd Out reminds one of Chuck Berry's Johnny B. Goode. However, there is a distinctive difference in the lyrical content as Brian O'Neal claims "He's into rock 'n' roll and he's given up the rhythm and blues." After performing this song the band exited the stage, although they were due back for some more.

After coming out for a second encore with having only one more original song left, this reviewer was anxiously anticipating the BusBoys' rendition of the Rolling Stones' Brown Sugar, which O'Neal said they learned last month when the met the Stones. This tune, immediatedly followed by Did You See Me, provided a dramatic climax to what has to be one of the best concerts to hit the Philadelphia area in years.

Martha and the Muffins headlined this engagement, but this reviewer felt nothing could top the BusBoys' show and left.

As BusBoy Victor Johnson says in Minimum Wage: "Who could ask for anything more." This describes the band's Emerald City gig perfectly.



Flop At The Radar Station

By ROBERT BALLARD

Doc at the Radar Station is Captain Beefheart's twelfth album since 1964. In sixteen years Beefheart, whose real name is Don Van Vliet, has made not one appearance on the national record charts. His lack of commercial success can be attributed to the random awkwardness of his music, which in turn is attributed to his total alienation from the popular music scene throughout his career.

Beefheart's latest effort resounds with the unpredictable absurdity that's made him so unpopular all these years with radio programmers. However the new album arrives in harmony with a diversified and open minded listening audience, eager to embrace anything that sounds new and innovative. Perhaps America is finally ready for Captain Beefheart. Or is it?

Doc at the Radar Station features twelve cuts spliced with jazz and southern blues, backboned by pulsating rock guitar riffs, and layered over the Van Vliet's vocals, which range from somber narration to inflamed raspy squawks.

Lyrically, Beefheart's style as a poet is similar to the abstract painter who smears paint randomly over the canvas. Even his song titles suggest a blatant disgust for conformity. Making Love to a Vampire with a Monkey on my Knee actually describes such an affair. Run Paint Run Run

Each song is a powerful statement of the pain he felt about the loss of his mother, isolation, the struggle with deities and idols, feelings that all of us have felt at one time or another. John Lennon lived (LIVES!) in the backyard of our psyche.

On top of or maybe it is beneath, but somewhere in all the political statements were bubbling some of John's most beautiful sentiments and dreams about our existence. The classic (a term I am usually very hesitant to use) Imagine offers us the most optimistic outlook on life that has ever been written. It was then we learned that John was not the prophet of doom that he was first mistaken to be, but a foreseer of a utopian world of the mind. John Lennon had every capability to take us from one end of the rainbow to the other, without drugs and without cancer-causing saccharine. John Lennon was a man, who when everyone else was afraid to, told it like it was. For better or worse, John was a newspaper, a therapist, an alchemist in our time of need. John Lennon left us with no final words that Monday evening, nothing for us to evaluate our lives by, but he did not die in that police car that sped around Central Park. John Lennon, if we let him, (and I for one certainly will) is going to continue to live in us through his songs, words, and the wonderful memories we have about the times he has given us. It was a long, long time ago that it was all a dream and now the dream is over, but ob-la-di, ob-la-da life goes on. I'm sure John would want it that way.

JULES AND JIM

Although Truffaut evokes the romantic nostalgia before World War I, JULES AND JIM exquisitely illuminates a modern woman. Catherine, amoral and classically beautiful, loves two fraternal friends and must have them both — even if she must die to do so. For her, no commitment is forever and only death is final. Joyously realized and vitally acted by Moreau, Werner, and Serre, the film established Truffaut as the leader of French New Wave directors.

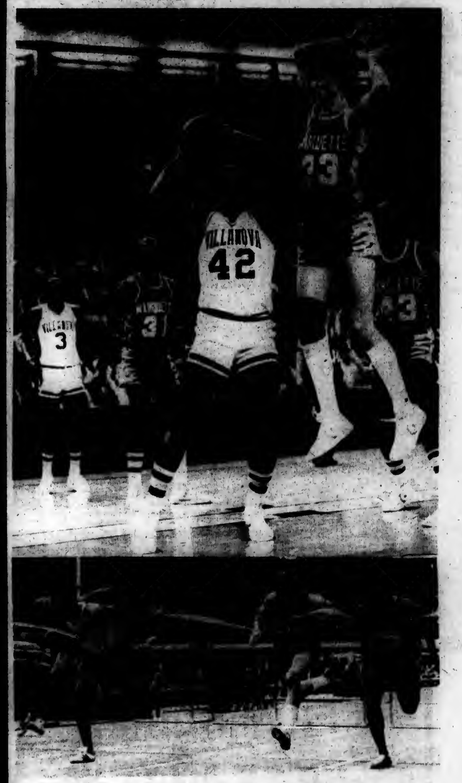
1980– VILLANOVA'S YEAR IN SPORTS

January

Coming off a tough loss to Syracuse and a second place finish in the Rochester Classic, The Wildcats headed west, well at least mid-west. South Bend, Ind. was the site of the Notre Dame game. Falling behind by twenty points in the second quarter set the stage for a remarkable fourth quarter comeback. Senior Rory Sparrow hit a clutch layup with less than a minute remaining in the game to put the Cats up by one. Notre Dame inbounded into what looked like a hopeless situation to Tracy Jackson who hit a 43 foot buzzer beating shot stunning the Cats and a national television audience.



March

The Wildcats blew through March like a lion instead of a lamb. Rollie Massimino's troops swept through the Eastern Eight Tournament for a NCAA berth, their first since 1978. In the first round at Providence Villanova shocked Marquette 97-83 before losing in the second round to Syracuse. Their overall record was an outstanding 23-8. While men's basketball was scoring in Providence, Justho Elliott's trackmen were scoring a third place finish in the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in Detroit. Individual standouts were Don Paige setting an electronic indoor world record in the 1000m ,and Rodney Wilson became the first freshmen in Villanova track history to win an individual NCAA championship when he scored in the 60 yard high hurdles.

February

The Wildkittens made headlines this month. In their first year in Div. I competition the women's basketball team finished with a record of 20-5 and achieving national ranking in the top twenty for five weeks while remaining in the top ten in the East virtually the entire season. The women Watercats were also making waves. Led by sophomore Jenni Franks, the Cats finished undefeated and placed third in the AIAW Div. II National Swimming and Diving Championships.

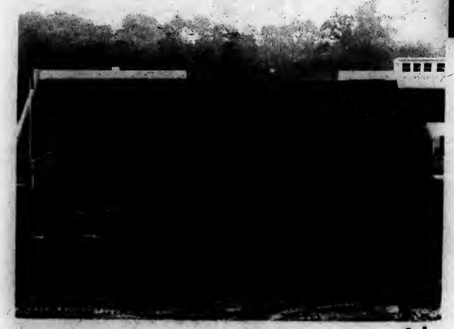
April

The track team sprung from Detroit to Philadelphia to continue their domination of The Penn Relay Carnival. The Wildcats end their overall total relay victories to 75 with wins in the distance medley (in record time), sprint medley, 1600m and 400m relays. Villanova also made the official decision to join the Big East Conference, after breaking from The Eastern Eight. Word also circulated that maybe Villanova Stadium would be refurbished.

November

Reinstatement of several of the suspended football players followed and the Cats got back on track including the 23-7 trouncing of Temple. The win allowed the Wildcats to post their first winning season since 1976. The Cats out scored their opposition 102-23 in their last three outings.

August



July

The Summer

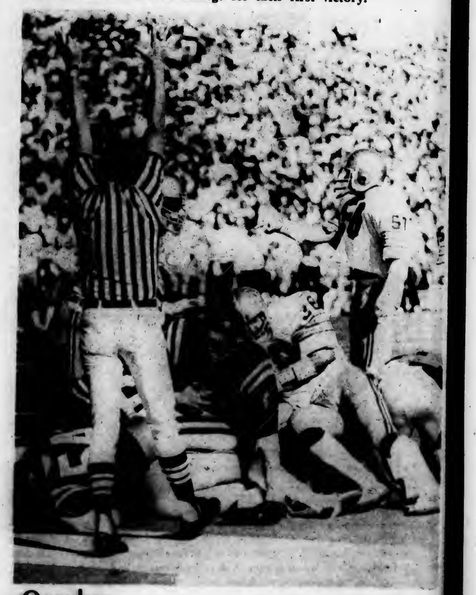
While the summer months are usually slow in Villanova sports, this summer the fieldhouse was a flurry. The official decision was announced at the President's Luncheon during the Alumni Reunion that Villanova Stadium would be renovated to include an Astroturf playing surface and an all-weather Tartan Track. Work began in July with a completion date set for the beginning of September. While most of Villanova's student body basked in the sun, May graduate Don Paige toured the world as part of The United States Olympic Team. His summer was highlighted by an August showdown with Sebastin Coe, Olympic gold medal winner and world record holder in the 800m. Narrowly avoiding international ruckus, Paige ran and defeated Coe at the wire in August in Viareggio, Italy.

May

The Baseball team highlighted May. For the first time in 19 years, the Wildcats went to a post-season tournament. Their overall record was 21-7.

September

September brought completion of Villanova Stadium with its dedication called the greatest moment in Villanova sports history. The dedication of the Jumbo Elliott track brought all of Villanova's olympians back. The list was a who's who of track and field and read: Eammon Coghlan, Ron Delany, Don Bragg, Larry James, Erv Hall, Don Paige, Sydney Maree, Marty Liquori, and Browning Ross to name but a few. The dedication was followed by a victory lap of all Villanova track alumnus to the cheers of a sellout crowd. Following the halftime festivities the football shocked Boston College for their first victory.



October

October was marred by the suspension of several football players because of an off campus incident. The loss of several starters made the hopes of a winning season look bleak as the Wildcats entered games with a reconstructed front four.

Editorial

It's More Than a Job

By BETH WHITE
Sports Editor, '78-'80

"Thanks for the memories." It's trite, but true. Working for two years as sports editor of the Villanovan has meant a lot of hard work, thankless work, but along with the long hours came invaluable experience. The people whom I've met: the coaches, the athletes, the staff reporters and the other editors — each has contributed to both the joy and frustrations that have made up the past two years of my collegiate career.

A lot of things have gone wrong: not enough coverage for the minor sports, few or no pictures on the pages, lousy layout and design, last minute copy, and on and on. There have been antagonistic coaches and uncooperative athletes. There have been heart-breaking games, after which I felt so drained that I could not possibly have written an unbiased, objective article.

But there have been many more wonderful moments and special people along the way. A football team with their first winning season since 1976. A men's basketball team that has entered NCAA tournament play two out of my three years covering basketball, with a good shot at the NCAA's again this year. A women's basketball which became nationally ranked in its first year in Division I competion. Volleyball and field hockey teams which have entered regional post-season competition. Boxers and power-lifters who have made a name for themselves and for Villanova.

And Villanova athletics have received a facelift along the way. Not only has the women's program expanded, but now, with the new Jumbo Elliott track and Astroturf field, more and more Villanovans have access to superior competitive facilities.

But it's the people, not the buildings, that make up the true spirit of the school. The staff of the Sports Information Department, manned by Ted Wolff and his assistants, do a super job and usually go unnoticed and unthanked for their efforts. Most of the coaches and athletes have gone out of their way to help me with a story or to make me feel comfortable and at ease during an interview.

"Thank you" seems too inadequate to repay these people for what they have given to me — experience, skill, and plain ol' self-confidence in my abilities as a sports journalist.

There are really only five people left to remember. Jerry Ventresca, my co-editor for the past year, had the confidence in me to let me flex my journalistic wings and try new and different ideas with the section. I couldn't have asked for a more diligent worker or a better friend to work with as co-editor. Ed McAssey, with whom I worked two years ago, guided (or is it goaded?) me through the world of the newspaper, which was then new to me. For your patience and your teaching, Ed, I thank you.

The last three people on my "list" are the current sports editors: Jim Femia, Bob Conway, and assistant sports editor Kerry Lynch. Jim's specialty is ice hockey and his work in the Sports Info office; Bob is great with baseball and feature stories; and Kerry has a flair for covering track events and women's sports. I leave the sports section in their capable, although somewhat inexperienced, hands. They have the potential to develop even further the reach and depth of the Villanovan. Or, they will make a mess of it. But that I doubt.

Long and Martin Honored

Dave Martin

Seniors Howie Long and Dave Martin were recently named to the Associated Press All-American (honorable mention) Football Team.

Long, at defensive tackle, made 84 hits this season and led the team in quarterback sacks with four.

Defensive back Martin had 52 tackles and deflected 13 passes. He also played on the special team, returning 13 punts for 144 yards.

Women Prime for Penn State

By KYLE GOTHNER

Last weekend the women's swim team competed in the PAIAW Championships and placed an impressive third behind only Shippensburg State and Clarion State. But Tuesday's meet against Bryn Mawr was the official beginning of the women's 1980-81 dual meet season.

Bryn Mawr proved to be little competition to the women as they dominated the entire meet. Fine performances were turned in by sophomore Rita Edge who placed first in four events; two individuals and two relays helping to sweep the relays; Jenni Franks who placed first in the 100-yard breaststroke and also in the 400-yard individual medley qualifying herself for the nationals; Tara Baroody who placed first in the 200-yard individual medley and second in the 50-yard freestyle behind Mary Maier who also placed third in the 400-yard individual medley when swimming it for her first time.

The final score of 89-31 represents what minimal competition Bryn Mawr was for the women who viewed this meet primarily as a warm-up for Saturday's meet against Penn State. The team is hoping to defeat Penn State in what they feel may be their toughest meet of the season.

I've studied a lot of classics...

None was as refreshing as this.

Maulers Crowned Champs

By BOB CONWAY

The Maulers, who embodied the meaning of intramural competition captured their first Intramural Championship by defeating King's Court in the Intramural championship game 13-0.

The Maulers started as a group of friends and bonded together to be the best possible team. The Maulers accomplished this to the highest degree of excellence. Over their six year existence the Maulers compiled a regular season record of 48-1. In those six years they achieved the Quarter-Finals, Finals, Quarter-Finals, Finals, Semi-Finals, Quarter-Finals and Finals respectively.

Mauler Coach Chuck Schlager said, "the credit lies not in so much the success on the field alone, but the style and character with which our feat was accomplished. The important thing is that born out of a group of 22 men in Stanford 5-B these Maulers have been bound to the quality of friendship which continues today."

The road to the Maulers championship was not easy. In the Quarter-Finals with seven seconds left and the score tied, Mauler quarterback Mike Coyle threw a touchdown pass to Steve Fitzgerald that was called back. The Maulers, displaying that they were indeed a team of destiny, regrouped and with one tick remaining Coyle hit Al Donatio with a touchdown pass which gave the Maulers an unbelievable 12-7 victory.

The Semi-Finals was a classic match-up that pitted two tradition rich teams against one another. 500 people came to view this contest. The Maulers prevailed in this defensive struggle. The only score was a Coyle pass to Al Donatio. Coach Schlager noted, "DTD has a reputation of playing dirty football but we thought they played good tough football. Hey, when 500 people come out to watch an intramural football game it is because both teams are good, not dirty."

In the final game Maulers outclassed King's Court and had a relatively easy time in winning the championship.

The Maulers were composed of Joe Briton, Kevin Brown, John Cheringal, Mike Coyle, Al Donatio, Steve Fitzgerald, Tom Gallagher, Mike Grozier, Wally Hanley Bob Lynch, Charlie May, Brian McKenna, Pete Parente, Kevin Scanlon, Tony Weatherly, Rick Vermeil and Bill Zisek.

The Maulers are to be congratulated not only for their winning, but also for the way they won.

All-Star Game Caps Intramurals

By BOB CONWAY

The first Villanova Intramural All-Star Game was held at the football stadium last Sunday. The blue squad made up of players from the North, South and Fraternity Division teams. The White team was comprised of players from the East, West and Central Divisions. The East, West and Central Divisions team won this first All-Star Classic 14-13.

Actually, the game ended in a 7-7 tie, but Dino Valente using all of his infinite wisdom devised an impromptu overtime period which broke the deadlock.

The Blue team scored first as Bob Leverte took a pitch and ran around the left end for a brilliant 75 yard touchdown. The conversion was good.

The White all-stars did not let that lead last long though as they came storming back on their first possession after the Blue squad's score. The scoring drive was completed when Keith Gerardi threw a touchdown pass to Tony Pasquale. The pair connected again for the conversion to knot the score at 7-7.

The overtime period followed after some discussion. The Blue all-stars won the coin toss. That enabled them to start at the 20-yard line. They had four downs to score, and they did that with ease. The conversion was missed. The White all-stars took over at the 20 and they also scored. This team though, converted the extra point as Keith Gerardi threw a three yard pass to running back Joe Ruth.

The players all enjoyed participating in the classic. Danny DiPoalo said, "this is a great idea. The game generates exposure for some of the intramural athletes." John Maxwell said, "the game is well run for a first year event." Jim O'Farrel observed, "most of us are seniors and it gives us one more chance to play an organized football game."

Intramural Director Edward Geisz was very pleased with the game. He agreed with the players that it is a good idea. He added, "we want to do it for basketball too."

The most valuable player for the blue squad was Bob Leverte. He scored one touchdown and caught numerous passes throughout the game.

Keith Gerardi was justly named the most valuable player for the White squad. He led his team to victory by throwing both touchdown passes.

Whitaker Leads Cats Over Penn

Icecats Impress Foes

By JIM FEMIA

Two second period powerplay goals by Barry Whitaker helped lead the Villanova Icecats over the University of Pennsylvania by a score of 6-3 last Sunday. It was Villanova's second conquest over the Quakers this season and their fourth victory of the season.

It was the rookie debut of freshman goaltender Don Clark who was to fill in for the ill Tom Migliotti. "Clark had a fine game," according to Coach Skip Probst, "he played as if he were a veteran."

But once again Probst praised the defensive units. "The defense has been the mainstay of this team all season. When we were not scoring, our defense was holding our opponents to two or three goals per game. Now it looks like we are beginning to put the puck in the net which is going to make us really tough. But the work of Brian Emmerich, Jim Femia, Bill Quinlan, Paul Lafond, Rod Lane, Tom Mallon have held us together so far this season."

John Huffman, John Sowers and Junior forward Tom Curran put the Cats on top early in period one scoring his fourth goal of the season. Ken Downey then took advantage of a rebound and flipped the puck over a sprawled Penn goaltender to give the Cats a 2-0 lead after one period.

A rash of Villanova penalties early in period two led to the first Penn goal but the tables were turned five minutes later as Penn picked up a batch of penalties. The "Barry Whitaker Show" then began as he blasted a shapshot off the glove of the Penn goaltender to give the Icecats a two goal lead once again. Once minute later, Whitaker shated the puck out of the corner on a powerplay and flipped the puck into the upper corner to give the Cats a 4-1 lead. Later in the period Frank Segreto converted a Tom Curran pass to give the Cats a commanding 5-1 lead after two periods.

Third period action was somewhat subdued as Villanova concentrated on defense. A massive Penn Attack led towards their second goal and three minutes later cut the Icecat lead to 5-3 on a powerplay goal. But Brian Emmerich put a damper on the Penn onslaught slapping home a 40-footer with only five minutes left to play to give the Cats a three goal lead.

The Icecats closed out their first semester schedule last night against Nathaniel Hawthorne of New Hampshire. Villanova opens their second semester schedule with a home game against archrival Penn State on January 16 at the Skatium in Havertown, Pa.

Swimmers Remain Undefeated

By BILL BECK

The Villanova Watercats continued their winning streak by defeating King's College 73-34 in a dual meet on December 5th at the Field House pool. The swimmers amassed 10 of 13 first place finishes in the overpowering victory. Leading the team with two victories each were senior Rob Kownurko and sophomore Bob Ackerman.

Kownurko defeated Kings swimmers in the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke, while Ackerman won both the 100 and 200-yard freestyle events. Other teammates gaining first place honors were divers Mark Feldner and Steve Tuo. Swimmers who added points were Bruce Baltera, Tod Russell, and Matt Rafferty.

Coach Geisz was satisfied with the performance of his swimmers; however, he stated that "I am disappointed that the opposition (Kings) wasn't tougher, Villanova has much superior personnel than that of the teams we swam against thus far."

This proved to be true in the Monmouth meet (75-38) on December 4th. The Watercats once more swept a majority of the first place finishes. Leading the team again against Monmouth was Rob Kownurko in the 1000 and 500-yard freestyle events. Co-captain Tod Russell also gained victories in the 100 and 200-yard freestyle races.

Hoopsters Edge Pirates

By DAVE GLICKMAN

The Villanova Wildcats thwarted a last minute Seton Hall rally and held on to defeat the Pirates 66-65, at Walsh Auditorium Tuesday night. The victory was the Cats second in Big East competition.

The Wildcats jumped out to an early lead, and had a 35-26 halftime lead. This lead was mainly attributed to the precision shooting of senior Tom Sienkiewicz. "Sink" had 14 first half points. (7-8 from the floor).

In the second half the Cats were led by the aggressive play of Alex Bradley and John Pinone. With two minutes left to play the Cats had a seemingly comfortable 66-57 lead.

However, the Pirates were not about to quit. Don Callandrillo put on a one man show as he scored six of his team's next eight points to narrow the defecit to 66-65 with 11 seconds to play.

Seton Hall then proceeded to foul John Pinone. Pinone missed the potential game-clinching one-and-one foul shot. Alex Bradley's follow up shot also was off the mark.

Seton Hall got the ball back with seven seconds remaining. By playing disciplined defense all night, the Cats were afforded the luxury of having two fouls which they could commit before sending Seton Hall to the foul line. Stewart Granger fouled Dan Callandrillo twice in the backcourt. That left just two seconds on the clock. At that point Callandrillo received the inbounds pass and quickly dished the ball off to Howard McNeil, but his last ditched effort came a split-second late. The buzzer sounded before McNeil's shot was taken.

Rollie Massimino had chalked up his first win ever against Seton Hall.

Callandrillo paced the Pirates with 17 points. Tom Sienkiewicz had 16 points for Villanova. Alex Bradley played a strong game scoring 10 points and pulled down seven rebounds.

Friar Coach Barks at Officials

Wildcats Open Big East With Ban

By LARRY GOANOS

"The college game today is turning into a contest of might vs. might . . . we've got to make some changes," proclaimed Providence College Head Coach Gary Walters only minutes after he watched the Villanova Wildcats outmuscle his Friars, 68-49, at the Palestra on Saturday night. The victory was Villanova's first in the Big East Conference.

"In college sport I'm seeing more and more physicalness, it's an accepted practice," continued Walters. His Friars had just been out rebounded, 36-25, by the Cats and he felt that changes were in order. "I think that the basket should be raised and the court and lane widened. I've never said this before in public. I may be fighting windmills but I've got to have my say."

Walter's "say" cost his team six points during the game as he drew two technical fouls for storming along the sidelines yelling "This isn't basketball, it's gorilla ball." Tom Sienkiewicz converted on all four free throws and Alex Bradley hit a 15 foot jumper on the subsequent change of possession.

The contest started out slowly for the Wildcats who allowed 6'9" Rich Hunger to slip behind the defense for a few easy lay-ups early in the game. Providence used these buckets plus some jumpers from guards Ricky Tucker and Jerry Scott to battle Villanova almost evenly throughout the half, which ended with the Cats clinging to a two point lead, 27-25.

The second half started with the Friar offense in gear as Scott popped a few in from the outside and Hunger rolled up points from underneath. Find themselves down by six, the Cats called time-out to regroup, which paid off. The Cats roared back behind the rebounding of John Pinone and Alex Bradley outscoring Providence 28-4 over the next ten minute put the game safely out of r 63-45.

The Cats initiation into East was a successful one, true test is yet to come. "W play Syracuse and St. Joh going to get rough in there the boards)," predicted "But it will be like the Bi A.C.C., the game will smoothly without too ma We're ready for it."

Cats Outshoot Opponents

By MICHAEL HEALEY

The Women's Basketball team upped its record to 3-1 after defeating the Howard Bisonettes, 68-56, at the Field House on December 5th. The team's second victory was a 91-59 trouncing of West Virginia.

The Cats started the game out like gangbusters, employing a tenacious full court press, and after only 6:33 had elapsed they led 27-8. But then came a rash of turnovers and missed shots. At halftime the score was 38-22, mainly behind the shooting of Nancy Bernhardt, who had all 11 of her points in the first half.

After the halftime intermission, the squad was again plagued by poor shooting. Had it not been for the hot hand of sophomore Rosemarie Burke, the Cats might have been in trouble. Burke came off the bench to score a team-high 15 points.

The real problem for the Cats in the contest was a sporadic, inconsistent offense. According to Coach Perretta, "it was a really frustrating night watching from the bench. Nothing would go in the basket. Inconsistentency just killed us tonight." Besides the scoring of Bernhardt and Burke, other key performers for the team were Lisa Ortlip and Stephanie Vanderslice, who collected 13 and 11 points, respectively.

Over the Christmas break the women will meet seven opponents at home and away. Like their male counterparts they will tip-off against the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame on January 6. Games against Boston University, Seton Hall and Dartmouth also appear as additions to this year's schedule.

Alex Bradley is this week's Bud Athlete of the Week. After a fine performance in the Providence game last Saturday, where he pulled down a career-high 14 rebounds and added 10 points, he was named the first Big East Player-of-the-Week this season. Alex is co-captain of this year's team and is up for All-American honors. Bradley was nominated by Ted Wolff.

Cagers Capture Tourney

By DAVE COSKEY

Darrell Hedric, head coach, Miami of Ohio, made his fourth trip to the Sun Bowl Basketball Tournament in 1980. Hedric jokes about always having to play the toughest teams in the first round. He even suggested that next time they'll show up for the coin flip. The question is why does he keep going back? Inquirer Sports Editor Frank Dolson probably said it best when comparing The Sun Bowl to other tournaments with higher media visibility. Most teams opt to attend those meets rather than coming to a place like this," he said, "but it's unlikely that any group of college athletes ever had as pleasant a time, ever carried home as many good memories in a holiday festival as these kids stored up in their weekend in El Paso."

The hospitality was great and while the Cats soaked up the sun, they also had a lot of fun downing defending WCAC champion San Francisco and host University of Texas at El Paso.

Opening night paired Villanova with skyscraping San Francisco.

Coach Rollie Massimino accepts Trophy for Sun Carnival Classic.

The green uniforms worn by the Dons were fitting since they looked like something out of the valley of the jolly. The Dons sported an impressive record scoring only one defeat and that one in overtime. Their previous season mark was 22-7. The Cats had one reprieve which was the Dons sad loss of star center Wallace Bryant (7'0") to respiratory problems.

The Cats and Dons vollied the lead back and forth in the first half. Junior John Hegwood filled any void for San Francisco including a spike that clouded All American hopes for Alex Bradley. Bradley went up to block a Hegwood dunk early in the game and jammed his thumb. The sad news came later when a medical examination revealed Bradley had broken the thumb of his shooting hand, sidelining him for six to eight weeks.

Sophomore John Pinone took over in the second half and completed the night a perfect 5-5 from the field and 2-2 from the line to lead the Cats to an impressive 93-66 victory.

The championship game paired the Cats with host UTEP. Coach Don Haskins may have played right into Massimino's hands by slowing the pace of the game down, allowing the injured Cats to keep pace with the Miners.

New Hiring Policy Adopted

By BILL CLARK

Villanova has adopted new affirmative action policies and procedures for recruiting and hiring faculty and other personnel.

The plan, which was submitted by Edward Collymore, director of the Social Action office, was recently approved by Father President Driscoll.

According to the statement, "Villanova University and all other Academic Institutions are required by law to develop an Affirmative Action Program looking toward the elimination of any imbalance that may exist within the hiring of minority groups or women.

"It is recognized that these procedures are cumbersome, time consuming, and increases the paperwork required from the departments, but it is necessary," the report continued.

According to the new procedures, any new position must be listed with the Personnel office. The policy requires that the proper recruiting procedures be taken by all concerned in filling the new position.

The report specified the proper procedures to be taken in recruiting. In addition to the normal channels of communication and recruitment advertising, each department is required to make full use of an approved listing for advertising the new position.

In addition, the report calls for having minority members on search committees, contacting minority and women employees elsewhere for suggestions of candidates for the new position, and keeping records and results of actions taken on the applications.

University Senate to Elect New Chairman

By MARY ANNE GRANGER and ANNE SUYDAM

The Villanova University Senate will hold its first meeting of the new semester Friday, January 16.

The meeting will begin with the election of a new chairman of the Senate for the remainder of the academic year 1980-81.

The new chairman will take the place of Dr. Angelo Armenti, who chaired the Senate since 1976. Armenti was recently appointed dean of University College, and thus is ineligible for Senate membership.

Any senator may be nominated to fill the post.

The Senate Planning and Priorities Committee will submit its report in reference to University priorities for 1981-1982.

The Committee, chaired by Dr. James Clarke, has ranked priorities into three groupings. Development and energy conservation have been ranked as the "highest priorities." Faculty and staff adjustments and financial aid have been ranked as "high priorities," while academic capital improvements, west campus development and dormitory capital improvement have been ranked as "priorities."

The Committee report was presented to the Senate at its last meeting. The Senate can amend the committee report if it so chooses.

The priorities, when passed, will be given to the Senate Budget Committee in evaluating the University budget for 1981-1982.

Dean Alvin Clay, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, will also make a report at the meeting.

The meeting will take place in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 4:00 p.m.

Dr. James Clarke, chairman of the Senate Planning and Priorities Committee.

Time to Plan for the Future

Priorities Important for Villanova

Each year, the proposed University budget becomes a source of conflict. Faculty and staff request the increases to which they feel entitled. Students complain that tuition hikes are too burdensome. Last year, these feelings caused students to protest the proposed increases.

The University Senate will vote today on the priorities to evaluate this year's budget. It is hoped that everyone concerned will approach this meeting with only the interests of Villanova in mind.

The proposed priorities before the Senate rank development and energy conservation as the "highest priorities." In turn, faculty and staff increments and financial aid are considered "high priorities." This ranking is fair and on-target; it should be approved by the Senate.

The amount of increased monies for development and energy conservation would not detract much from other University goals. Yet, additional funds for these areas are long overdue. It is time for Villanova to plan for the future rather than be content with mere solvency.

In an objective analysis of the University's financial position, the Middle States evaluating group said "Villanova is more vulnerable than many institutions because of its modest seven million in endowment or quasi-endowment funds and because of its heavy dependence upon student tuition, fees, room and board for its revenues."

By developing more outside sources of revenue, we can provide for such things as faculty and staff increases without depending so heavily on student tuition to fund them.

Villanova cannot overlook the need to develop new academic programs and research as well. With most demographers predicting a decade of declining student enrollment, we must offer a competitive and diversified curriculum.

With the incoming Reagan administration, Villanova must also be prepared for cuts in federal aid to education. This will undoubtedly mean a loss in revenue for the University. To even maintain our present level of performance, we must compensate for this expected loss in revenue.

We also cannot underestimate the importance of energy conservation, the other top-ranked priority. The increased cost of energy is forcing everyone to conserve. Villanova is no exception.

The cost of energy will continue to increase in the 1980s. Villanova must insulate itself from these increases as much as possible or else see energy costs take a larger chunk of the budget each year.

Perhaps it is difficult to become excited over priorities such as development and energy conservation. They are not the type of issues which spark protests or rallies. Very few long-term concepts do. This, however, does not diminish their importance.

Lennon Reply

To the Editor,

I would like to respond to the December issue of The Villanovan, specifically, Maggie Coyle's response in the "On Campus" section, which dealt with the death of John Lennon. Miss Coyle responded that she was "really surprised and kinda shocked." She also stated that she "didn't think anyone could kill someone in cold blood like that." I would like to ask Miss Coyle where she has been the past twenty or so years. I do not deny that John Lennon's murder was a cruel and merciless tragedy, however, unfortunately, similar unnecessary deaths occur every day — much too often. The fact that Lennon was a highly regardly sensitive artist in the public eye explains why his death has gotten such widespread media coverage and has touched so many people. Yet, it is obvious through ignorance, or really, I don't know what, that Miss Coyle is unaware that senseless deaths are a sad, but essential fact of life. Every single day people confront an untimely death as they are heartlessly killed. Their families, if they have any, mourn in silence as their loved one was not a public figure, yet their loss is just as real and just as devastating. I do realize that at times we become so involved in our isolated Villanova community that we are unaware of much that happens "out there," but can we use this excuse to compensate for not realizing the injustices people have to face and deal with every day? I do not think that stopping to mourn for one person who has made a significant impact can make up for such a vast incomprehension of life. I do think that is a very irresponsible way of viewing reality. I feel very sorry for Miss Coyle because someday she will be out in the "real world" and as I see it, she is in for quite an eye-opening experience.

Sincerely,
Anne E. Healy '81

Track Stars Exchange Vows

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Sydnee Maree stood outside of a small stone chapel which crouched in a corner of Germantown, Philadelphia on a gelid December Sunday.

New York Times columnist Red Smith had called this man "one of the two or three best mile runners in the world," but Sydnee did not run today. He shuffled in the cold. When he ran, he ran for Villanova. Except sometimes, he could not run for Villanova. He had come to America from South Africa four years earlier to go to school, and especially, to run.

In the first months of his freshman year, he was winning cross-country championships, and he went on to win various national championships for middle-distance running. But he would never really know if he was, in fact, one of the two or three best mile runners in the world. The Amateur Athletic Union and the International Olympics Committee had banned South-Africans from participating in international races in a gesture of disregard for the country's apartheid policies. The irony was that Sydnee Maree was black.

Sydnee did not blame anyone for his plight. And he did not mind standing in the cold that Sunday morning, which was his wedding day.

Back in South Africa, news of the Maree wedding was "huge," as one journalist there described it. That journalist would have to fill 60 to 75 percent of a monthly news magazine with verbal scenes from this small Germantown chapel. But it was the assignment any journalist would hope for: the story of a national sports hero, and his fairytale courtship.

Sydnee met Lisa Rhoden at an invitational track meet in Tennessee a year ago. She was running for the University of Florida, but her home was in Germantown, where she had been valedictorian of her class at Martin Luther King Jr. High School, where she had run in national meets and had won the city high school cross-country championship.

When Sydnee first saw Lisa standing beside the track before the meet began, he nudged one of his friends. "I saw this young lady . . . and she stole everything for me," explained Sydnee. "We changed our warm-up route so that we would run by her all the time."

"He was too scared to come over to me," Lisa remembers. "I saw him staring so I went up to him and started talking. We found out we were staying at the same hotel, and we just stayed together for the rest of our time there. He took my address before we left, and he called me the same night we got home. And every night since then."

The two were engaged in August, and chose to marry at the Providence Baptist Church in Germantown, the church of Sydnee's godfather, Burt Lancaster, who heads a track club in Philadelphia, and who helped bring Sydnee to this country.

The door of that church opened on that frigid Sunday morning, and Lisa stepped out of the church and joined Sydnee on the top step as the guests began to throw handfuls of rice their way. Sydnee's mother, Christina Susan Marina Maree, stood aside and watched the couple. She had flown to America to see her son for only the second time since he had left South Africa. A publishing company had paid for her trip, and she had even appeared on South African television before she left the country. After having traveled half-way around the globe, it would have seemed fitting now for her to be presented with something large and grand, something that symbolized her son's time in America, something uniquely Villanova.

A moment later, a huge white Lincoln rode easily over the Germantown cobblestone to the door of the chapel, and Villanova track coach Jumbo Elliot stepped out of the front door. He would chaffeur the bride and groom in his own car. Sydnee grinned at his coach as he shielded his eyes from the shower of rice. And Lisa, in her long white gown, wore a circle of red roses on her head which looked like a winner's wreath.

As for the future, Sydnee says, "I can tell you what I'll be doing in one year, but not what I'll be doing in 10 years." Lisa will transfer to Villanova where she will be a sophomore. Sydnee will graduate in May as an economics major. Next year, he will return to Villanova as a graduate assistant in political science, and he will run for the Philadelphia Pioneers track club. "I plan to study as much as I can," said Sydnee. "When I feel I can be productive to the people in South Africa, then I will return there."

Jack Kerouac's Beat Goes On

By BOB McGOVERN

Writer's Note: When I sat down to write this, I never intended it to sound like a review, but after looking back on what I had written I realized the similarities. It should also be accepted as what it was intended originally — a writer's expression of himself in his journal.

After finishing Jack's Book, a book which for some reason took me two weeks, I realized that it should have taken me three days at the most. After I got to the final reading sessions, one of which I used to read the last hundred pages, it all went so damn fast. I didn't know how to stop. All I could do was keep reading. I was so absorbed, so taken in by how, known HIM. And I got to thinking that it wasn't fair that I couldn't. No one like that exists today. Or, at least I don't know them or won't allow them to exist.

Maybe I've become overcome with that feeling people get when you're living this legend that existed well before you were born, but so close to that time that you say to yourself, why was I deprived?

I never knew Jack Kerouac and I'm being very familiar. If Jack was alive today, he would be 60 years old, and I'd be calling him Mr. Kerouac. But, that's not the feeling I get about him. The feeling I get is one of a friend, the kind of friend you get drunk with the first time, the hundredth time, authors used actual dialogues with people that knew Jack and didn't paraphrase them, but directly transplanted their stories of Jack's life and work to print. It is "their story" because some of it seems so slanted and not particularly in Jack's favor. This is annoying because Jack always appeared to be one of those role models of what everyone wants to be, could or should be, but can't. Some of his acquaintances seem to tear him down, maybe out of jealousy and resentment, or maybe out of hurt, but that's the impression of (Peter) Orlevsky and Neal's first wife, Luanne Henderson. But, I must say that I especially resent this criticism because I've built myself this down, even with all his short-comings, fascinating Kerouac was. Feeling that I had been aware of him some time, but one that was only reinforced, made more im-portant.

I felt I SHOULD have been able to meet this person, not through his works or through the recol-lections of others. I should have talk to about the first girl you ever went to bed with, or even share her as he and Neal Cassady have done from time to time. I just can't see Jack as being a mister. He'll always be Jack or Kerouac, or both, never a mister to me.

So, I only know Jack through his works and this biography, which was interesting because the glorified vision of Kerouac, in which he can do no wrong. In a way, he is everyone, because we all sit around and say, "I wish I could do that", or, "I'm going to do that." But most of us never do, and we live through people like Jack.

Album Review:

The Fine Arts of Babylon Gauchos

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Trying to describe a Steely Dan song to someone is like trying to describe the sunset. You know when and where it happens, and the names of almost all the colors. But, sometimes, there is more in the twilight than just an orange ball in a velvet and amber sky. And, sometimes, Walter Becker and Donald Fagen write more than just rock and roll songs.

The structure of Gaucho makes it a tough nut to crack. Most songs have no single melody. They sound like the bass, guitars and key-boards are an amoeba struggling not to squiggle away in four dif-ferent directions at the same time. The horn charts mesh with the melodies perfectly, and the drums propel everything so precisely that in between are where only edges can be seen of the spaces.

Songs constructed with this care benefit from vocals that don't overpower them, but subtly shade the beauty that is already there, and Gaucho is often most re-warding when you simply listen to Fagen cut loose with his soaring voice. The tremors in his lead vocal to Third World Man come closer to involvement than any-thing since the bridge in Any Major Dude, but the last verse re-affirms the detachment that char-acterizes Steely Dan. But, the genius of the song is: How many others flirt with involvement in the third world before disengaging back to their Glamour Profession?

Steely Dan LP

teristic of Steely Dan is Becker and Fagen's ability to construct musical backdrops that sound like the point of the lyrics: The swirling organ in Do It Again matches the mysteries of its lyrics, and Josie rocks because it's a song about throwing a party. So, Gaucho's Third World Man brings new meanings to somber, Traffic-style space music, and Glamour Profession is a song about life in El Lay that uses flashy discotronics to convey its message of spiritual dryness. Gaucho captures the extremes of two modern wastelands, which demonstrates Steely Dan's flexibility of style and content.

As with previous Steely Dan albums, Gaucho is worth its price for the lyrics alone. My Rival, Hey Nineteen and Babylon Sisters swim in and out of the narratives with haunting, mocking imagery that would make T.S. Eliot proud, and there are four lines in My Rival that do more to express the fury of rejected love than a smouldering, tear-stained stare ever will. Altogether, Gaucho proves that there should be room and defying Jack overlook the faults, because gods don't have any. But, after reading Jack's Book, after pushing aside all the disbelief and hurt, you realize it's done you good because it allows you to see the human in this superman. He rose above everything his parents tried to make him, but then life started getting to him. Actually, it was the life his mother had decided for him, one that conflicted with the deeply rooted life that was in him. Superman got to be too much for Jack and he had to go back to being human again, but at least he got the chance to wear the costume for awhile.

After all this, I'm back to why I started this review in the first place. After reading about Jack Kerouac, even though it was well into the next day and my eyes fell to about my knees, I couldn't rest. I felt all this still running through me. Within seconds after putting down the book I began writing, and everything that came out was Kerouac. There I was, living him. But, not living in the passive sense; feeling in some sort of communion with him. And very dazzled by a man who loved the life he had, even after knowing it was killing him.

The mountain has risen
so high above me
I can't come down
It's so nice to be here

Notre Dame Routs Cats

By BETH WHITE

Last year, when Villanova and Notre Dame met on the hardwood floor of the Athletic and Convocation Center, the Fighting Irish — who had been leading throughout the game but were threatened by an 18-point scoring spree by the Wildcats in the closing minutes of the game — relied on a 30-foot desperation jump shot from then junior Tracy Jackson to claim victory. The final score: Notre Dame 70 — Villanova 69.

But when the two teams met on the floor of the Palestra on January 6, the location was not the only difference. The line-up between the two teams had become lop-sided in Notre Dame's favor, explaining why Villanova fell behind early in the game — the Irish led at halftime: (40-27), and were forced to play catch-up ball. But the Wildcats were unable to rally, and fell to the Irish, 94-65.

However, Irish Head Coach Digger Phelps did not rest easily on his team's early lead. "Once you blow an 18-point lead (as happened last year), you're always afraid of it happening again. We were always waiting for them to come after us," continued Phelps, now in his 10th season at Notre Dame.

Tracy Jackson, a senior forward for the Irish, agreed by stating that, "Villanova is the type of team that never quits. And the team really misses Alex Bradley."

Bradley, who had averaged 12 points and 8.7 rebounds per game, broke his right thumb in the Sun Bowl Tournament (held at the University of Texas at El Paso over the Christmas vacation). The senior forward's arm will be in a cast for at least another two weeks.

Wildcat Head Coach Rollie Massimino was forced to start a young and inexperienced line-up: senior Tom Sienkiewicz, junior Aaron Howard, and sophomores Stewart Granger, John Pinone and Mike Mulquin (who replaced Bradley at forward).

However, the Fighting Irish were represented by more experienced players: seniors Kelly Tripucka, Orlando Woolridge, and Tracy Jackson, sophomore John Paxson and freshman Joe Kleine. Notre Dame's seniors led their scoring attack as well: Jackson was high scorer with 20 points (nine of 11 from the floor, plus two free throws), Tripucka tallied 17 and Woolridge contributed 16 (6 of seven field goals, four of four from the line).

Jeff Sherry flips in two points against highly rated Notre Dame.

Scoring became a problem for the Wildcats, who converted on only 31% of their field goals in the first half, compared to ND's 63%. Tom Sienkiewicz, who led the Cat scoring drive in last year's game with 21 points, couldn't connect with the hoop until late in the first half, then sunk two free throws to tally 1,000 career points as a Villanova Wildcat. Sienkiewicz, however, suffering from Notre Dame's tight defense, totaled only 9 points for the evening. Coach Phelps admitted to adjusting his defense to put special coverage on Sienkiewicz. "We wanted to contain Sienkiewicz," explains Phelps, "because we didn't want him to get started. He's a great shooter."

the second half neither team led by more than 4 points. Pinone put the Cats ahead for good however, with a layup with 1:33 to play and UTEP was in check. Villanova held on including a last stitch effort by UTEP in the final ten seconds of play to edge the Miners 43-41.

Tournament MVP was awarded to Anthony Burns of host UTEP who shot a sizzling 3-9 in the finale. Overlooked was John Pinone who completed the tourney 8-9 from the field and 6-6 from the line.

It's a Matter of Pride for Icecats

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Ice Hockey team will have a chance to redeem themselves when Penn State travels to the Skatium on Sunday. Penn State edged the Icecats in last years Mid Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference finals two games to one. Villanova's record at the mid-point of the season stands at 7-3 while Penn State's record at 7-3-1.

"We played a mediocre first half," according to coach Skip Probst. "At times we've played very well but at others we've been below average. The second Penn game was probably the high point thus far. We had people out with injuries and a freshman goaltender in there and we pulled together to come up with a 6-3 victory."

The Icecats were led by sophomore assistant captain Chris Mancuso scoring eight goals and assisting on six others for fourteen total points. Other top scorers this season all with ten points are Frank Segreto, Jim Ragold, "Cyrus" Carey and Mike Bufano. Tom Margiotti is having another sensational year in goal with a 2.50 goals-against-average.

Coach Probst boasts of a strong crop of newcomers who hold six of the top ten scoring spots on the team. Along with Segreto, Ragold, Bufano and Carey are Jeff Beck and John Sowers. Freshman goaltender Don Clark has been a strong addition to this year's squad and flashes a 2.26 goals-against-average.

The Penn State game will be a game played basically with pride. After winning the first game in the best of three, the Icecats traveled to Mechanicsburg for back-to-back games in their home rink. The second game was won by the Nittany Lions 4-3 on an overtime goal. The third and deciding game was again won by Penn State by the identical score of 4-3.

Probst states, "I'm sure there will be a lot of bad memories going through the heads of the veterans. This game will be played with great intensity. As usual I assume it will be another hard hitting affair but both teams are good skating teams which will make it interesting."

Villanova is atop the M.A.C.H.C. tied with the University of Delaware. In league play the Wildcats are 2-1 while Delaware is 1-0-2. The next weeks will prove to be a crucial part in the season in the race for the Hannigan Cup. Villanova travels to Delaware Jan. 23 and Jan. 30 and the Blue Hens return the visit on Feb. 21.

Wildcats Squeeze By Orangemen

By DAVE COSKEY

According to Rollie Massimino, "When your backs are against the wall, you must respond." One could safely assume the Cats had their backs, fronts and both sides to the wall last Saturday in Syracuse.

Massimino's (barely) walking wounded limped into Syracuse following a medical mismatch with Notre Dame best described as a nightmare. Jake Nevin's newly formed group, the Woundedcats lists such standouts as Bradley, Granger, Mulquin, Howard, and Sienkiewicz. John Pinone has played outstanding recently, but asking him to go one on five may be pushing it.

Syracuse's legendary home court record didn't help make the local 9 point spread a sure bet for a Wildcat win.

The Orangemen took the opening tap and proceeded to run up a first half lead to as many as ten points. A slow down ploy by Villanova backfired just before the half. The play could have let the visitors enter the lockerroom down by only two. Instead a steal and foul put the Orangemen up by eight at the half.

The lights of the regional television broadcast and home crowd of over 15,000 didn't intimidate freshman Frank Dobbs and walk-on John Sices. Sices had a pair of steals and a breakaway dunk for Marv Albert and his NBC-TV audience. "The more I play the better I feel; today I wasn't even nervous," said Sices.

Sices and Dobbs became regulars quickly as Howard and Sienkiewicz both fouled out before the 5:00 mark. Again as he had in El Paso, sophomore John Pinone took the game over to help rally the Cats to tie Syracuse at 59 with 2:19 remaining. It was the first deadlock since early in the first half.

The Orangemen then seemed to crumble under pressure. Two full court passes intercepted by Pinone and Granger clinched for the Cats and they went on to win 69-65.

There was never really any question that the Cats could play with Syracuse when healthy. The upset as it was termed occurred because of the serious physical condition of Villanova.

The highlight of the game, besides Pinone, had to be the bench which has been suspect all year.

The Cat defense shut down Syracuse stars Dan Schayes and Marty Headd, holding them to ten and eight points respectively.

Schayes averaging 16 points per game was well off his game. Pinone, covering Schayes on defense said, "I didn't do anything special, I think when he picked up his fourth foul it may have hurt him."

Massimino said, "In conference games we'd like to split on the road and win at home. To win here, well, it's just a great, great victory."

Redmen Nip Cats

By DAVE COSKEY

Villanova used personal fouls to secure their win over Seton Hall earlier this season. St. John's tried the same thing, only this time things got fouled up.

According to St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca, "Fouling is part of the game, no, it is the game." So Carnesecca instructed his Redmen to, "Foul anyone except Sienkiewicz." Carnesecca's philosophy is that you don't play for a tie in your home building, "I didn't want Villanova to have a uncontested victory on the road," said the St. John's coach.

The Cats came out onto the court following their final timeout with :20 remaining in overtime and the score deadlocked at 52. Villanova controlled the ball on the inbounds pass and wore the clock down to :07 when Stewart Granger reverse pivoted and Redman Ron Plair broke from his man Mulquin to make the steal and jam home the winner with :02 showing.

The victory for St. John's solidified their claim on first place in the Big East and was the first loss on the road for the Wildcats.

Some people called last Saturday's battle in Syracuse a chess match, if that was so, then there was a street fight in New York. Villanova came out in the first intimidating the Redmen with a strong zone defense. Unlike the first meeting between these two teams, this game was dominated by defense. Villanova went into the locker room at the half holding a slim one point lead.

In the second half Villanova hit a dry spell shooting and the Redmen starting running. St. John's was able to build up a 12 point lead before Massimino switched to a man to man defense that would bring his team back. The Cats finally tied the game, which had been knotted ten times, eight in the first half alone, at :52 with only 1:02 remaining.

Carnesecca decided to have one final shot and proceeded to run the clock only to have their last shot nullified on an offensive foul. Villanova could not connect with only seconds remaining and the teams went into overtime deadlocked at 52.

In overtime the teams remained deadlocked with less than two minutes remaining when Massimino called for one final shot with 1:49 remaining.

For Granger it was a tough way to end a great game. Massimino couldn't say enough about the game's high scorer, "What can I say, it happens. The kid played a great game, ran our offense, great defense, I think he played super." Carnesecca at the other end of the locker room couldn't explain why his team hadn't followed his orders to foul the Cats, "I really don't know, you don't second guess things when they work out. Especially when you steal one from a tough team like Villanova."

Howard Long is this week's Bud Athlete of the Week. Long was awarded Most Valuable Player in the prestigious Blue-Gray game on December 25, 1980. Late in the third quarter with the Blue down by six, Long blocked a punt that was recovered on the Gray one-yard line. One play later the Blue went ahead 24-23 and held on for the victory. He was the starting nose tackle for the northerners and played a solid game throughout. Long was nominated by the Sports Network.

Senate Approves Budget Priorities

by ANNE SUYDAM

The University Senate elected a new chairman and passed the budget priorities in its first meeting of the spring semester Friday, January 16.

Dr. Armenti, who has been the Senate Chairman since 1976, has been appointed as Dean of the University College and will no longer hold his Senate position. The meeting began with a presentation of a desk-set, by student body president, Henry Amoroso, thanking Armenti for his 4-1/2 years as chairman. A few words were spoken by Eleanor Fenol, representing the faculty and Father Deegan, representing the administration.

Nominations were taken for new Chairman. Dr. Richard Neville, of Career Development, and Mr. Warren Richardson, of the communications department, were the two nominees. Neville, however, declined stating, "I wouldn't do justice to the position." Richardson was then elected chairman. His position on the Executive Committee was replaced with Dr. Joyce Longman of the math department. She has served on the Senate for several years.

The Senate then welcomed two new faculty members. Dr. Alain Phares; from the physics department and Dr. Gerald Abraham, from the Law School. A senator's term runs for two years. After two years, a senator may be re-elected.

The Budget Committee was to have the budget for 1981-1982 reviewed. They had not met since the holidays and needed time to meet and discuss their plans. No decision was made on the budget because of this.

Dr. James Clarke, chairman of the Senate Planning and Priorities Committee spoke on the priorities. When planning the list of priorities, Clarke said it was developed with two things in mind. "Most of the budget is locked in and you are not going to have a lot of flexibility." The second idea was the 12.5 to 13 percent inflation rate.

Dr. Joseph George of the history department felt that the University has "badly outgrown" Falvey Library. Clarke stated that the library was not included because it was not considered a top priority. The priority list was approved and passed.

New Chairman Elected

by ANNE SUYDAM

A new University Senate Chairman was elected at the Senate's meeting on Friday, January 16.

Warren Richardson, chairman of the speech communication department, was chosen.

Richardson came to Villanova in 1965 and has been chairman of his department since 1968. In 1977, he became chairman of the new Communication Arts program, which had its first graduating class in May, 1980.

Richardson has served on the Senate for a total of five full years. He filled Dr. Sterling Delano's position when Delano went on sabbatical last spring. For one-half year, he was chairman in 1975-1976. He then went off the Senate the next year. He was chairman of the Faculty Assembly for two years and also has served as Senate Parliamentarian.

When elected Senate chairman this year, Richardson was already on the Executive Committee. His position there has been filled by Dr. Joyce Longman of mathematics.

Richardson does not intend to run for the position in September. With the newness of the Communication Arts program, he feels he would not have enough time for creativity for the Senate.

When asked about Armenti's job as chairman, Richardson replied that he was "excellent." Richardson felt Armenti was a good organizer and was always fair.

Richardson is comfortable with the Senate plans for the remainder of the semester, and he does not anticipate any surprises.

Fire Causes Evacuation

By SARA KELLY

Good Counsel Hall had to be evacuated at 7:28 a.m. last Wednesday due to a fire in the boiler room which spread smoke throughout the building.

According to Deputy Chief of the Bryn Mawr Fire Company, Tom Hogan, the fire was confined to the boiler room which also contained lockers used by the cafeteria staff. "The fire either began in a locker or in some boxes that stored behind the lockers," said Hogan. Hogan also stated that the fire did not damage the food boxes, as a resident assistant had originally thought.

When the fire alarms rang through the dorm at 7:28 a.m., a Food Services employee, Brian Ford, was in the basement at the cafeteria. Ford, the first to reach the fire, said, "The fire appeared to be behind some boxes. I and another man tried to put it out. We emptied six fire extinguishers, but the room became so smoke filled that we could no longer see."

Contradicting what Hogan said about no electrical damage, Ford, who returned later that day to see

Retiring Chairman Views Position

By MARGARET BATTISTELLI

Dr. Angelo Armenti, newly-elected dean of the University College, resigned his position Friday, Jan. 16, as chairman of the University Senate on which he served for 4-1/2 years. Armenti joined the Senate as a faculty senator in September 1975 and was elected chairman the following year.

Armenti remarked that his personal contribution to the Senate has been the role of any chairman; to "act as the maintainer of positive, friendly, working relationships among the senators, to help them to feel welcome and to assure that every member, whether he be a student, a faculty member, an alumnus, or an administrator, is treated as an equal." He was needed also "to protect the right of each senator to speak freely and to encourage each to respect, if not agree with, the opinions of the others."

Armenti feels the Senate made considerable progress in the four years that he served as chairman. Specifically, the Senate has assured for itself a place in the area of University governance. The Senate has suggested the idea of student input in rank and tenure decisions and has had its suggestions approved by the administration. Also, the Senate has developed policies concerning the selection and evaluation of deans and was involved in the changing of the graduation dates.

Asked to explain, in his own words, the role of the Senate, Armenti said its role is to "provide a forum for students, faculty members, administration and alumni to work together for the common good of the University." He also feels the Senate has lived up to this role and can be expected to continue doing so in the future under the direction of its new chairman, Warren Richardson of the speech communications department.

In order to have one of its suggestions put into action, the Senate must first present it to the administration and have it approved. At the time of Armenti's resignation as chairman, there were many matters that were still under consideration. He is sure that they will be handled with the same efficiency and competence as others were handled in the past and that they will be resolved properly.

One endeavor of the Senate which Armenti is particularly proud of and which has been recently approved is the adoption of a set of priorities. In order to establish this, the Senate had to undergo a constitutional change in that it had to form a committee especially for the topic of priorities. To accommodate this change, the Committee of University Planning was changed to the Committee of University Planning and Priorities. Armenti is pleased that the Senate "has gone on record in the area of priorities and that there is now a mechanism (The Committee of University Planning and Priorities) within the Senate to allow this to happen each year."

Trustees Name New Chairman

By SHARON WINTERS

Former president of Villanova University, the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy O.S.A. has been elected as the chairman of the University's Board of Trustees. He will assume the duties of the office at its February meeting.

As chairman of the Board, McCarthy will preside over all meetings and committees. These will involve all phases of University life, cited Eugene Ruane, director of public relations.

McCarthy was president of Villanova from 1971 to 1975. He left the position at the age of 62 because of "health reasons," according to Ruane.

During the McCarthy era, Villanova was involved with issues just as much as other colleges were although the Villanova students were more concerned about internal things, recounted Dr. Robert Langran, chairman of the University Senate during the McCarthy administration. Students were concerned about the alcohol policy, parietal issues and tuition raises, he said.

"I represented the Senate and the Senate had taken liberal attitudes. He (McCarthy) was a conservative," said Langran.

An investigation involving drugs was conducted on campus in 1974. An "extraordinary" session of the University Senate was held. The minutes of that meeting described the situation as "emotional." According to a Senate member at that time, "It appeared that there were no guarantees of due process for the students involved."

The student rights issues led to various sit-ins and demonstrations. In February 1974, 1200 students occupied Tolentine Hall. Student leaders, at that time, elected to stage the sit-in which lasted for 22 hours. A later demonstration, the same month, lasted four days; a list of demands was sent to the president's office on that occasion.

Twelve students of the University sued Villanova, Father McCarthy and other administrators for $11 million in July 1974. The issue involved the discipline meted to the students, six were expelled and six were suspended, as a result of parietal violations in Sheehan Hall earlier that year. They charged that their civil rights had been violated.

McCarthy was quoted in February 1979 in the Villanovan, "Those were difficult years from the student relations viewpoint because the Vietnam War was in the background. Student reaction to the war was to rebel against all authority."

Father McCarthy is a 1934 graduate of Villanova in the Arts curriculum. He went to Catholic University for his graduate work; in 1941 he received his doctorate in history from that school.

The Rev. McCarthy served twice in the Villanueva University in Havana, Cuba. The second time he was vice-president of the school.

Castro overthrew the government of the island during McCarthy's vice-presidency. He was held prisoner under the Castro regime before being expelled from the country. It was a "very frightening experience," according to Ruane.

Villanueva is currently being utilized as either a factory or a warehouse by the Cubans, Ruane said.

In 1961, the year he was expelled from Cuba, McCarthy returned to the United States where he became the founder and president of Biscayne College in Florida.

In 1968, McCarthy was the religious superior and a faculty member of Merrimack College.

As president of Villanova, a position McCarthy entered in 1971, he began a self-examination program for the University. Special committees were formed to analyze the programs that were doing well and also the ones that needed improvement.

Father McCarthy is now serving as the president of Merrimack College in Andover, Mass.

Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A.

Campus Sponsors Youth Conference

By DOUGLAS EARL

A Youth for World Order Conference will be held at the Connelly Center January 30 and 31. The purpose of the conference is to understand how youth can be involved in an effort to better our world.

Some of the sponsors for the Conference are the International Studies Association, The Villanova Political Union, The Common Heritage Institute, the Villanova Campus Ministry and Center for Concern and the Villanova Political Science Department.

Dr. John Logue, director of the Common Heritage Institute, expressed great concern over the north-south split the vast economic and social difference between the rich and poor nations. He hopes that the conference will attract people who share his hope that through activities such as the conference some suffering people can be helped.

Snow Removal Presents Maintenance Problems

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Recent snow storms at Villanova have raised problems concerning snow removal on campus. A heavy snow fell on December 30, and has been followed by several other small storms and below-freezing temperatures.

Bill O'Donnell, the supervisor of campus snow removal, explained the problem. "Monday was the first day above freezing. Everything was cleared then. I had the men in on Christmas, New Year's Day and on weekends, while everyone else had off, but nothing worked. The salt and calcium put on the sidewalks froze up too."

"The small snowstorms are killing us," O'Donnell said. "Temperatures haven't been this low for years. Under the conditions we've been in, my men did a hell of a job."

In addition to the cold, the flu also cut down O'Donnell's staff. Outside help had to be hired to clear out the University's parking lots.

In the event of a snowstorm, O'Donnell's main priority is to clear the main driveways, the parking lots and then the areas with the heaviest pedestrian traffic. The ramps and stairs on buildings need to be cleared, then the rest of the access areas, although O'Donnell said there is more concrete to be cleared around Connelly Center than on the rest of the campus. As of Tuesday, the sidewalks on campus had been cleared.

Reagan Inauguration Discussed

by RICHARD DI STEFANO

President Ronald Reagan's Inaugural Address, delivered Tuesday at noon, was given with the intention of inspiring the listeners, rather than informing them, according to Dr. Priscilla G. Hopkirk, associate professor of political science here at Villanova.

Dr. Hopkirk noted that this phenomenon of appealing to emotion is characteristic of recent presidents in the first speech given after taking the oath of the highest office in the land. This is not demagogy, she emphasized, pointing out that to some people, when Ex-President Jimmy Carter tried to inspire others, he sounded like a preacher.

In his Address, President Reagan praised his predecessor for facilitating the continuous transfer of the power of the Presidency. Commenting upon some adverse reaction to the expense of all the elaborate festivities taking place around the Inauguration, Dr. Hopkirk observed that this atmosphere provided "a basis that symbolizes smooth transition . . . outward civility and social conventions justify this symbolism for the world." Also the new Chief Executive reiterated his ideas that were used by him in the campaign: the large federal government is the problem, not the solution to many of our problems, and the way to improve the situation is to decentralize the balance of power, so that state and local governments have more authority and the nationwide bureaucracy has less of it. The cry is to "act today in order to preserve tomorrow."

An important thrust of this speech, according to Dr. Hopkirk, reminded the nation that he will not deviate from his campaign promises: the budget should be balanced, taxes should be cut, certain government programs will be eliminated. Near the end of the Address, allusions were made to future increases in military spending and to the removal of "roadblocks to productivity . . . There will be no compromise."

Moderates and minorities were not forgotten, however, as exemplified by the President's promises that no one group should pay a price for progress, that all Americans are entitled to work, and that no segment of society in America should be unduly burdened in the cutting of inflation: "We are a nation that has a government, not the other way around."

Finally, President Reagan made an appeal to United States patriotism. "We are too great a nation to limit ourselves to too small a dream." His talk of "heroes" and an "era of national renewal" was general, not given to specific plans. Dr. Hopkirk again observed that President Reagan's Inaugural Address was typical, in its vague nature, of what Americans have come to expect on Inauguration Day.

Counseling Center Offers Various Programs

The Villanova Counseling Center is now offering various discussion groups. Discussion Group on Intimate Relationships:

This discussion group provides a setting in which to examine the issues that arise when people enter an intimate relationship. Among the relationships that people define as "intimate" are love relationships, same-sex and opposite-sex friendships, and family relationships.

Along with the joys that come from such relationships, there are certain predictable, normal concerns. How much time should we spend together? How much time can we afford to devote to others? How do we effectively deal with anger toward each other? How can we recover when one of us feels hurt? How much should we share with each other? Is it OK to have secrets?

The group experience will be a safe, confidential setting in which to share thoughts about these and related questions. It will be co-led by Dr. Richard Neville and Dr. Joan Greenhouse, of the University Counseling Center.

If you are interested, leave your name and phone number at the University Counseling Center, 106 Corr Hall; or phone 645-4050.

Couples Group:

The Couples Group is open to college seniors and graduate students, currently involved in a committed relationship. It is preferable that both members of the couple attend. The discussion group will provide a setting in which couples can share concerns and feelings with other couples. Our goal is to learn to more effectively communicate about topics such as: balancing each member's private needs with the needs of the relationship; communicating feelings effectively; expressing affection and sexual feelings; making decisions as a couple; developing an identity as a couple without losing each member's individual identity; balancing career/school needs with home needs; interacting with other close friends; relating to each partner's own family and to the other partner's family. The co-leaders will be Dr. Richard Neville and Dr. Joan Greenhouse of the Counseling Center Sta

If you are interested, leave y name and phone number at University Counseling Center, Corr Hall, or phone 645-4050.

Self Understanding Thro Dream Analysis:

Many messages about oursel are available through looking the symbolic content of our dre lives. This group offers member unqiue chance to explore their conscious in an understanding, citing and supportive vironment. Ways of havi remembering, changing and derstanding dreams will be tau along with the opportunity to on what is learned. Scheduled Tuesday nights at 6:30 p.m., group will meet through Spri Semester. To learn more, come the University Counseling Cent in 106 Corr Hall and ask for D Jeff Pollard.

to help achieve a world of peace and justice."

Questioned about campus interest Logue commented, "I think there's interest among students and faculty. Ten to 12 years ago there was a lot of campus activity on the Vietnam war. It may be that acting now might be the shrewdest thing. I hope that the conference will plant some seeds of consciousness."

Logue said that there will be many entertaining and informative events at the conference as well as a chance for all participants to be involved. The Ambassador to the United Nations for Jamaica, the Hon. Donald O. Mills will speak at the conference. Ambassador Mills, formerly President of the UN Security Counci has an impressive list of credentials and will be very informative, said Logue.

A Canadian group called Evolution will give a Coffee House performance. The group will perform songs about peace, disarmament and the environment. Among the songs the group will play is a new one titled, "Ode to John Lennon." There will also be a chance for Villanova talent to perform.

Some other featured speakers are Dr. Finn Laursen of Denmark, a visiting Fellow at Princeton, Walter Hoffman, Chairman of the Campaign for UN Reform: Judy Schnidman, Director of the Youth Program of the World Federalist Association.

Logue stressed that there is a great and much needed chance for student action and participation.

Some of the options that students can take action on are: Hunger Awareness, Anti-Nuclear Activism, the Peace Corps, and Plans for the UN's International Year of Youth.

People interested in the conference can contact Colleen Sullivan, coordinator of the conference at 645-7301 or by stopping by St. Mary's at the Common Heritage Institute.

Take Your Degree Into A Real World Laboratory - With Vitro!

Not only are we working on complex Naval Weapons Systems that will revolutionize current state-of-the-art standards, we're offering opportunities for growth and professional recognition that put us way ahead of our competition. At Vitro, almost every project we take on represents a significant part of a major national issue. Depending on your interests, you could be involved in the systems engineering, integration, and analysis of the fleet shipboard combat system development, or the application of advanced computer technology in support of complex systems engineering programs. It's a career that has implications well beyond the academic.

As one of the nation's leading systems engineering firms, we can offer the new graduate a career package that includes tuition reimbursement, group insurance, paid vacations, retirement programs, a very good salary, and the opportunity to become involved immediately in significant long-term programs. You'll also enjoy being located "at the pulse," in suburban Maryland, near Washington, D.C., within easy reach of the many cultural advantages of the Nation's Capital.

Vitro positions require problem-solvers who have technical ability and engineering creativity. If you're about ready for a real world application of your classroom problem-solving skills, let's talk about tomorrow: yours and ours. We'll be on campus February 6; or contact Maureen Conrad, College Relations Coordinator, Toll Free at (800) 638-2901, ext. 2224. Check with your Placement Office this week for details and to preview a videotaped introduction to Vitro.

Vacation Security Found Effective

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Villanova faced few security problems around campus during the recent winter vacation, according to Captain Joseph Cunnane of Villanova's security force.

"It was the best holiday period we ever had," said Cunnane, discussing the three week break. According to Cunnane, one robbery was reported by a student upon his return to the campus. "A personal possession was taken from Coor Hall. We're still working on it," said Cunnane.

Comparing the winter break to other recent vacation periods in terms of security, Cunnane said, "This was better. During most holidays you have some problems, but this one was good. It's a time when you can't relax because you are very vulnerable when no one is here. Having a large number of people coming and going is a good preventative."

Cunnane explained that the size of the security force remains the same over vacation periods, and he noted, "We cover dorms very extensively which we don't do when we have students here." Asked if he feels dormitories are relatively safe from robbery and vandalism during vacations, Cunnane said, "You have to watch them very closely. This year we were very successful."

Cunnane feels this success is due to the "dedication of all the people who stayed here over Christmas and New Year's holidays. I'm firmly convinced everyone did a good job."

Fire Questioned

the damage, saw a man in the boiler room repairing, or possibly removing, a burnt fuse box. According to several Good Counsel residents, there was a burnt fuse box on the ground next to a fire truck. When asked what it was, if not a burnt fuse box, Hogan replied that it was "an automatic potato peeler." According to the manager of the Good Counsel cafeteria, Manuel Picazo, that cafeteria does not have now and has never had an automatic potato peeler. Only pre-peeled potatoes are used. "It in no way resembled a potato peeler. It was a fuse box, and I am convinced it was an electrical fire," said one of the students who saw the fuse box.

Because of the large number of false alarms on the Villanova campus, the fire company does not initially respond to a fire alert. According to Thomas Trucks director of maintenance, the alarm in the building triggers an alarm at the AFA Protective Systems Inc. in Philadelphia, which calls Villanova Security to verify that there actually is a fire and then the fire company is notified. "This system became necessary because, with the large number of false alarms, the fire company refused to respond with verification," said Trucks. This system may be dangerous, as it delays the reaction of the fire company to get to the fire. The alarm rang through Good Counsel at 7:28 a.m., while the fire company did not arrive until 7:50 a.m., a difference of 22 minutes.

From some places in the building it is difficult and sometimes impossible to hear the fire alarms. According to Lori Davies, a Good Counsel resident, "You cannot hear the alarms while you are in the bathrooms. If I were the only one in there, I would say maybe I ignored it, but there were others in the bathrooms who did not hear the alarms either."

Local College Group Proposed

By BOB COUREY

Villanova's student body may be entering into a conjunction with other area colleges. The conjunction is a concept known as a federation of colleges. Such a federation already exists in the Boston area.

A major purpose of the federation is to make exchange programs of lectures, social calendar and political involvement between local colleges and universities.

"With the number of students we have in the area, the lobbying power of these students in a federation would be tremendous," commented Student Body President Henry Amoroso.

The schools that have shown interest in such a federation include: Bryn Mawr, Haverford, LaSalle, Rosemont, Penn and Villanova.

An organizational meeting will be hosted by Villanova in the Connelly Center on January 29. The meeting will entail discussing the future direction that a federation will take, a federation charter and lecture schedules.

Junior Bob Rosengarth will be Villanova's delegate to the federation.

"I have found that the previous work we have done up to now to be a definite indication that such a federation could and will be a benefit to the entire area. It seems the students of the various colleges would really like to see such a federation formed and we will do all in our power to cooperate," concluded Amoroso.

Report Prompts University Action

By KIETRYN ZYCHAL

The Middle States evaluation report of Villanova University contained several suggestions for modification within the University, some of which are being carried out by the University.

The report cited weaknesses in the core curriculum of the College of Arts and Sciences. According to Dr. James Cleary, vice-president for academic affairs, the core curriculum is currently being reviewed.

Cleary also commented on the report's recommendation that there are excessive credit loads in some majors. "The programs are set up by the departments and approved by the deans of the colleges and this office. They attempt to answer the professional and humanities needs of the students."

"A decision to lower the credit loads would have to be made by the deans with recommendations to the office of Academic Affairs," said Cleary.

Cleary said that he accepts the report's recommendation to raise the requirements for tenure and lower those for promotion. He commented that tenure requirements should be made strict enough to allow a faculty member to be promoted to associate professor upon receipt of tenure.

Cleary defended the University in its attempt to recruit minority faculty members, another suggestion made by the Middle States report. Cleary said that Villanova does advertise in the affirmative action register, but it is difficult to attract qualified minority faculty due to competition from private industry.

The report also criticized Villanova's inability to attract minority students. Cleary admitted that Villanova does not have a recruitment plan for minority students. He claimed the reason for this was the financial consideration.

"I think we should do more to recruit minority students but it's going to take money," added Cleary.

Abortion Proves to be an Emotional Issue

Time for a New Perspective

This week has been designated as an "I Love Life" celebration to commemorate the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision on abortion. The purpose of these activities is to get Villanova students to consider the issue of abortion. It is hoped that this commentary will offer an insight into this issue.

The issue of abortion, perhaps more than any other,has lead to a polarization of society. When the topic of abortion comes up in conversation, one is frequently asked something like,"Are you for abortion or against it." It seems like it has to be one way or the other.

This artificial division has conglomerated itself into two opposing spheres of influence. So-called "pro-life" and "pro-choice" groups hold rallies and protests quite often to let their views be known. As our recent past has shown, they have also extended their efforts into the political arena.

Abortion and politics is pointed to by many as proof of the "conflict perspective" of society; they view antagonism as a fact of life. The fight between these two groups over the past ten years is solid evidence for such a view.

Perhaps, though, our society could look at the issue a bit differently. Instead of concentrating on political force to settle the issue, we could focus on our shared culture and morality to draw up solutions to the abortion problem.

In viewing the abortion issue, two basic premises can be adopted to facilitate this perspective. The first of these premises states ,"Abortion is wrong and efforts should be made to prevent its occurrence."

A person professing to be "pro-life" would have few objections to such a statement; it embodies the basic meaning of their whole movement. Oddly enough, most "pro-choice" advocates could also agree with such a view.

After all, no one could logically or morally argue that an abortion is a "good" act. Philosopher Daniel Callahan, an opponent of governmental prohibition of abortion, said in his book Abortion: Law, Choice, and Morality that"A respect for the sanctity of human life should, I believe, incline them (women) toward a general and strong bias against abortion. Abortion is an act of killing, the violent, direct destruction of potential human life, already in the process of development. That fact should not be disguised, or glossed over by euphemism and circumlocution."

The debate over the past years has harangued on the question of whether the fetus is human life. When viewing the issue from this perspective, this question becomes inconsequential.

The second premise to consider when viewing abortion is that,"Abortion is not just an evil in itself, but is the result of other factors and problems in our society."

After all, a woman does not choose abortion as an alternative for no reason. Most often, the situations faced by women determine their choice. This premise merely recognizes the fact that abortion is a symptom of other problems, not a cause of them.

These two premises might seem obvious to many. But their recognition by society enables us to limit abortions while preserving individual liberty as much as possible. The first premise unites us in an effort to curtail abortion. The second directs us at the real cause of abortion.

In approaching solutions to abortion, the first thing that comes to mind is increased sex education. Any sincere effort to prevent abortion must first try to prevent unwanted pregnancies. Ironically, many groups opposed to abortion do not favor sex education.

Commenting on this phenomenon, Patricia Harris, the outgoing secretary of Health and Human Services said in a recent New York Times interview that ". . . any society that says that we not only will not provide and encourage contraception for those who for whatever reason are not yet prepared to control their sexuality through abstinence and then says that, if there should be the accident of pregnancy, under no circumstances do we intend to abort that pregnancy, is . . . hypocritical."

Many people object to sex education in the schools on the grounds that it should be a parental prerogative. Last year, however, there were 20,631 abortions by teenagers in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania alone. Apparently, many parents are not doing an adequate job.

No one is claiming that our schools should teach sexual morality to students. This is something that should be left to the individual parents. The knowledge of sexuality and the prevention of pregnancy, however, should be made available to every teenager and should be dealt with in a responsible manner.

The other important aspect of the abortion issue is that of the poor. Last year, there were over 10,000 Medicaid-funded abortions in Pennsylvania. The problem of unwanted pregnancy is definitely important to many poor women.

The recent trend in government is to limit welfare and social programs for the poor. Many states, including Pennsylvania, have severely curtailed funds for abortions. This trend, however, goes directly against what is needed to allow poor women to carry their pregnancies to term.

According to Pennsylvania Public Assistance figures, a poor pregnant woman is eligible for approximately $3,100 per year in aid. In addition to this amount, she is also entitled to $14 per month in food stamps before her pregnancy, and $60 after she has her child.

If our society is sincere in its attempt to prevent abortion under these circumstances, it must make it financially feasible for these women to carry their pregnancies to term.

Perhaps increased assistance for the poor will cost money. But, someone opposed to such aid on financial grounds seems to be saying that morality is fine, as long as it doesn't cost anything.

This issue of abortion is certainly one of the most emotional ones in our country. If we are able to rise above the emotion and approach the issue from this perspective, perhaps we can begin to work together in proposing solutions to abortion.

Frosh Comments

Dear Editor:

I have two brief comments. First of all, what's all this I read about concerning campus security? Maybe I'm a naive freshman, but it seems to me that the security is adequate. The only problem is the guards. These aging or paunchy fellows would probably keel over if they ever tried to chase a mugger or a rapist. If Villanova needs to be patrolled, then let's have the appropriate type of people filling these jobs (that would not include women). There is one fact we must remember: In today's world, no one is safe all of the time, everywhere.

Secondly, only a secret, simultaneous attack at 3 a.m. by individual brigades of storm troopers on each dormitory, with orders to seek out and confiscate all alcohol, could enforce the Administration's alcohol policy. Nevertheless, many residents like to flaunt their booze in public, giving our "Christian" campus a sleazy appearance and atmosphere. In addition, these people prefer to dump their cans, bottles, and other trash all over the grounds, as if they were living in a New Jersey landfill. When it comes to drinking, let's do it in the privacy of our rooms.

Sincerely,
Philip W. Kessel

Complaint

To the Editor:

This letter is being written so that the problems now being ignored will be corrected. I have gone to the Maintenance department, my Resident Assistant and to Tony Martin, the "acting" Dean of Men, which is the most appropriate title ever given to the man.

The shower/restroom facilities on Sullivan third floor west are the worst I've seen in a long time. They are so bad that an assistant of the Pennsylvania Housing Authority told me that if I had a landlord I could take them to court, and probably win. Here are some examples:

1) Huge puddles exist on the shower floor and due to a non-sloping floor and a drain which doesn't work. Men get out of the shower and promptly insert their feet into a puddle roughtly one half an inch deep.

2) The showers themselves don't control the flow of hot/cold water. In this time of conservation residents must wait three to five minutes for the water to warm up or cool down; in the past two weeks the latter has been the case.

3) Lack of water pressure has caused the urinals and toilets not to flush and the showers have on occasions slowed to a trickle, which is great if you've got soap in your eyes. This problem applies to all times of the day, not just "peak periods" as maintenance suggested.

4) Going to the bathroom in a stall with a door is a luxury which we don't even complain about any more due to all the empty promises.

5) Two of the windows do not close. At times the aforementioned puddle has become very close to solid.

Unfortunately the problems extend outside the walls of the restrooms. While fires were endangering the lives of all that live here, no smoke alarms or any such devices were installed. I'd love to hear the reaction of the Radnor Fire Chief when I tell him that a building that houses four hundred people has no sprinklers, no smoke alarms and no CO2 fire extinguishers. The last major problem has to do with heat. Most have too much heat which is a pain, but is not as bad as the rooms with little or no warmth.

In closing I'd like to simply ask the "powers that be" whether or not you think we are getting twenty four hundred dollars worth of service, a figure I am told is due to rise substantially in the future. Finally, due to the vindictive attitude of the administration I must regretfully remain anonymous.

New Year's Thoughts

Dear Editor:

So this is 1981. What do we do now? It's hard to say, everything is so chaotic and uncontrolled these days. So far, the eighties seem to be promulgating an orgy of narcissists.

We look at our new, unmarked calendars and see them as new leases on life with no stipulations. Every 365 1/4 days we get this opportunity to start back at number one. 1980 will be filed somewhere in the archives of our minds to be resurrected in 20 or 30 years, all the bad events forgotten, to be remembered only as part of the good old days.

In part, this is a viable practice. Even if it's only to allay some fears that one's life is not redeemable. However, what happened last year, or the year before, or 50 years before that, all helped to promote today's excessive engrossment in oneself.

For example, four years ago Tom Wolfe coined the words, "Me Generation." Now, there seems to be an increase of megalomania, nihilism, and senseless slaughter — a warped and extreme interpretation of the "Me Generation?" Perhaps. People feel the necessity to not only be "themselves," but to let everyone else know they are doing so. We all want to be someone. Couldn't the man who shot John Lennon be a contributor to this? Infamy is definitely less desirable than fame, but recognition and attention go with both. Those gunshots on that Monday night were the question marks of a confused humanity.

What do we do now? I guess the answer is: "Who cares!" Do anything you want, and if you do it consistently for six months you will undoubtedly get written up in People magazine. Bruce Springsteen caught the feeling when he wrote that we are all, "trying to learn now to walk like the heroes we thought we had to be." But it seems we are getting further and further away from the next two lines of that song, that "after all this time to find we're just like all the rest." "The rest" is getting hard to find, and even harder to conform to.

Sincerely,
PAULA C. GARELL

Intramurals

Dear Editor:

As requested by the Intramural Sports Department, Delta Tau Delta Fraternity would like to take this opportunity to explain, once and for all, its relationship to the Department's referees — especially Dean Valente. Referees, at all levels of competition are subject to some ill-treatment by both athletes and spectators. This occurs because sometimes human nature refuses to accept an objective assessment of a situation. Unfortunately, some people go beyond the accepted limits of disagreement to strongly harassing the referees. The Fraternity regrets that the Intramural Department has interpreted this verbal harassment as threatening; assuredly it is not. Upon closer inspection, it becomes clear that referee maltreatment is simply a phenomenon of American sports, certainly not unique to Villanova.

Sincerely,
Robert A. Horoski
Former President
Delta Tau Delta Fraternity

Response

Dear Editor,

In response to Anne Healy's letter in last week's edition of the Villanovan, it must indeed be a shame to go through life so unaffected by man's inhumanity to man. Because cold-blooded killings do occur daily, this should not lessen their impact. This is not a case of naivete on Miss Coyle's part, but simply a show of her concern for other human beings.

Thank you,
GAILMARIE MILLER

In the wake of the release of the hostages that were held captive in Iran, Villanova students were asked to give personal projections on how history would look back on the captivity.

Phil Reilly
Junior, Civil Engineering
The U.S. lost a lot of respect in the eyes of other countries towards our position in foreign policy. Other presidents would have gone in and gotten them.

Barbara Remaniak
Sophomore, Arts
Jimmy Carter wanted to get them out since it was his responsibility. The release was all a matter of timing. It was done in an effort to alleviate the pressure that was building in our foreign relations.

Herb Mamell
Freshman, Liberal Arts
Marked a great weakness in American foreign power.

Steve Helmetag
Sophomore, Marketing/Communications
Really ironic that they would release the hostages on the day of Reagan's inauguration. Carter wanted to be remembered as a strong moral leader.

Student Studies In England

By MARIE CROSSAN

While most of us were settling down to study at Villanova last fall, many were becoming acclimated to study in a completely different atmosphere. Laura Fischer, a junior economics major, was one of several VU students who had the opportunity to study abroad.

Laura noticed a great difference in student-teacher relationships. The teachers are more at ease.

From August 30 to December 12, Laura took courses at Lord North's Castle located in Roxton, England. The Castle, now an abbey, has teaching and recreational facilities and houses 47 students from across the United States.

The faculty consists of mostly young instructors working on their doctor's thesis. Laura remarked that she noticed a great difference in the student-teacher relationship in England. "The teachers are more at ease. They even went to the local pubs with us at night." The classes themselves are much smaller, which Laura sees as a definite learning advantage.

Laura found the courses slightly more demanding abroad. Her course curriculum consisted of 3 hour seminars throughout the week. While grades were important, she felt there was less emphasis on grades and an increased demand on the amount of material grasped by the student.

Living approximately one hour and 40 minutes outside of London, Laura found many opportunities to visit this fascinating city. The instructors chartered buses and the group was able to visit Scotland and Wales as well as some of the local sights.

Laura found the British warm and hospitable people. "Roxton is a small place. Only about 500 people live there." While in England, Laura was visited by her parents. "It gave them an excuse to come see Europe."

While abroad, Laura was kept well informed by the British press. "They cut up America a lot!" Concerning the November Presidential Election, Laura felt the British covered it well. "I guess they thought we would stay up all night and wait for the returns. A newspaper called and wanted to interview us!"

Another source of interest was the recent murder of former Beatle John Lennon. The British, being rather passive people, Laura felt that, "A bigger deal was made of it over here than there." She felt the people there were not quite as reactionary as Americans. "People over there respect everything. No one would think of doing such a thing there."

Laura believes that part of the reason there is a lower crime rate in England is due to the fact that everything closes down at 6:00 p.m. "The pubs open and then close around 11:00 p.m." There really is not much worry about crime. Concerning the well publicized Yorkshire Ripper, Laura remarked, "We were in Yorkshire and walked around, but we really didn't think much about it. It is a big deal over there though."

Upon her return to VU, Laura remarked that there was a slight difficulty in re-adjusting. "I really miss it. Especially the people. After living with them day and night, you become close friends. I'd go back in a minute!"

A possibility in Laura's future is studying law. She is not sure in what respects her studies abroad will help her, however, they certainly will not hurt.

Laura was referred to the program through a friend who attended in 1978. For the most part, Laura does not feel enough information is made available to the students by the University.

To participate in this program, a student must acquire permission from their academic advisor and the head of their various departments. A grade of C or better is required for the transferral of credits. An added incentive is the fact that Villanova reserves a room for the student on campus, provided they are successful in the lottery.

The program is offered through Fairleigh-Dickinson College. Anyone interested in more information concerning studies in any foreign country should contact Father Betoni, dean of Arts and Sciences in 113 Tolentine or speak to Laura Fischer in St. Rita's Hall.

Building Towards A Better Body

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

Down Haverford Road, in the Keystone Foods building, lies Main Line Nautilus, a health center for men and women who want to work to improve their physical fitness.

Unlike most spas and salons that work towards general physical relaxation, Main Line Nautilus offers over 50 machines to help achieve the highest degree of muscular tone possible.

According to Roger Schwab, director of the center, "Our program is geared to hard workers that want to fulfill their physical potential."

Exercises are done until a person reaches momentary muscular failure. Only in this manner can one reach their physical potential. Trained individuals are constantly on duty watching to make sure no one is hurting themselves by overdoing it, while at the same time making sure all are working at the right pace for maximum results.

The programs are suited to the individual, but basically, everyone uses all twelve types of machines in their workout.

Approximately one half-hour [illegible] times a week is all that is needed to result in greater strength, flexibility and cardiovascular endurance," explains Schwab.

Men and women go through the same program working side by side in the club. Women work to firm up muscles, while men try to build their muscles up.

Main Line Nautilus is training athletes from every school in the area, including Villanova. They believe, "A strong, flexible and well-conditioned athlete is less prone to injury and will outperform a weaker opponent every time."

A leader in the field of sports medicine and athletic training, Main Line Nautilus has also been established as a rehabilitation facility for the area. Located in a medical building, they work in conjunction with Bryn Mawr Hospital and various orthopedic surgeons in the area.

Main Line Nautilus is not associated with the other Nautilus clubs in the area. All are individually owned and directed.

The cost of membership for students at Main Line Nautilus is $150 for six months, $200 for nine. Trial workouts are available for $5 by appointment only.

Coach's Sons Cheer For Eagles

By STEVE RUNK

"A lot of excitement" is what life holds for Villanova Seniors Dave and Rick Vermeil as sons of Philadelphia Eagles Coach, Dick Vermeil.

And that excitement is especially apparent now as the Eagles ready to square off against the Oakland Raiders in Super Bowl XV on Sunday.

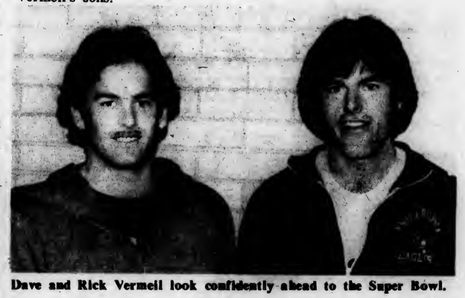
When asked what it was like to be sons of a professional football coach, Dave described it as "not a normal life." He said their lives were not like those of most people. He adds that "pro coaching is a selective profession that only a handful of people are involved in," so most people do not have the opportunity to live a life so enmeshed in the sport.

But Dave and Rick are right at home with this different type of lifestyle. Their father has coached the Eagles for five years now and has been involved in coaching on other levels before this. The whole family, in fact, gets involved in the sport during the season and enjoy the excitement that surrounds a winning team. In the off-season the Vermeils are socially involved with the Eagles players. Team members occasionally join them for dinner, and Dave says that he even hunts with some of the players.

When asked what disadvantages accompanied life as sons of a pro-coach, Dave and Rick seemed hard-pressed to find anything they didn't enjoy about it. They did say that it is a bit tough during the season with their father gone a lot. Rick says, "It is especially rough on our mother." But their father's absence, and an occasional loss, are the only drawbacks the brothers could think of as Coach Vermeil's sons.

Being the sons of someone so much in the sports spotlight, especially now, subjects the Vermeils to much press coverage.

Of course Dave and Rick will be in New Orleans on Sunday to cheer the Eagles in the Super Bowl. When asked how they thought the Eagles would do in this all important game, the brothers predicted a Philadelphia victory and emphatically expressed that "the Eagles are Number 1!"



Dave and Rick Vermeil look confidently ahead to the Super Bowl.

Internships Assist Future Employment

By KATE McDONALD

Depending upon their majors, junior and senior Villanova students are offered internships. Dr. Albert Dorley is the coordinator of all internship programs. Other faculty members are in charge of placing students in respective job situations.

Finding a communications internship is relatively easy right now. "Since communications has just become a major, the department is constantly changing," Prof. Raymond Wilke of the communications department explained. Basically, the students go to Prof. Wilke and have a choice of what they would like to do. At this point in time, there are more jobs than interns; however, as time goes on, the rules of obtaining an internship will become stricter.

The number of credits a student receives depends on how many hours per week the student works. Jobs are available both first and second semesters. "I never definitely know what's available," Wilke said, "so I have to find the jobs myself. But we have a good reputation so that's no problem."

Internships include employment at WCAU-TV, WPVI-TV, E.J. Stewart Video, Inc. and several radio stations. "Usually these places let me know how many students they need. There are no formal interviews," Wilke said.

Joe Jasek, a senior communications major, works at E.J. Stewart Video, Inc. 3 days a week. Employees of this production house specialize in making commercials. "We just made a commercial for Allaghany Commuter. This 10-second spot will be aired during the Super Bowl," Jasek said enthusiastically. A small amount of programming is also done including the television show, "Those Amazing Animals," airing Feb. 1, and certain sports games.

"The work I do is called grip work. I set up cameras, lighting, run cables and do pre-production work," Jasek explained. "This pre-production work includes painting studios and building sets according to the needs of the client."

This specific internship is worth 3 credits and a good day of work is a 10 hour one. Jasek makes up his other 12 credits on Tuesday and Thursday every week. His job is beneficial since he is now being exposed to video. After serving as a member of WKVU for his fourth year, and general manager of 1980, Jasek has had ample opportunity to perfect audio techniques.

Y.E.P. Performs In "Godspell"

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

It all began this past summer when the New Jersey Theater Ensemble formed a youth group to aid them in their attempt to serve the community both in culture and entertainment. They came together and produced their first major performance, "Godspell," the musical that dazzled both off-Broadway and Broadway theaters for many years, with record sell out crowds.

Calling themselves the Youth of the Ensemble Performers, YEP for short, the group began to spread theatre arts throughout the states. Within the five short months that the group has been together, four major productions have been done in Montclair, Lyndhurst, Irvington and Union, N.J.

Now, after many months of work trouping "Godspell" over New Jersey, the Youth Ensemble Performers will hit Villanova. They are being sponsored by the Villanova Union, on January 30 and 31, at St. Mary's and the Connelly Center, respectively.

Friday evening, the show alone will be performed at 9:00 p.m., while on Saturday the show will be part of a dinner-theater beginning at 6:30 p.m.

"Godspell" is a recapitulation of the gospel of St. Matthew set in modern times. It conveys all of the traditional teachings in a way that includes much laughter, joking, slap stick comedy, singing and dancing. The play begins with the Tower of Bebel and it progresses with the baptism by John.

The cast, made up of 24 college-level students from all over the east coast, will be arriving early on Friday to begin rehearsal for the evening performances. The majority of the students are theater arts majors and plan on pursuing a career in acting upon graduation.

Most cast members have performed in numerous productions previous to "Godspell." The lead player John Ciccolini and Ensemble partner Vinnie Palumbo, have both performed professionally in a holiday excerpt production of "The Me Nobody Knows" at the Whole Theatre Company in Montclair.

Because of the age range of the cast, YEP is specifically dedicated towards fulfilling the needs of younger performers who are often too old for school productions but too young for community theatre and often lose their opportunity to grow in experience.

This semi-professional organization serves the general public with theatre arts through self-taught workshops, major productions and seminars.

Each member of the New Jersey Theater Ensemble has the responsibility of assisting with at least two aspects of theatre production. They may affiliate themselves with stage design, production, graphics, publicity, costumes, technical advising, as well as, and in most cases, including acting.

Presently, as a part of their group training learning experience, Nancy Marino and Joe Furnari are co-directing a winter drama production of "Plaza Suite." The show has been cast and production is underway. "Plaza Suite" will debut in Montclair in early March.

The Battle Of Butler Annex

By EDWARD LIS

Forget Iran, Afghanistan, the economy, overpopulation, water shortages and the Eagles. Ask any Villanova student what his or her major concern was during the past week, and chances are good that you'll get a disgruntled reply like, "How am I ever gonna get up for that 8:30 Religion class." Yes, you've guessed it; the beloved time for Drop and Add has come and gone, but like any true legend it will never die.

Consider the following hypothetical situation between two freshmen in the Drop and Add line, Gullible Gary and Naive Nancy (remember the name game, frosh?).

"Gee, Gary, I'm so confused about my courses. I don't know what to take; everything's closed!"

"Well, Nancy, what subjects do you like?"

"I like science!"

"Okay, no problem. Here's a physics course that meets MWF at 11:30. That'll fit right into your schedule."

"Great! What's the course number?"

"Physics 5900, Advanced Quantum Mechanics."

"Sounds tough, Gary. Think I can handle it?"

"No problem, Nancy. Just sit up front and smile a lot!"

As exaggerated as this story might seem, it is indicative of the occasionally ludicrous happenings during Drop and Add. Students have made offers of lunch and dinner in exchange for closed sections, preceded and followed by repeated threats of suicide by collectively holding their breath until they get the courses they want. Another common excuse is that students have jobs that conflict with certain courses. A reasonable excuse, especially considering that 99 percent of those students work either TTH at 3:00 or MWF at 8:30.

Some of the common reasons given for admission to a closed section include: "The department chairman said I could." or "My mother won't let me stay out past 3:00 and I have a note from her right here to prove it." And, of course, every student in line is a senior who needs this specific section of this specific course with this specific teacher in order to graduate!

Though these conditions might cause neurosis in an average person, the battle-tested platoon of women who man the Drop and Add tables have met the challenge well. In Villanova's equivalent to no man's land, Butler Annex, these women have faced a difficult task trying to satisfy the needs of students as well as the demands of class-size — with cool professionalism and a sincere concern for the students.

The Drop and Add system has been vastly improved, as Registrar Analyst Kathy Connors points out. "The lines are shorter, the students are more knowledgable about the procedures, and there is better communication between the departmental chairmen, the Registrar's Office, and the students."

Even Outlaws Get The Blues

By STEVE COMES

"I have in my cupboard, under lock and key, the last bottle of Anais Nin (green label) to be smuggled out of Punta del Visionario before the revolution. Tonight, I'll pull the cork. I'll inject ten cc. into a ripe lime, the way the natives do. I'll suck. And begin. . .
"If this typewriter can't do it, I'll swear it can't be done."

And maybe it can't be done. In Tom Robbins' most recent book Still Life With Woodpecker, he tries to answer the question of how to make love stay. Perhaps as close as he gets to an answer is that outlaws make better lovers. If a man is true to himself then his love is apt to be more honest. And in its refusal to be chained, "love is the ultimate outlaw." But let's not get caught up in oversimplification. At least not yet.

Robbins is a poet lost in a novel. He plays with words, juxtaposing sound and meaning with the arrogant innocence of a child building castles of blocks. Plot is secondary; to the whims of his characters, to his search for the meaning of the moon, to the physical relations of the words that fall freely in tumbling cascades of linguistic costume jewelry.

It seems that a new breed of writer has evolved in recent years in response to the dynamics of television. This new breed is the outlaw journalist as epitomized by Hunter Thompson, Erica Jong, and among others, Tom Robbins.

Television has temporarily supplanted writing as a popular medium because it promises greater immediacy and faithfulness in its conveyance of experience. But outlaw journalism is the literary counterpunch — a poetic experience, writing that exists not as description but as thing — a sculpture of meaning and sound — the story (where you are going) never outstrides the style (how you get there).

Outlaw journalism does not try to give you the moon or describe the moon to you — the prose is an end in itself. The words do not convey experience but become an experience. The author relates to his story as external and only partially under his control — particularly Thompson and Vonnegut.

Nonsense, you say? Well, nuts to you. And nuts to me, too, because outlaw journalism is not our prime concern, which is — how to make love stay.

Bernard Mickey Wrangle is the Woodpecker, an anarchistic bomber who is perhaps the one true romantic left in the last quarter of the twentieth century. His lover is Princess Leigh-Cheri of the defunct Furstenberg-Barcalona empire. Her dream is to change the world during the Geo-Therapy Care Fest in Lahaina, Hawaii. Bernard's plan is to blow the whole coffee klatch into the clouds. The only hope for a happy resolution of this mess is that perhaps love will prevail. But for love to prevail we must somehow make love stay. That, unfortunately, is contrary to all outlaw instincts.

Love is an outlaw and unless you collect broken hearts as a hobby then only outlaws need apply. It isn't security that gives love its reputation — it's mystery. There's no plot, no plan, to love. Because in the story of the frog prince everyone knows they live happily ever after but what happens to the golden ball? (Erica Jong's Z.F.) Where does the mystery go when you succeed in making love stay?

Somewhere between the pyramids on the Camel cigarette pack and the 40 watt glow of the full moon lies the answer. So pick up Still Life With Woodpecker and start having a happy childhood — it's never too late.

Trial and error through experimentation form the backbone of today's music industry.

The Liverpool-based band Echo and the Bunnymen is just the fuel needed to keep the fire burning bright. Their music has been critically acclaimed as grossly avant-garde and the immortal skeptics have naturally turned up their noses. Although the roots of the Bunnymen's new sound are anchored deeply into the new wave approach, past and present, this group has taken the infant style into adulthood.

Ian McCulloch, on lead vocals and rhythm guitar, formed the Bunnymen in October 1978. Will Sergeant, the lead guitarist, was the second member to join and he began writing songs with McCulloch in late October. The two members got together with Les Pattison on bass and after more than a dozen live performances, a single, and a shuffle with drummers, they settled with Pete DeFreitas as their new drummer.

Their first album Crocodiles came out in England on July fourth and begins with Going Up. The obsession with the steady drum beat that has been the hallmark of the new wave sound is vividly apparent here. This well put together track reverberates with a highly blended combination of studio effects, alarmingly progressive vocals and naturally distinct percussion. The lyrics lack the gross oversimplification that is found on so many of today's new wave songs.

Pride clearly expresses the growing pains naturally felt by this group and any other new artist. The internal struggles with the caterpillar becoming a butterfly can be the downfall of any new performer, but the tensions felt from without are sometimes much more unbearable. "Daddy says/Brother says/Make us proud of you/Do something we can't do."

Side two begins with Rescue and once again it shows the typical confusion and anxiety that comes with the release of a band's first album. The lyrics denote this tension, however unintentional. "If I said I lost my way/Would you sympathize/Could you sympathize/I'm jumbled up/Maybe I'm losing my touch."

Viller's Terrace and most of the other songs on this album keep in line with the original thoughts that spawned the new wave movement in England. They show the social unhappiness, the youth realizing their lack of direction, their inability to cope with themselves and the painful thoughts of

Mondays, Lanky's Serves Up Music

By SHARON WINTERS

The small, professionally embellished stage belied the quiet frenzy of opening night apparent in the audience, in the musicians. Patrons stopped at the doorway of the room waiting to be seated in the already crowded setting.

After discovering the correct table, the audience member ordered drinks or snacks while waving to long-unseen friends. Gasps of recognition, giggles of old memories and kisses or handshakes from old friends made the evening appear as a sort of reunion.

At 9:15 p.m., the diners were beckoned from their meals. The equipped stage and performers joined forces under the spotlights to provide an array of entertainment that lasted until past 1 a.m., allowing only one 15 minute break for audience and musicians.

This opening night was different from most in many respects. The hall wasn't in the city; the "hall" was really a restaurant and the evening was a Monday.

Lanky's, a suburban Paoli restaurant, has two rooms. One, upstairs, is a family diner; however, down a staircase is another large room that has a dimly lit, intimate atmosphere. Several fishtanks stretch across one section of the room abetting the tranquil feeling in the dining area.

Several months ago, the owners, Judy and Jerry Meltsner, added a piano to the downstairs room, now called The Bottom Line. They hired people to play quiet music as people dined.

A chance meeting of two area people broadened the scope of the restaurant's musical operations. Margaret Powell and Glenn Hutchinson, two area residents, came to Lanky's for lunch. They met and spoke with Jerry Meltsner. The conversation eventually turned to music; and, that same afternoon, Hutchinson played an impromtu concert utilizing the room's piano.

Within a short time, an arrangement was made to begin Monday evening concerts on a regular basis. The core group was to be Glenn; Christine Powell, of Berwyn; Dennis Grady and Pilar Rivera, both from the Media area and Jay Wiener of Philadelphia.

By the opening, the performers settled comfortably into an impromtu format that involved one or two players beginning a series of songs. As the set progressed they would call others to join them on stage for backing vocals, duets or musical accompaniment.

The musicians rotated so that each was able to play solo segments as well as joint sessions with the others in the "group."

Jay Wiener was the first to approach the stage on the January 12 opening. He played the piano and sang a series of soft, reflective songs that he had written.

Later, Powell and Hutchinson performed a duet on flute and piano respectively. Hutchinson then called Rivera to the stage for a rendition of his song Paradise Lost. Powell and Grady provided backing vocals for this number.

As the evening continued, Rivera played a set comprised of her own material. Her hard-driving style and piercing vocals were in contrast to some of the more melodic, introspective styles presented by others.

Grady, playing guitar, began his series with My Mother's Eyes, one of his own songs. He chatted amicably between songs, occasionally giving the stories

Honesty Gets 'Second Wind'

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Bill Russell has seen a lot of changes in the worlds inside and outside himself. He was born, black, into the subtle, and sometimes not-so-subtle, racial prejudice of the mid-twentieth century south, and earned an athletic scholarship to the University of San Francisco, a Jesuit college, when Harry Truman was still in the White House and Jim Crow still ran the courthouses. Since then, he has lectured on college campuses across America, visited with tribes in Liberia, Ethiopia and other parts of the African Ivory Coast, and has written his autobiography, Second Wind.

Bill Russell, in case you've forgotten or aren't old enough to remember, was center for those USF Dons when their record was 76-5 and they won 2 NCAA Championships. When Russell played center for the Boston Celtics for 13 years, in 12 of those years the Celtics reached the finals of the NBA playoffs. In 11 of those 12 years, the Celtics were champions, including eight in a row. No NBA team has won two in a row since.

But, Second Wind is not about a one-dimensional professional athlete; it is the story of an intelligent, angry, honest individual who happened to play pro ball, and who picked up along the way feelings about things other than games: racism, his Majesty the Ego, nonviolence, human relationships, greed, and self-respect. Second Wind flows like a conversation with Russell would, probably because almost all of [illegible] was dictated into a tape recorder in the drive from his house to the golf course and back. After reading it, you won't be able to say that you liked the book, but don't like the author, or vice versa, because Second Wind never flinches in its attempt at turning the form of autobiography into the image of the man through determined honesty.

The ease with which Second Wind reads allows its golden moments to shine brilliantly. Russell manages to combine commonplace language with highly symbolic situations. His father is referred to as "Mister Charlie," and his grandfather is simply respectfully, "The Old Man." The pages describing his cerebral relationship with a stripper from New York fairly glow with affection for her, and the sentence "we talked the way kittens play with a ball of yarn," evokes images of playful innocence that seem exceptionally striking when a great athlete applies them to himself.

Of course, Russell throws enough stories about the star professional athletics to satisfy the sports fans who were probably the first to buy his book. But, it is obvious that the NBA is only a part of Bill Russell's life, because it is only a part of Second Wind. Most importantly, Russell cares about honesty, and if you enjoy people who have no delusions about who they are or what they do, you will enjoy the story of Bill Russell's life as much as he has enjoyed living it.

ROCKpile Rattles and Rolls

By ROBERT BALLARD

Seconds of Pleasure is the first album by Rockpile, a band comprised of Nick Lowe, Dave Edmunds, Billy Bremner and Terry Williams. They are four solo artists who took time out for a couple tours and an album, just for fun.

Nick Lowe, perhaps the most popular of the foursome, has in recent years had his skill as a singer-songwriter be overshadowed by his success as Elvis Costello's producer. Not a bad alternative, but the commercial hype surrounding such Lowe proteges as Costello, the Pretenders and Joe Jackson has mysteriously eluded Nick, perhaps by design.

Regardless, Seconds of Pleasure features the Nick Lowe trademark: rhythmic, pulsating happy-rock, synthesising the nostalgia of '50s and '60s rock and roll with the progressive British beat of the '80s. The result is a better than average album, equally suitable for dancing and listening.

Teacher Teacher and Play That Fast Thing (One More Time) open and close side one in rousing fashion. Both tunes are dominated by hard hitting rhythm guitar and are consequently guaranteed to induce unrestrained humming and foot tapping. Heart is a fast paced, energetic Lowe masterpiece and could be the best song on the album.

Now and Always is patterned after the style of the Everly Brothers featuring the melodic guitars and harmonic vocals of Lowe and Edmunds. A complementary blend of electric and acoustic guitar prevails in this song as well as in others.

Billy Bremner, Nick Lowe, Dave Edmunds and Terry Williams of Rockpile.

In a lyrical context, Rockpile's poetry does not match that of McCartney and Lennon or Becker and Fagen; Nick Lowe was never one to bowl you over with heavy words. The songs are short and are sprinkled with sugary rhymes that any gum chewing high school freshman could relate to. But the happy go lucky vocals are only part of the show. The rhythmic intensity of Rockpile is undeniable. Bremner, Williams and Edmunds contribute flawless musicianship which make even the weakest cuts listenable. Inevitably, each song will catch your ear which is reason enough to buy the album.

TIME:
"This one has everything: sex, violence, comedy, thrills, tenderness. It's an anthology and apotheosis of American pop movies: FRANKENSTEIN, MURDERS IN THE RUE-MORGUE, 2001, ALIEN, LOVE STORY. It opens at fever pitch and then starts soaring. It moves with the loping energy of a crafty psychopath, or of film makers gripped with the potential of blowing the moviegoer's mind out through his eyes and ears. Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to ALTERED STATES."
—Richard Corliss, TIME

NEWSWEEK:

behind the tunes that he had written.

Powell played a set of songs that included Joni Mitchell's Urge for Going and Don McLean's Vincent. She also accompanied herself on guitar. A rendition of Childsong was prefaced by a story and dedication, of the song, to a lost friend.

The "core group" of players was joined by other friends during the night. Two members of Robert Hazard and the Heroes assaulted the stage performing an upbeat set. Robert Hazard played the guitar and Michael Pilla played guitar and banjo. They rocked through several of their own songs as well as Eric Andersen's Come to My Bedside.

The regular players returned to the stage with Wiener leading the way. Take Me in Your Arms and Hold Me, written by Jay, proved to be a strong selection. A singer named Fred joined Jay Wiener on stage and sang You're the One I Need to Jay's piano assistance. The song was followed by calls for an encore from the audience.

"Thanks, but that's all I know," Fred smiled as he left the stage and vanished into the audience.

The sets of the "core group" members continued until after 1 a.m.; after that others approached the stage nonstop.

The evening was positively overwhelming. The music never really subsided. Further, the players had a knack for making the material lively and poignant, a quality that is difficult to convey to an audience that has never heard most of the songs before.

The opening of Lanky's Bottom Line for Monday night music was a tiring marathon session of virtually nonstop melodic strains. The evening and the entertainment were all beautiful. It can truthfully be said that a good time was had by all. The audience got much more than they paid for; the musicians got a stage to display their talents and the owners of the restaurant saw their idea come to life.

Long day brightens holiday

Long named MVP of Blue-Gray Game

By BOB MONAHAN
(Reprinted courtesy of THE BOSTON GLOBE)

Villanova defensive tackle Howie Long was responsible for plenty of tears Christmas afternoon. But they were tears of joy, and most of them were shed in Charlestown and Milford.

Long was named Most Valuable Player in the Blue-Gray game after the Northerners beat the Southerners, 24-23, in an upset in Montgomery, Ala.

The 6-foot-6, 260-pounder played a solid game throughout and came up with the key play in the third quarter. The big guy blocked a Rebel punt that was recovered by Colorado's Steve Doolittle on the Gray 1-yard line. On the first play from scrimmage, Indiana's Lonnie Johnson scored to make it 24-17, which turned out to be the winning touchdown for a Blue squad coached by Harvard's Joe Restic.

Harvard quarterback Brian Buckley, who completed 9 of 16 passes for 131 yards and one touchdown, was named the offensive MVP.

Long, who was introduced to the nation via national television, said among other things, "I love you, Ma." He was making reference to his grandmother, "Ma" Mullan, who lives in Charlestown.

Mrs. Mullan said, "Howie called me right after the game. I was so glad for him. Yes, I cried when he was named MVP and so did my son Mike and relatives and friends who watched the game with us. Howie is a good boy, and we were all so glad for him."

Most of the tears of joy in Milford were shed by Dick and Ruth Anne Corbin. Dick coached Howie at Milford High, where he was head football coach and athletic director before he joined the Harvard staff under Restic, and Ruth Anne was Howie's tutor for three years. They felt as if they were part of the scene. They were.

Long said, "That was the biggest thrill of my life. The trophy they gave me was as tall as I am. I'm very happy, and I have many people to be thankful for in both Charlestown and Milford. I had plenty of help from some great people while in high school."

Mrs. Mullan explained how Long, who is from Charlestown, happened to wind up at Milford High. "Howie was a big boy in grammar school. He was shy and hated trouble. He never was a bother. When that busing rule came in, it upset him. He tried to go to Charlestown High School, but every day he went there the antibusing parents and older kids were yelling, 'Don't go in . . . don't go in.' He didn't because he didn't want to get in any kind of trouble."

Uncle Mike explained, "It wasn't a case of Howie being afraid. He was a pretty good fighter and a fine overall athlete. The entire situation upset him so much that my brother Bill agreed to take him into his home in Milford. It was the right thing to do.

"There's no way he was a coward because he could take care of himself. Like I said, he was a good fighter and, two years ago, he won the Eastern Collegiate Boxing Assn. Northeast regional heavyweight title. When he went in the ring for the finals, his opponent took one look at him and defaulted. So Howie's leaving Charlestown wasn't a case of being afraid. He just didn't have any taste for the violence that was going on at Charlestown High."

Corbin said, "I was amazed when Howie came to Milford. He was 13 years old and was a 6-1, 200-pounder. He worked hard to get good grades and my wife was a big help to him. He earned All-Scholastic honors in the Worcester area as a junior. He was always a good person and athlete. Yes, I have to admit that Ruth Anne and I filled up when we saw the announcement that he was the MVP.

"It was extra perfect for me because Joe (Restic) was the winning coach; our (Harvard) tackle Mike Durgin played a strong game; Brian was super and so was Boston College's Mike Mayock. The entire thing was just great."

Mrs. Mullan said, "Mr. Corbin was extra nice to Howie. Many times he drove him to a neighboring town for summer school classes because Milford didn't have them. And that Ruth Anne is a darling person. She not only helped Howie, but she also cared about him, which is so important."

In Long's junior year at Milford he was a key to his team's winning the Western Mass. Super Bowl title. Milford beat Pittsfield, 42-14.

In his senior year he broke a leg in the second game of the season against Franklin and wasn't around for college scouts to get a line on him.

Howie, a very humble person who was named Villanova's Most Valuable Player a few weeks back, said, "I thought about trying to go to Boston College, but I felt I wasn't good enough for the schedule they play. I went to Villanova and I was happy."

Pucksters Gain Revenge

By JIM FEMIA

Villanova Ice Hockey coach Skip Probst had three goals during his pre-season outlook. "First and most importantly without a doubt is to win the championship and bring home the Hannigan Cup. Secondly is to finish in first place in the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference and thirdly is to gain revenge when we play Penn State. Although they are no longer in our league it will be a big win for us. After the defeat in the finals last year, I will always have a strong desire to beat them."

As of this weekend, Probst has momentarily captured two out of his three wishes. Along with a first place tie with the University of Delaware, the Icecats beat Penn State last Sunday in a tough fought, hard earned 6-5 victory.

"It was a very big win for us. You can see the difference in team attitude in practice. After a big win like this, everyone seems to become a closer unit," Probst added.

Villanova and Penn State entered the game with almost identical records of 8-3 and 9-3-1 respectively. In the past two seasons the series between the two teams in Penn State's favor, winning five of the last nine matches.

The game was hard-hitting and close-checking from the opening face-off. The teams exchanged goals throughout the first period with Jim Ragold giving the Cats a momentary 1-0 lead. Penn State evened the score one minute later and by the periods end, held a 4-3 lead.

Probst was optimistic in the lockerroom however, after period one telling his players to concentrate on defense and protect the goaltender. "I saw many good signs in the opening period," according to Probst, "we forechecked very well and our passing was crisp, but I had to tell the players to forget about offense, concentrate on defense and the goals eventually will come."

The Icecats took their coaches advice and proceeded to shut Penn State out in the second period. The only second period score came mid-way through the period with Bill Quinlan tucking home his own rebound to give the Cats a 4-4 tie. It was now a 20 minute game. Twenty minutes remaining and the score deadlocked at 4-4.

Period three was played at a tremendous pace. Fans might have thought they were sitting in the Spectrum watching the Flyers and Bruins in the 1974 Stanley Cup finals. Five minutes into the period the Cats had a golden opportunity with a five on three power-play advantage. Defenseman Jim Femia gave the Cats the lead once again with a power-play goal but the pesky Lions clawed back to tie the game two minutes later. Then with seven minutes left to play Femia scored his third goal of the game through a maze of players to give the Icecats a 6-5 lead. By now the Cats had learned their lesson and stiffened up for the final seven minutes to cling on to their one goal victory.

"What a great game," according to coach Probst, "probably the best of the season. Hockey is a strange game. Femia, who is not known for his scoring, comes up with a game like this. Our next big game probably some other unexpected source will come up with a game like this. It is what makes champions champions."

Villanova travels to play the University of Delaware tonight and takes on Drexel Sunday afternoon at 12:00 at the Skatium. The next four games will all be league games with Villanova traveling to Delaware again next Friday night.

Swimmers Touched Out

By STEPHEN FALLON

Last Saturday, the Villanova Men's Swim Team saw their record drop to 3-2 in what Head Coach Ed Geisz termed, "the closest meet I've ever experienced." The LaSalle Pioneers, one of the finest teams in the east, edged the Wildcats 61-52. The score was tied on three separate occasions and the outcome remained undecided until the 12th of 13 events.

Villanova again received fine performances from senior co-captains, Tod Russell and Bob Baltera. Russell continued to display his ability which enabled him to qualify for the NCAA Championships in March. Russell remained undefeated through five meets in both the 50 yd. freestyle and the 100 yd. freestyle. Baltera is also undefeated in his forte, the 200 yd. freestyle. Saturday he edged teammate and brother, Bruce Baltera to keep his unblemished record intact. Both Bob and Tod swim on the 400 yd. freestyle relay team along with Bruce and Bob Ackerman. The relay team won Saturday, as did highly touted diver, Paul Clark to account for the only other first place finishes for the aquatic Cats.

Russell and Baltera lead a team of swimmers who, according to Coach Geisz, "work as hard as anyone and really get up for the meets." The goals for the team are to have a winning season and to prepare for the Big East Championships to be held in February at the University of Connecticut.

In the immediate future the swimmers hope to bounce back in a meet today at St. John's, which will be televised in the Jamaica, N.Y. area. Then Saturday afternoon at 2:00 the Wildcats will entertain the Quakers of Penn and in the words of the amiable Coach Geisz, "that should be a real ding-dong meet."

Ewing Changes Recruiting

By PATRICK FLYNN

There's been a new twist added to this season's college basketball recruiting campaign. And however it works out, it's been a fresh change and a welcome addition to a system that has almost gotten out of control.

Pat Ewing, New England's school boy sensation, is the principle figure in the logical, straightforward selection process which has narrowed a countless list of interested institutions down to a mere six, including Villanova. In short, the interested coaches went through an application process, complete with interviews, worked out by Ewing's family and high school coach. Academics were apparently an integral part of the process. It's a process which defends the player, and his family, from the annoying tedium of phone call after phone call from prospective recruiters. It makes sure all dealings are above-board and honest. In effect, it is keeping the Pat Ewing Show from being just another episode in the meat market carnival that is basketball recruiting. You'd think it would be applauded by basketball insiders all over the country. But it isn't.

NBC's Al McGuire, former head roundball coach at Marquette and currently the heir-apparent to Howard Cosell's throne of televised arrogance, has a different opinion. Following a taped interview with Ewing and his coach at halftime, McGuire, now live and 1500 miles away from the helpless "blue-chippah" called the system "degrading" to the coaches and claimed that he would have sent Ewing "some sort of letter, maybe with coffee rings on it" had he received correspondence at the start of the process. Degrading? Then method is degrading. Then equity is degrading. Then, in the Gospel according to Al, honesty is degrading.

Now, I wouldn't buy a used car from Al McGuire. Nor would I place my life in his hands if I were in Pat Ewing's position. He gives the impression of a shyster. Anyway, apparently he would have been scared away by such an up-front system. Congratulations, Pat Ewing. The system did its job.

The salesmen and the pests were shot down by the Ewing Method. What was left were the sincerely interested gentlemen who cared about Pat Ewing, the person, and not just Pat Ewing, the thoroughbred.

As for coffee-stained replies, that statement by McGuire proved another point. The seventeen-year-old who, along with his coach, treated the NBC announcer-turned hatchet-man with so much respect and frankness under nationally televised pressure showed a good deal of maturity in that situation. If only McGuire would grow up that much.

So whatever happens from here on in, whether the Boston Skyscraper chooses Georgetown as the insiders say or one of the others, whether he goes on later to professional fame or sets himself up in the mainstream of society after graduation, one thing is for sure. The final score in this year's recruiting contest reads: Pat Ewing 1, Meat Market 0.

Wildcats Humble Huskies

Big East Tightens Up

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova Wildcats refused to be intimidated by Big East powerhouse UConn, posting a 63-59 win Wednesday night at the Palestra. Connecticut's scoring spree in the opening minutes gave the fans a scare but the Wildcat's rebound was fast and furious and the Huskies never led again.

Coach Massimino, unusually calm and collected, called the game "outstanding ... a tremendous effort, a big win." The victory over Connecticut places Villanova 2nd in the Big East Conference.

Control was the key to the game and whenever the Wildcats wanted it, they had it. Coach Massimino said, "We tried to control the tempo." UConn Coach Perno said the Wildcats "came up with every loose ball and every key play."

Mike Mulquin, an able replacement for the injured Bradley, is gaining confidence on the boards and proved it last night in his best game to date. Mulquin, leading the Wildcats with 11 rebounds, said, "We knew exactly what we wanted to do and we executed it; the key is to man the backboards."

Massimino spoke proudly of sophomore guard Stuart Granger; "We asked Stuart to control the game — he played outstanding."

Early in the game the Wildcats were missing high percentage shots. Not until 16:48 did Villanova first score on a 15 foot jumper by Granger from the foul line.

The defensive effort prompted Massimino to say "The defense couldn't have been better." The half court trap the Wildcats applied nine times was the perfect snare for the Huskies as they only broke it for one score.

Sienkiewicz shot well from the outside and led the team in scoring with 16 points. Villanova's field goal percentage was 45.6 as compared to the Huskies' 40.0%.

The only area in which UConn appeared to have an edge was from the foul line. The Huskies shot 11 for 12 while the Wildcats managed to complete only 11 of 16. UConn's Corny Thompson only sank three of 11 from the field but went 100% on his foul shooting with four points.

Ranked 20th nationally, the Huskies were leading the Big East going into this game but dropped to third at the hands of an aggressive and determined Villanova team. UConn Coach Perno complemented the Wildcats, saying, "they deserved to win it."

PHILADELPHIA TRACK CLASSIC

Villanovans past and present, world class runners and even a football star comprise the top quality competition at the Philadelphia Track Classic. The meet will be held tonight at the Spectrum and tickets may be purchased at the door. Several talented Villanova athletes will be contending for top places and tonight is the only chance for Villanovans to see their classmates during the indoor season.

Guard Tom Sienkiewicz puts up a shot in the Connecticut game.

Cats Even Record in Big Five

By BOB CONWAY

In most sporting contests there are signs of which team will win and which team will lose long before the final buzzer sounds. Such was the case in Villanova's impressive 68-55 triumph over Big Five rival Pennsylvania before a frenzied crowd at the Palestra Saturday night.

The twist of fate which propelled the Cats to an almost perfect second half came at the end of the first half. Stu Granger, who played his best game yet at the Palestra, took a low percentage shot from the corner which caromed off the basketboard with four seconds remaining. The ball then went through a maze of players and wound up in Happy Dobbs hands who wasted no time in drilling home his only basket of the night from 18 feet out. Dobbs' basket gave Villanova momentum, and a 30-29 half-time lead. Penn would never get closer.

The reason Penn never got closer is that the Cats shot a remarkable 15-17 from the floor in the final 20 minutes, while Penn could only manage hitting 12 of 26 field goal attempts in that span.

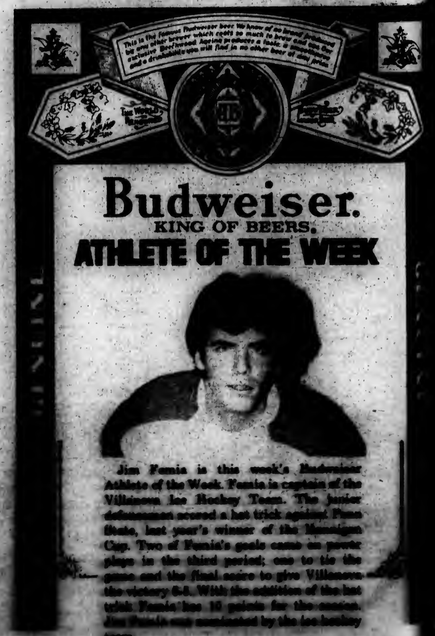
When objecting to an inadvertently blown whistle Coach Rollie Massamino was told by the Penn cheering section "Sit down, Rollie." Massamino was much more congenial, but not nearly as talkative after the game.

Massimino said, "I was very pleased with the way we played tonight." He also said, "I thought it was the best team defense we have played all year. We mixed our defenses extremely well." Penn guard Ken Hall can attest to that. He was able to connect on only two of his eleven shots.

Penn Coach Bob Weinhauer said of the Cats fine second half shooting, "It is easy to shoot like that giving up the kind of lay-ups we did." The lay-ups Weinhauer refered to was due to the fine play of Stu Granger. He had 15 points and eight assists. Not one of the Quaker guards could stop Granger from penetrating, and when Granger is able to penetrate this enables John Pinone and Mike Mulquin to get high percentage shots.

Pinone, who was the only player to play the entire game, was the high scorer and rebounder with 16 and seven respectively. Mulquin, who is now starting for the injured Alex Bradley, had 15 points (7-9 from the floor) and six rebounds.

Willie Oliphant was the high scorer for Penn with 10 points.



Jim Fenia is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Fenia is captain of the Villanova Ice Hockey Team. The junior defenseman scored a hat trick against Penn State, last year's winner of the Mensetigan Cup. Two of Fenia's goals came on power plays in the third period; one to tie the game and the final score to give Villanova the victory 6-5. With the addition of the hat trick Fenia has 16 points for the season. Jim Fenia was nominated by the ice hockey team.

Cats Cage Tigers

By KERRY LYNCH

Villanova's Basketball schedule of the recent past resembled a nightmarish line up of finals during exam week. After finals comes exhaustion and before it seems possible another semester begins. The Wildcats appeared to be exhausted in the opening minutes of their game against Towson State University but rallied, as if for a new semester, to win 84-64.

The Towson Tigers gained an early four point lead but Villanova soon erased the score at 10 and Towson called a time out at 10:09.

The Wildcats must have eaten their Wheaties while the Tigers were plotting strategy. They came back on the court to take control of the game and led by ten at the half.

Tom Sienkiewicz came out of a shooting slump to score 17 points; eight of nine from the field and one of two from the foul line. Frank Dobbs, freshman guard, had eleven points for his first double digit game.

The Tigers resorted to a full court press with 9:57 remaining. Even so the Wildcat offense could not be contained and Towson was forced to abandon their press.

Coach Massimino thought the Wildcat defense played well against Towson, saying, "our traps — that was probably the key." Towson shot a mere 40.6 percent from the field.

The Wildcat-Tiger match-up was probably the perfect midseason remedy. The Wildcats needed the momentum of a big win to build confidence for the stiff Big East competition that still confronts them.

Burglary Occurs in Registrar's Office

By ANNE SUYDAM

The Registrar's Office, located on the second floor of Tolentine, was broken into on Sunday, January 25.

Captain Joseph Cunnane, of Villanova's security, reported that there was an outside window broken on the side of Tolentine facing Fedigan dorm. A hallway door's window pane was also broken. A ladder was found leaning against the outside wall under the broken window.

About 8 p.m., a security guard was walking down the corridor when he noticed the broken window and he felt a breeze coming through the space. At this time, no one was in the office.

Mr. Smith, of the Registrar's Office, was called the same evening and went to the office around 11 p.m. He noticed that all the files were secure and that nothing big seemed to be missing. Monday morning, the office was checked thoroughly and only some rubber stamps and envelopes were missing.

Cunnane felt that the robbers did not have enough time to take anything of great importance, such as typewriters or furniture. The doors were not opened because they all have double locks.

Cunnane also felt that maybe the break-in was some type of "pledging prank" because he could not think of any reason to break into that particular office.

Men on all three floors of Fedigan dorm were asked if they had seen or heard anything, but nothing was reported.

Ceremony Honors Elliott, Paige

By DAVE COSKEY

Camden Courier Post Sports ditor Bob Kenny didn't get to ish his introduction Monday at annual Philadelphia Sports riters Dinner. Kenny tried to everything Villanova Track h Jumbo Elliott had accplished in his 50 years on the Line. The overflowing crowd sportswriters and enthusiasts wouldn't let him, as they rose to their feet while Kenny fumbled for words.

"Often in a city this big with as many winners as we have now the accomplishments of the Wildcats are often overlooked. However, for a while they were our only winners and still are our most consistent," Kenny countered. "But this one man is responsible for more championships than any two teams combined," he added.

Elliott was able to accomplish something Monday evening that even the World Championship Phillies could not. The team that brought this city to its knees in October could only muster half the ovation Elliott received.

Elliott was short and to the point as he thanked the writers for the honor saying, "I am pleased to contribute to a City of Winners and I love Philadelphia and the Main Line."

Probably the greatest accomplishment is even to be recognized in a city that welcomes major track and field competition and it s athletes with the same warmth they offer a family with the plague. They stay away. Yet anova University will go be- he Radnor Township Hear- oard within the next two to reapply for a zoning from the Township for the Estates property pur- three years ago.

University to Reapply for Zoning Permit

1978, after almost 15 years of in, off-again meetings and negotiations, Villanova acquired 37 acres of the estate that included five buildings for $750,000. Also included in that transaction was the University's right of first refusal on Dr. Morris' house and the acreage that goes with it.

Father John McKenzie, Villanova's director of planning, is fairly confident that the township will grant the institutional permits and variances. "A petition has been drawn up that spells out to a great extent what the University will do with the land in question." In 1978, Villanova was turned down by the zoning board.

"Three years ago the plans were incomplete," commented McKenzie. "We presented our ideas as part of the West Campus Development Plan before we had even purchased the estates. This led to a lot of questions by the zoning board."

The documented plan will be presented to Villanova's Board of Trustees. The approved plan will then be submitted to the zoning board. This body will then distribute the plan to the various township committees who will add questions and comments to the document before returning it to the zoning board who will render a decision within 90 days.

Originally, at the time the estates were purchased, plans for student housing and athletic fields

Concert Announced

The Villanova Union has announced that James Taylor will appear at Villanova on February 1 at 8 p.m.

Tickets for the show, entitled "An Evening with James Taylor," go on sale Saturday morning at 9 a.m. at the ticket office in the Connelly Center.

Tickets for the concert are $10 for public admission and $8.50 for students.

This is James Taylor's first college tour since 1976," said Mike Logue, the Union's co-ordinator for major events.

"This will be Taylor's first stop on the tour," continued Logue. "The concert just came up out of the blue. The day it was announced I got calls from eight or nine agents, and we agreed on the date."

Summer Program in Italy

A slide presentation and informal reception for the Villanova-Rosemont Summer Program in Italy will be featured in the Art Gallery in Connelly Center on Wed., Feb. 4, at 3:00. The exhibition of artwork produced by last year's students in Italy will run all of next week. Anyone wanting information on the Italy travel-study trip is invited to stop in at the gallery.

The June trip, which attracts students and adults from many parts of the east coast, is now in its tenth year. Headquartered in Siena, an almost perfectly preserved medieval town, the program offers 6 credits in History, Art History, Studio Art, Italian Language or Literature. On weekends numerous side-trips are conducted to towns such as Florence, Pisa, Venice, etc. Information and brochures are available by calling 645-4610.

Debate Finds Abscam "Illegal"

By DREW MERRICK

The legality and desirability of the Abscam operation was the topic of a debate sponsored by the Villanova Political Union on Monday, January 26, at 7 p.m. in Dougherty Hall.

The resolution: "This house believes that the whole Abscam operation was illegal and undesirable" was accepted by a vote of 15 to 2. There were six abstentions.

Mr. John J. Duffy, defendant Louis Johanson's attorney, was the guest speaker. "One must realize the role Mel Weinberg played in the Abscam operation to understand it completely," stresses Duffy.

"The initial business proposition which gave birth to Abscam was legal," declared Duffy. "Myers and Johanson were told by the undercover agents that the Philadelphia port was to be given $400,000,000, thousands of jobs were to be created, and that they (the defendants) didn't have to do a thing, for legislation was already passed to get the sheik into the country. The money was offered as a gift. Myers and Johanson weren't selling their office when they took the money," continued Duffy.

"The F.B.I. created a crime where none existed before. We don't know what went on before or after the taped session, but what did go on is so crucial. I believe that the F.B.I. entrapped the defendants into a situation that otherwise would not have occurred."

Owen Evans, chairman of the liberal party, voted for the resolution because he believes that the methods used to convict the Abscam defendants were unethical and tacky, though he is especially disgusted with Ozzie Myers. "Here's a guy who is supposed to be moralistic and a leader. Myers appears on the screen by gulping down a glass of scotch, and proceeds to say that money talks and B.S. walks." The representatives of both the Conservative and Moderate parties both agreed with the resolution, but like Evans they don't believe that the defendants are completely innocent. "The fact is that these men who are representing the taxpayers of Philadelphia were caught lining their pockets with money," asserted Evans.

C&F Committee Plans Future M.B.A. Program

By SHARON WINTERS

A committee of professors from the College of Commerce and Finance is working on a master of business program.

The program is "not close to being finalized," said Dr. Cleary, vice-president of academic affairs.

Dr. James Cleary Jeff Page Photo

"We are still in the preparatory stage. The department has sent in a preliminary proposal," he said.

A projected date for the new program would be September, 1982 at the earliest, according to Cleary.

The problem for Villanova is that it is an accredited institution, said Cleary. "Our requirements are much higher," he added.

Dr. Cleary anticipates two major problems that must be overcome for the program to be viable. One problem concerns the faculty requirements; they must have doctorate degrees in business. "They (holders of business doctorates) are as scarce as hens' teeth," he said.

The squeeze for faculty members with doctorate degrees should last about four to five years, unless something breaks in the next two years, according to Cleary. All schools are in competition with business for doctorate graduates, he said.

The faculty in a masters program must have a course load of no greater than nine hours per semester, cited Cleary. Usually, the faculty members are expected to carry 12 credits in the undergraduate level.

Another consideration involves office space, according to Cleary. The American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) requires that certain office size and secretarial support requirements be met, said Cleary.

The problems of obtaining faculty for the program and providing space for them to work are the major factors that must be solved, Cleary feels.

Other issues that must be dealt with prior to the institution of a masters program in business are: financial needs; program requirements and courses.

"We are considering it (the masters program). It is the only fair thing to say," commented Cleary.

I don't want to raise anyone's hopes; but, it is possible for the University to have a masters program in the future," Cleary said.

V.U. Helps Radnor Prosper

By ANNE SUYDAM

A report was prepared during the summer of 1980 concerning the benefits Radnor Township derives from the existence of Villanova University.

The report was researched and provided by Dr. James Clarke, of the economics department. Clarke has had consulting experience and was the best equipped to do the report. It took six weeks.

The report was done to "attempt to estimate the University's impact on the Township," and, said Clarke, to "try to establish a better rapport" with the community. The analysis covered both the economic and non-economic areas, but this article will only relate to the economic factors.

There are four basic sources of expenditures from Villanova University: local expenditures by the University, faculty and staff, students and then visitors to the University.

In the fiscal year 1979-1980, $88,446 was purchased in goods and services from Radnor Township businesses by Villanova. This figure does not include restaurant costs and some catering services.

The University employed 1,402 full-time people in 1979-1980. Of these, 270 lived in Radnor Township and 61 of the 270 rented their residencies. Approximately $4,296 was paid by the 61 renters, for rent, in one year. The total value for rent by faculty and staff was $262,056. The sum of $1,476,162 was spent by these residents on non-housing items. Non-housing items include, food, fuel, utilities, apparel, transportation and medical care.

During the academic year of 1979-1980, 548 students rented residencies in Radnor Township. The report states, "The University's projection for room and board is $2,400." This sum was broken down to $1,100 for room and $1,300 for board.

The approximate sum of $602,800 was paid by students for local rental housing. "The combined total of Villanova University student spending within Radnor Township for the academic year 1979-1980 is estimated to be $2,643,720," the report states. This includes all students.

The last category of expenditures was by Villanova's visitors. The number of visitors was divided into five categories: 8,000 for Homecoming (average stay was 1-1/2 days), 9,000 for Parents' Weekend (average stay was 2 days), 6,000 for other football weekends (for an average of 1-1/2 days), for an average stay of 2-1/2 days, 5,000 visited for the Alumni Reunion and 7,000 stayed for about 2 days for graduation.

Villanova Professor Discusses Hostage Issue

By MARGE BATTISTELLI

After 444 days, the former American hostages in Iran, now termed "returnees" have been released and have arrived in the U.S.

In a recent interview, Dr. Hafeez Malik, of the political science department and also the Americans for Pakistani Studies, shared his feelings and opinions about the situation.

Dr. Malik sees no special meaning in the fact that the hostages were not released until after President Reagan's inauguration. He does not feel that the Iranians were afraid of Reagan, nor that they were out to discredit Carter. He does feel though that it was poor timing on the part of the Iranians and that they should have completed the negotiations with former President Carter before the November elections. Making sure all details were worked out and ironing together the disputed things were the causes of the delay.

Concerning the agreement made with Iran in return for the release of the hostages, Dr. Malik says that President Reagan should honor it for various reasons. One deals with Algeria. The guarantee of the deal was made by Algeria, a country which played a positive role in the negotiations. By refusing to uphold its end of the deal, the U.S. would put Algeria in a compromising position resulting in poor U.S. relations, not only with Iran, but also with Algeria. Also, the U.S. is known for its pride and could hardly criticize Iran or any other country for not living up to its word and then turn around and do exactly the same thing. The U.S. could do this, but not without jeopardizing its reputation.

Dr. Hafeez Malik Jeff Page Photo

Asked about the possibility of American retaliations, Dr. Malik responded that the United States must be cautious in its further dealings with Iran. "We must look at Iran not only as a country which has done something outrageous, but also as occupying a very important strategic position. Any policy which is governed by the emotions which prevail in America today will be counterproductive and aid in the disintegration of Iran. This disintegration will be beneficial to only one country — the Soviet Union."

were bandied about. However, some of those ideas have been re-evaluated, altered and finalized.

"Any use of the present housing there would not alleviate the space problems at the moment," analyzed McKenzie. "Those houses weren't designed as dormitories. There is no tie-in to local sewers. However, they can serve for general academic purposes. For example, Farrell Hall can be used for administrative purposes. The idea is to free-up some space on main campus and use it for student use."

According to Father John Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for student life, plans for the estates, "haven't changed that much."

"The basic plan was for intramural playoff fields and a small amount of housing. When a property is available, it should be bought, whether for value or actual use." A seven-acre intramural field is in the plan.

McKenzie commented, "We are very fortunate to buy the Morris Estates when we did. They have always treated us fairly."

V.U. Security Evaluated

By KATHY SCANLON

A committee has recently been formed on the Villanova campus to evaluate and improve the present security system in the residence halls. The Board of Trustees of this committee, which is called the Association of Student Life, consists of Father John Deegan, two students and two faculty members.

The committee members have been researching various systems to decide which they feel will be most effective. One being looked at is the CRT unit. The CRT provides each resident with an electrically sensitive card, coded according to the dorm in which he lives. Electrical equipment in the dorm can detect the specific code and, therefore, admit only the residents of that dorm.

Honeywell Corporation will send a representative to present this system to the committee. The University of Delaware has already installed the CRT unit. A trip will be made to see how it is working there.

In addition to the CRT unit, phones in the individual rooms or receptionists at the main doorways are being considered. If the rooms had phones, then visitors would just call up and be let in by the resident. Or the receptionist could also let those people in who did not have keys to the doors.

Due to its large number of entrances, Sheehan will most probably be used to test the effectiveness of whatever system is decided on. "If the system works for Sheehan, chances are it will work anywhere," said Deegan. "Then we can move it on to the other dorms."

These plans, however, are not for the present. The initial problem is the cost. The budget does not allow for the installation of an extensive security system.

Deegan sees the need for the system because now "the dorms are wide open and almost anyone can just walk in."

"Although the University is not located in a city, we are on the Main Line, which is fairly busy. We have been lucky so far, but there have been enough scares so that precautions should be taken."

Award Presented

Elliott has been able to gain national and world reconition.

Villanova took double honors Monday as 1980 graduate Don Paige was named the Amateur Athlete of the year for the second year in a row. Paige is the first athlete to accomplish that feat in the history of the award.

Paige as a senior last year had a banner year culminated when he was named number one in the world in the 1500m, an honor usually reserved for the olympic gold medalist in an olympic year. In this case Paige topped everyone including Britain's gold medalist Sebastin Coe. In accepting his award Paige shared his recent decision to make Philadelphia or more exactly, the Main Line, his home.

"I made a list of everywhere I might want to live, California, Florida, my home which is Syracuse and then I said, how could I ever leave the Main Line Area? So last year I accepted this award as someone from Syracuse, someone from out of town. This year I accept it as a Philadelphian," Paige concluded.

Other awards included Mike Schmidt of The Phillies as the Professional Athlete of the Year.

NOTHING ELSE FEELS LIKE NAVY FLYING.

The sharp whine of jet engines covers the flight deck.

Throttles are at full power, and you're waiting for the signal to launch.

Now: The catapult fires. G forces slam you back into your seat. Suddenly, you're flying low and fast over the night sea.

Nothing else feels like Navy flying. Nothing. And as a pilot or flight officer you can be part of it.

The Navy puts you in full control of a multi-million-dollar super-sophisticated combination of jet aircraft and electronic wizardry.

In return, the Navy demands something of you: Leadership. As officers, right from the start, members of the Navy aviation team get decision-making authority, leadership responsibility, and management experience. Other careers can give you responsibility. But Navy gives it to you sooner.

Make your first leadership decision now. Send in the coupon. Nothing else feels like Navy flying.

NAVY OFFICERS GET RESPONSIBILITY FAST.

Deans' Offices to be Abolished

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The final phase of a five-year plan to reorganize student life at Villanova will be enacted next fall, getting rid of the offices of dean of men and dean of women, and replacing them with a dean of students and a director of resident living.

"We're trying to get a more streamlined operation," said Vice President for Student Life Father John Deegan, explaining the reorganization. Asked what part the current Acting Dean of Men; Tony Martin and Dean of Women, Rebecca Drury will have in the reorganization of their offices, Deegan said, "They could very well be working in the area or apply for the dean of students' job. It's a career decision for them."

"One reason that I was appointed acting dean of men was the planned phase-out of these offices," said Martin, but he noted, "To be honest, I haven't heard Father Deegan speak of it too often recently. It seems as if what I did know I read in the Villanovan.

According to Deegan, the functions of the new dean of students will be the same as those of dean of men and dean of women. "Who carries these functions out is the question," said Deegan.

Deegan feels the development of the new offices will lead to personnel and better use of resources and student services. "You don't need special advocates for men and for women — you need one for all students."

Mr. Christopher Janosik from James Madison University has already been appointed as director of resident living.

about the torture that allegedly occurred during the hostages captivity. Dr. Malik points out that only a limited number of returnees are mentioning torture. Only six individuals have complained of being physically tortured. He believes that this physical torture did go on, but that the majority of the torture was psychological. With Iran in a state of chaos and revolution, the hostages were always open to being put on trial and executed. Not knowing what would become of them was the cause of the mental anguish. Overall, he believes that the Americans were treated as well as could be expected. Dr. Malik feels that the adjustment for the Americans to a normal life will be long and difficult. "They are strong both morally and spiritually." He does say though that it would be a big boost if President Reagan would assure them that their jobs are not in jeopardy. The feeling of the American Public, says Dr. Malik, is one of anger and disgust. They can identify with the hostages and see them as heros because they suffered while serving their country.

Dr. Malik's overall view of the hostage situation is one that projects to the future; one that stresses caution. "In the next five to ten years, the area of the Persian Gulf and South-West Asia (Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran) will undergo serious changes. The Soviet Union is already in Afghanistan and will move further when the opportunity arises. The U.S. must be careful in handling these changes. They must show understanding for the political, cultural, social, and economic needs of this area. The U.S. must keep the Soviet Union out. They cannot afford to blow it."

ANNOUNCING TEACHER RECRUITMENT

The University II committee of the Villanova Union would like to invite all to share their special talents by teaching a U II course in the spring semester.

Pick up a course description form in the Union Office located on the main floor of the Connelly Center. The deadline for submitting a form is January 30, 1981.

We invite you also to participate in University II by taking courses also. Registration will be on February 18, 19 and 20, 1981. All classes will begin on February 23, 1981.

Take Your Degree Into A Real World Laboratory - With Vitro!

Not only are we working on complex Naval Weapons Systems that will revolutionize current state-of-the-art standards, we're offering opportunities for growth and professional recognition that put us way ahead of our competition. At Vitro, almost every project we take on represents a significant part of a major national issue. Depending on your interests, you could be involved in the systems engineering, integration, and analysis of the fleet shipboard combat system development, or the application of advanced computer technology in support of complex systems engineering programs. It's a career that has implications well beyond the academic.

As one of the nation's leading systems engineering firms, we can offer the new graduate a career package that includes tuition reimbursement, group insurance, paid vacations, retirement programs, a very good salary, and the opportunity to become involved immediately in significant long-term programs. You'll also enjoy being located "at the pulse," in suburban Maryland, near Washington, D.C., within easy reach of the many cultural advantages of the Nation's Capital.

Vitro positions require problem-solvers who have technical ability and engineering creativity. If you're about ready for a real world application of your classroom problem-solving skills, let's talk about tomorrow: yours and ours. We'll be on campus February 6; or contact Maureen Conrad, College Relations Coordinator, Toll Free at (800) 638-2901, ext. 2224. Check with your Placement Office this week for details and to preview a videotaped introduction to Vitro.

Why did Iran happen?

Bring All the Story to Light

Now that the horror is over, the outrage begins. The released hostages, able to talk freely for the first time in 14 months, are starting to recount their terror, their daily fear as the captives of a people who claimed to be treating them well.

The Iranians can no longer control the voices of the 52 Americans. The former hostages have used their refound freedom to tell the truth about their kidnappers. Far from being benevolent guards, the Iranians have been exposed as torturers.

The oppressed, as the Iranians claimed to have been under the shah, became the oppressors for 14 months. They were the brutal ones. These uncivil people beat and otherwise abused our hostages.

Tales of woe: isolation; mock executions; psychological torment; the list of Iranian brutalities will no doubt continue, be elaborated on, for months. And well the stories should. History would be remiss if the "Iranian Affair" was not told in full.

History should record all the episodes involved in this "dark period" of the United States. It should record the beginnings of this Iranian encounter. The fate of the hostages was sealed in their own country.

Early in 1979, the figure of Henry Kissinger loomed prominently in the affairs concerning the Mohammed Reza Pahlavi. Kissinger was approached by government officials to convince the shah not to seek a U.S. visa. The former secretary of state not only refused to do this but also consorted with others to alleviate what he felt was terrible treatment of the shah.

David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank and John McCloy, a New York lawyer, joined with Kissinger to help the deposed leader.

First, through Rockefeller's efforts, the shah as given temporary sanctuary in the Bahamas; then, Mexico was convinced, by the three influential men, to harbor the former Iranian leader. Kissinger, next, contacted various U.S. government authorities, including Cyrus Vance. The nature of these talks and their content have not been disclosed.

Meanwhile, the Iranian government warned America that they would view United States efforts to provide a haven for the shah as an "unfriendly act." The diplomatic warning was sent on April 23, 1979.

Iran issued warnings to the United States during a five-month period.

On Oct. 16, a Rockefeller aide informed the state department of the shah's physical condition. Also, Rockefeller sent a doctor to Mexico to examine the former Iranian leader. The state department was informed of the doctor's analysis of the shah's illness by the same source.

Then President James Earl Carter admitted the shah to the United States on "humanitarian grounds." Less than a month later, Nov. 4, the U.S. Embassy was seized by Iranian militants, a move that was not unexpected.

The series of events leads to a question which must be asked: Why did the United States, reversing its previous position, decide to help the shah when Iran forewarned, months in advance, that such an act would be dealt with harshly?

An effort must be made to seek an answer to the change in our government's feelings about the shah. Also, the roles of Kissinger, Rockefeller and McCloy must be detailed. The activities of a former secretary of state, Kissinger, in particular, are noteworthy in this international incident. He should be accountable for his contribution to the hostage crisis.

The implications of the actions of Kissinger, Rockefeller and McCloy and the affects of their acts on the decision of former President Carter are profound enough to require rigorous examination.

The deeds of the Iranians should not be allowed to overshadow the acts and motives of a few American citizens who appear to have exerted influence on the president precipitating the international disaster.

If the tales of Iranian tormentors are allowed to envelope the American people, then the ultimate outrage will take place. No one will ever know how 52 people came to be pawns.

The American people should insist that they hear all of the story: the acts of the Iranian militants as well as the roles of influential Americans. Both groups were integral parts in this unhappy episode in our history. Neither should escape scrutiny.

Sports Complaint

Dear Editor:

I have a great concern over lack of coverage in the Villanovan on women's athletics. For your information, I would like to share the following facts:

1. The women's field hockey team received a bid to the EAIAW regional championships as a route towards a berth at nationals.

2. Karen Hiznay, Tri-captain of the women's basketball team, scored her 1000th career point at the Notre Dame game on January 6, 1981. We easily beat Notre Dame. Karen is only the second woman in the history of Villanova to reach this mark. The women's basketball team is currently 14 and 3. This is the best win-loss record on campus for winter sports. The women's team is also the current Big 5 champion.

3. The women's basketball team beat St. Joseph's — traditionally Villanova's biggest rival — in a hotly contested game on January 22. Villanova is the only Big 5 school to have ever beaten St. Joseph's. There were approximately 500 Villanova fans at St. Joseph's.

4. The women's swimming team was third in the nation last year, and they are highly favored to win the national title this year.

Those on the Villanova campus who rely on the Philadelphia Inquirer, Daily News, Bulletin, Philadelphia Journal, the radio, or TV, for sports information, will be quite aware of the above facts, as all these events have been very highly covered. If, however, one reads the Villanovan for sports news, they will have little or no knowledge of the women's athletic program, and their successes, as the Villanovan for some reason, has neglected to report on women's sports. I find it extremely difficult to understand why our own school paper gives less coverage to our teams than the "outside" press.

Can there be any reason for this? What can be done to change this situation? Obviously, there is a great deal of interest in women's sports; hence the coverage in the Philadelphia news media. I am sure you will agree that it is long past due for the Villanovan to accord the same interest to its female athletes.

Sincerely,
Mary Anne Steenrod
Coordinator of Women's Athletics

P.S. — The term "Wildkittens" went out with bloomers and jumpers. The women are also referred to as the "Wildcats."

Social Life

Dear Editor:

After devoting a year and a half, along with a good sum of money to the so-called "Villanova experience" I felt compelled to address the ever present tension between the administration and the student body. It is a sad but true commentary that when a student is asked "How do you like Villanova" a typical reply is "The social life is definitely lacking." One must ask, why?

With all due respect to the administration it appears that a lack of school unity has been induced by administrative regulations. There seems to be an air of indifference towards the needs of the students. This indifference where student requests have been blatantly ignored is exemplified in both the scheduling of final exams and in the ever present alcohol controversy.

Any indignation for the scheduling of a final exam on December twenty-second is entirely justified. This imposition upon the student is a prime example of an administration inconsiderate of the personal lives of the students. One can only question why a schedule was not proposed with exams running from Friday the twelfth to Friday the nineteenth of December like that of past years.

The most consistent display of administrative indifference has been in the alcohol controversy. While the administration feels the necessity to impose these regulations, it is the manner in which these regulations are imposed which arouses such vehement opposition. While this University prides itself on being an upstanding "very competitive" college, it obviously considers it's students who have met these "very competitive" standards to be self serving irresponsible moral degenerates. I ask of the administration, if we as students are considered up to your standards, why do you hypocritically impose rules upon us like immature grammar school children? Of course, it is obvious that some regulations are necessary. I do not write in request of a drunken free-for-all but in petition of a re-evaluation of the present policies as the results have been obviously negative. The resultant affect of these regulations has been an induced lack of unity. For enjoyment students are now forced to go off campus or to other colleges where less stringent regulations are imposed. Here the negative effects are twofold. First it brings about an increased potential for drunken driving. Secondly it has caused the student body to break up into different groups which further hampers an already lacking school unity.

It must be concluded that a change is necessary. This is not written in a radical assault but in a constructive effort to enlighten a seemingly unwilling administration and thus bring about a much needed change. Only through a mediated and unified effort between students and administration alike will this change come about.

I take pride in being a student in this school and am among the dwindling group of students who defend it when the social life is criticized. However, I too have grown tired of only seeing people around campus on weekdays, and especially I have become tired of the administrations apathetic attitude toward our social advancement. Let's get together, both students and administrators and find a middle ground.

Sincerely,
John J. Pisono

Super Party

Dear Editor:

This is a letter of thanks and appreciation to all the people who worked so hard to make the Fedigan 3rd Floor Pre-Super Bowl Party the success it was. Most of all, I would like to thank Joe D'Alonzo, Scott Sommerfield and Mike Catalano for the fantastic job they did in getting the party off the ground and making it an enjoyable evening for everyone.

A special note of thanks goes to Bob Philburn, Jack Koerwer and Walt Hickey who, although they are not Fediganians, worked as hard and in the majority of cases harder than the Fedigan residents to make the party a success. In closing, I would like to thank Fr. Reilly, the stage crew and all the residents of Fedigan who helped out. It was greatly appreciated.

Thank you,
Bob Prisco

Lennon Comments

Dear Editor:

At the risk of "beating a dead horse," I wish to reply to Anne Healy's letter in the January 16 Villanovan. First, her statement that "senseless death is a sad but essential fact of life" is obviously incorrect. While crime is an increasingly, ever-present facet of society, it is hardly essential to human life. However, this inaccuracy is small in comparison to the values your judgment represents.

The structure of the On Campus section, as you know, is that random Villanova students are asked a question (point blank) of current interest and asked to reply. Since those interviewed do not have answers prepared, their replies may not accurately or completely represent their feelings. Many a person has had a response look foolish in that section. This is not a problem unless you make a value judgment on a person based on that one comment.

As an acquaintance of Maggie Coyle, I can assure you, Miss Healy, that she is in touch with the real world, as you put it, and probably has a better hold on it than you do. When faced with the loss of a person who had represented the hopes and dreams of many, Maggie gave the response that many gave when first confronted with the tragedy, shock and disbelief. If one I loved had died in such a situation, I could not dismiss it as a symptom of our society, but would rather be shocked and outraged. I feel that your judgment, based on one small statement uttered out of sadness, is entirely inappropriate and unfair. I hope that you are usually not this hasty to judge, for if you are, you will be in for "quite an eye-opening experience." I wish you well.

Sincerely,
Michael J. Gormley, '84

Parking Squeeze

Dear Editor:

The lack of parking facilities for Good Counsel and Stanford residents has become intolerable. As upperclassmen, we have waited two years for the privilege of on campus parking. We have become aware that many sophomores have their cars on campus. Many of these students have improperly obtained parking stickers for their automobiles while others have no stickers at all. As a result of the overcrowding, many cars are forced to park in the center of the lot. In fact my new car was scratched in several places by a sophomore's car. She was attempting to maneuver through the obstacle course created by the enormous number of vehicles.

There is the need for a more thorough investigation of the students applying for resident parking permits. The present situation must be remedied. Checks randomly scheduled throughout the month would insure the removal of unstickered cars. We realize the difficulty involved in the elimination of sophomore and freshmen vehicles this semester, but a plan of action should be formulated and enacted as soon as possible.

Fan Involvement Causes Dilemna

By DAVE COSKEY

Currently the college basketball game is drawing crowds that equal its professional counterpart in Philadelphia. A reason for this may be that the respective student bodies are able to identify with their own school's team.

Quite often crowd size and fan reaction is able to control the tempo of a game and may even affect its outcome. Inside Sports didn't list our Field House as one of the ten toughest places for a visiting team to win a basketball game because of its outstanding color scheme. It was because of the pressure forced on opponents by the Wildcat's boisterious fans. It may also have something to do with the fact Villanova has a record of 92% capacity for its Field House games. Going to a Field House game means you are part of the action.

All of this raises the question of what happens when that the fan input is deleted, as with the Sixers. Last week when Villanova faced the University of Conneticut at the Palestra, it was a very vocal, partisan crowd that helped the Cats defeat nationally ranked UConn.

During the game the Wildcat mascot came up behind the visiting husky mascot and pulled it s tail off. During the time out, the Cat ran to half court and threw his trophy to the screaming delight of the Palestra fans. All part of the game, right?

Wrong. In fact the Cat was cited for "inciting the crowd," by officials. But after all, isn't that his job? Had it been the other way around, the crowd may not have been so appreciative, but still it's part of the college game.

Of course things can get out of hand. The rollouts displayed by both Penn and Villanova left a lot to be desired. While Villanova had nothing to be proud of, Penn brought a new meaning to the class, or lack of it, while showing little creativity. They still have a long way to go to match the followers at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, where police had to hold some fans back from Villanova cheerleaders.

With the two extremes there has got to be a compromise; somewhere in the middle that involves the fans but still keeps the game under control, because after all, that's the whole point of being there.

Of course Big Five attendance is on the rise, because Big Five rivalries are coming back. Remember what it was like trying to get a ticket to the St. Joe's game last year? Was it really that horrible that Villanova stole the Hawk mascot? Or does that add to the excitement of the game? Isn't it refreshing to find students so involved in activity that the word apathy is forgotten?

The college game is coming back, which is great. Fan control probably has to be instituted to some degree. To go overboard, however, and take away the majority of fan involvement may spell disaster, as it did to the pro game.

By SHARON WINTERS and JEFF PAGE

This week the Villanovan asked students: Now that the former hostages are safe, how do you think that the United States should handle future acts of terrorism?

"I don't think that they should be weak. We should show more power in these situations. I don't think that this is an issue that has an easy answer."

Linda Bickert-Sophomore

"They should be wary and have more protection in the future for embassies. They should be more prepared for something to happen."

Judy Eng-Freshman

"Better security in the embassies, for one. Also, a rapid deployment force like the ones that Israel, Germany and Britain have. These forces specialize in thwarting terrorists."

Tom Dennison-Freshman

"I think that President Reagan, in the way that he's handling foreign matters, should reduce the threat of terrorism. He is a firm president."

Jim DiBlasi-Sophomore

"I think they should be tougher on the other countries. They should have taken a stand sooner."

Karen Buck-Junior

"I think that they totally mishandled the Iranian situation. It took too long. Now, they will have to deal strongly with this kind of thing. Military force should be used, if necessary."

Tom Shortell-Senior

"I don't know. They've got to get their act together. They have to watch what they do and say because we don't want to have a war."

Ed Shubeck-Freshman

"That's a tough thing to say. A lot of people think that we should have gone to Iran. But, it's not that easy. There are innocent people involved. Carter, under the circumstances, did the best he could, although he was passive. Either way he was going to have resistance. The rescue, for example, was considered stupid by some people."

Theresa Smith-Sophomore

"Give everybody a gun and go hunting. We should have paved Iran."

Tim Shanahan-Senior

"There is a lot of gold in the Federal Reserve that belongs to Iran. They should pay off the loan to Iran with their own money and not give them anything else. Making an example of Iran, by not paying them off, will stop future acts."

Mark Hughes-Sophomore

Alumnus Makes It As Producer

By KATHI IANNACONE

Little did the pre-med professors know that Bill Gerrity, once a Villanova student, would not become the doctor that he wished so desperately to be, but rather he would go on to be a professional, well-known producer-director-manager in the film industry. Little did the professors know, but more surprisingly, little did Gerrity dream of it himself.

Gerrity came to Villanova in 1949 after two years of attending Fordham University. He was a "serious" pre-medical student when he graduated in 1951 with a B.A. The Fedigan resident, who later would come to win the Directors Guild Award for his outstanding direction in The French Connection, was then only interested in being a "good" doctor.

Upon graduation and medical school acceptances in such places as Brazil, Mr. Gerrity entered into the U.S. Army Medical Corps, and then continued his graduate studies, also in medicine, at St. John's University. Soon after he became married and decided to begin working for his father in the film industry.

The events that pushed Gerrity into this filmmaking limelight began in 1953 when he started his work as an electrician under the direction of his father, Willie Gerrity. With the privilege of having a father readily involved in the spotlight, Gerrity was supervised and soon promoted to Second Assistant Director.

Although Bill Gerrity is the only one of the family directly involved in production, he is not the only family member in the industry. His father had a career as a set builder for such famous ones as the Marks Brothers and Gloria Swanson. Bill's brothers are involved and now too, his children. Gerrity's sons are working as "grips" (stage hands) and daughter Kathy remains a senior at Villanova pursuing a career in theatre arts, and then she is hoping to continue at the Academy of Dramatic Arts.

Little did the professors know, but more surprisingly, little did Gerrity dream of it himself

Mr. Gerrity is presently working as the Executive in Charge of Production for a movie made for television called Family Reunion. The movie stars Bette Davis. Within the year he will also begin production of Sophie's Choice. Once again he will be working directly with Alan Pakula.

As an Executive in Charge of Production, Gerrity's duties include beginning work on a film approximately three to four months in advance. Work includes budgeting the film, hiring stars, booking locations, paying everyone and being there through the entire filming and after to make sure all goes as planned.

But Executive of Production took many years to accomplish as Gerrity began as a Second Unit Director and First Assistant Director. He worked on such television series as For The People, Hawk, Coronet Blue, Gentle Ben and Nurses.

Moving his way upward, Gerrity then started production on films as Klute, Dark Shadows, The Owl And The Pussycat, Alice's Restaurant and Boys In The Band.

Furthering his career, Gerrity worked on Starting Over and Wolfen, as Executive in Charge of Production. The Ritz, Gumball Rally, Prisoner Of Second Avenue, Land Of The Free, Give Me Liberty, The Dain Curse and Last Of The Belles also are attributed to Mr. Gerrity's successes.

While Mr. Gerrity presently works out of New York City, it is necessary for him to travel occasionally to California. In New York he continues to be a member of the Directors Guild of America. His two sons are members of the Union Local 52 of which his father had established and now houses hundreds of members.

Also, in an attempt to carry on the family tradition, Gerrity has just re-opened "The Big House" in Astoria where his father had previously worked. Now, Gerrity will use the house for location sets in his future work.

Internships Assist Future Employment

By KATE McDONALD

Students in the College of Arts& Sciences are offered internships by Dr. Albert J. Dorley, coordinator of internship programs. Philosophy is the only department which does not provide these. Credits are given in the free elective area. Grades are received on a pass/fail basis.

Those interested in acquiring an internship may reach Dr. Dorley in the history department of Vasey Hall. Jobs are available in both fall and spring semesters. "Interns have been offered full-time positions where they've worked," Dorley said. "But a lot of people are not from this area anyway, and select to go home."

Obtaining an internship is an option. If a student prefers to use what he has learned in a job situation, this may be for him. "The feedback is mostly good. The experience is most valuable in finding jobs," Dorley was sure. "One girl worked at NBC on coverage of the Summer Olympics. She was even supposed to go to Moscow; of course, that trip fell through."

Besides NBC, Dorley places students in Washington, for instance, in various branches of the government. Some work for the Washington Post. These particular jobs are worth 15 credits because the intern spends a whole semester in Washington.

The political science department offers a "Washington Minimester" which is good for 3 credits. Arranged by Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, the program runs for 3 weeks in May so students are able to reside in dormitories at American University.

"Interns learn how Washington really works," Hahn said. "Among other things, they meet with the three branches of government, lobby groups, federal judges and members of the media." This particular internship gives the student a broad exposure to the real world.

"One year, we met a national representative of NBC news. He took us through the process of doing a story from the writing to putting it on the air. We actually helped him do this. We also met with Judge John Sirica who was very nice." Hahn agreed that there are plenty of career opportunities in several areas as a result of the "Washington Minimester."

Note that these internships are open to anyone. It does not depend on students majors.

Internships for special education majors are required. Second-semester seniors receive 12 credits for teaching students five days a week, 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This specific program is run in affiliation with Cabrini College.

Peggie Hearn teaches trainable mentally retarded and visually impaired autistic students, ranging in age from 5 to 20 years old. She travels to the Elwyn Institute every day, 40 minutes from Villanova.

After graduating, Hearn will attend grad school. When the time comes for finding a job, "I'd rather work in a hospital or institution; otherwise, I'd feel too confined for the good education I've gotten," she said proudly.

Internships are available in the science department with jobs in labs, areas of research and the Department of Agriculture, just to name a few. Problems may arise from the fact that science majors don't have that many free electives.

Cats' Sixth Man Unites True Fans

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The Villanova Fieldhouse is listed as one of the ten toughest arenas in which an opponent can play against a home team in the January issue of Inside Sports. Villanova's Basketball Fan Club is doing all it can to prove it. Well, 180 screaming Villanova students should be an inspiration to any team, and the members of this club try to do more than just scream.

"I think the club's main objective is to be the Villanova Wildcats' sixth man — to be that extra support needed to bring home victory, and at the same time to intimidate the opposition," explained junior Dave Glickman, president of the club.

"We provide a lot of noise and cheering, all the streamers for the Palestra games, and we make the booster signs for all the games," said junior Mike Loftus, the club's vice-president.

The club follows the team on its road trips on chartered buses, and attends every home game. According to Glickman, "At away games, in a hostile arena, I think the team appreciates having the support. The players definitely know we exist."

The club has experienced a more than 200 percent increase in the number of members since last year, and Glickman expects to have at least 300 members next year. "We believe this is the fastest-growing club on campus," noted Loftus.

"People might think the club has mostly male members," added Glickman. "In reality, there are more women than men."

The club is currently trying to plan a "Beat St. Joe's" week for the week prior to Spring Break. The Wildcats play St. Joe's February 28.

Glickman feels his club "brings together true fans who need a cohesive group." And, added Loftus, "The players' job is to play. Our job is to cheer."

"Evening Magazine" hosts Suzie Pevaroff and Ray Murray were filming at Villanova this past Monday. According to Associate Producer Russ Stanton (right), "The show will not have anything to do with Villanova. The campus is so beautiful, that it makes a nice background for parts of the show." The show will air next Thursday (February 5) on WKYW, Channel 3, at 7:00 p.m.

Residents Aim For Tourney

By PAUL HIGGINS

"I'm caught in a crossfire that I don't understand."
Bruce Springsteen

Suppose you're walking across campus with a friend from Austin Hall. Some lunatic in a mask and fake beard runs up to your friend, levels a toy suction cup dart gun, shoots him, and then runs away laughing hysterically. You may or may not find this unusual (depending on what part of New York you grew up in) but chances are you may ask your friend why he was attacked by such a weirdo.

The motivation behind this hypothetical attack and countless others like it, which will become a chilling reality over the next few weeks, is provided by the First Annual Austin Hall "Killers Tournament."

Beginning next week, Austin residents bitten by the cloak and dagger bug will begin tracking, staking out, and "assassinating" fellow students, vying for the title of "Master Assassin." Each participant will pay an entry fee which will include the cost of the toy gun. The participant will then draw the names of three other participants, designated as his "targets." While waiting for the opportunity to "blow away" your targets (exactly two witnesses must be present) the potential hit man must be on guard himself, as every other resident can be his potential assassin.

A list of "obituaries" and "survivors" will be published each day. As the list of "survivors" thins, the level of sneakiness and underhandedness reaches tremendous proportions. The chances of winning the cash prize also increase dramatically as students are "bumped off." At any rate, if you happen to be swept up in a shootout between a couple of "would-be" Clint Eastwoods, don't get upset. The darts don't hurt — unless you live in Austin.

Gerrity

the Rudner Room, Mr. Bill Gerrity will return to Villanova to present a lecture as a part of the Cultural Film Series.

Kathy Gerrity explained "my father is so excited about coming back to V.U. While he was here and even now, he's so pro-Villanova." Gerrity was a member of the campus radio station, Editor-in-Chief of the yearbook and very much a part of the basketball scene. Kathy again commented, "I had my first Villanova T-shirt when I was one year old. My dad wanted to teach me without wasting any time."

When asked about her father and her family's personal life, Kathy explained, "we're not into that social scene. We like watching football and having beer. My dad and brothers like to watch old films but usually they end up by cutting them all apart." Further she stated, "He's just a regular guy but a great one at that!"

T.G.E. Joins Sisterhood

By LIZ SCHOFIELD

A new sorority, Theta Gamma Epsilon (TGE), starts its first semester as an official organization of student activities on campus.

In the spring of 1980, the sorority began as an informal group who were interested in forming a sisterhood in addition to the two that are presently on campus. TGE was approved by the IFC (Inter-Fraternity Council) on Nov. 3, 1980. Sophomore Tricia Poch, president of TGE, wrote the sorority's constitution this past fall with the help of her fellow "sisters." The first sentence of Article II states the essence and purpose of the sorority: "Theta Gamma Epsilon is a social sorority whose purpose is to create an organization to promote friendship and unity among the sisters."

"Villanova needed another sorority," stated Poch, "which will produce more interest in this type of organization. The sorority plans to become quite involved in the community. Some of the sisters tutor in Germantown one day a week as their semester service project."

"The girls are planning fund raising events such as sales, and of course the collection of dues to start off the sorority so far as financial matters are concerned," stated Lori Callen, also a sophomore and treasurer of TGE.

Other officers include Denise DiTrane, vice-president, and Shauneen Murray, secretary. The sisters are hoping to double the size of the sorority from 12 to 24 as they anticipate an enthusiastic rush.

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN

Singin' in the Rain spoofs the glorious days of early Hollywood, when the advent of talkies made new careers and demolished a few old ones. "Just about the best Hollywood musical of all times."

shown in the cinema at 7:30 p.m.

...tremendously exuberant, always youthful, joyously indestructible. ... Although it's no longer quite the discovery it once was, it has the freshness of a fine performance in the theater, which, I suppose, is another way of saying it never seems stale. In this film it's as original and I'm as hesitant to attempt to analyze it as I would be to take a clock apart. I'm not sure I'd be able to get all the pieces back in the right places. The most important thing is that it works just as well today as it did twenty-three years ago. Maybe better. ... Singing Singin' in the Rain has nothing to do with nostalgia or anti-nostalgia. It is, simply stated, a Hollywood masterpiece."

Jammed Up and Jelly Tight

By GREG ANTON

A start in America is what The Jam will be looking for with the American release of their fifth LP, Sound Affects. The new domestic model is a snazzy toned-up package of the LP released in the U.K. two months ago. Complete with a bonus 45, the album is obviously a full-fledged effort by Polydor to push Britain's number one band onto the American music scene.

For the many who worship the American top-selling groups today, the Jam's success and talent has undoubtedly gone unnoticed. The Jam is unquestionably Britain's best band of today. Their record sales (both LP's and 45's) are unprecedented in numbers sold and swiftness to reach the top of the British charts. However, unlike most of America's top groups, who have stagnated, the Jam continues to evolve into a more mature group with each album they make. Abandoning the early Who-inspired, aggressive Mod sound, they have adapted a more complex, personalized sound while thankfully not "Americanizing" their music. This new direction is further pointed out in the new album, Sound Affects.

The album opens with Start, but it is a different version from Britain's number one single of last year. Bruce Foxton's strong bass

Rich Buchler, Paul Weller and Bruce Foxton, smiling upon the Modern World.

'It doesn't matter if we never meet again
What we have said will always remain
If we get through for two minutes only
It will be a start!' — Paul Weller playing is used to carry songs such as Start and Pretty Green. Newly added keyboards provide the backbone to the 60ish sounding Monday. Tracts like Dream Time and Set the House Ablaze could have easily fitted on the Jam's last album, the hard, metallic sounding Setting Sons (considered by most their best album). Throughout Sound Affects, Rich Buchler gives a lesson in superb drumming.

Tying all these different styl together are the commandi vocals of Paul Weller. The le writer/guitarist/vocalist, w modeled his style after the W leader, Pete Townshend, h retained leadership of the m Mod era. Weller has been claimed for his reflections society in such Jam classics The Modern World and Mr. Cle Weller's lyrics have always de with the hard, cruel aspects society, such as being beaten punks in Down in a Tube Stati at Midnight and a housewif mental anguish in Private He Heller's cynical attitude preva throughout Sound Affects.

His best effort comes off That's Entertainment, a sarcas view of every day life from "... opening a window and breathing petrol . . ." to ". . . cuddling warm girl and smelling stale p fume . . ." Reminiscent of earli songs, Weller again attac bureaucracy and leadership in th song, Scrape Away. Could Welle be referring to and foreshadowi America's next four years?

It seems that the album shou come with a decal saying, "Th album contains material from top-selling artist. However, th album is talent-laden, contains i telligent lyrics, and will he shape music of the future." Bu one cannot shock the Americ public too much, can one?

Chance: Slim and None

By KIM KINGSLAND

It would seem safe to assume that Manfred Mann, a seventeen-year veteran of the music world, would by now have evolved his own individual sound. Guess again. The title of Manfred Mann's Earth Band's newest release, Chance, is anything but indicative of the album's inventory: Manfred Mann takes unwarranted liberties with the songs and sounds of others and advantage of current trends, but no chances.

The album opens with Lies, which is subtitled Through the Eighties. Throughout this montage of pirated classic lines, ("pull up the trees and put up a parking lot. . .," ". . .ticket to ride. . .," ". . . talk about their generation . . .", there reigns ubiquitous synthesizers and a repetition of the refrain wherein the word "through" is sounded as "troo."

The sound of the song is undeniably reminiscent of Styx, but Mann does not stop his borrowing here. Lies is not only a thinly veiled version of Styx's warning "Don't look now, but here come the Eighties," it is also a year too late to merit any notice.

On the Run is another Styx clone. Mann may admire the band, but two consecutive tracks is pushing it: this renegade is still running, but "the heat is on," and one expects Styx's lawman to come down from the gallows momentarily. Perhaps the decent saxophone can cheer the fugitive; it certainly cannot salvage the song.

When Bruce Springsteen penned For You, it was intended and succeeded as an intense vignette of a young girl's suicide. However, Mann sugar-coats it, relegates it to an atonal level, deletes key lyrics, and injects a theatrical build-up so strong that one expects the Babys to dash in and wail "Walk Away!" at any point. Although the keyboards are a saving grace, there are points at which a piano piece resembling Chopsticks is present. This is apropos, considering that the feeling of the song is so badly chopped that one understands why Springsteen was opposed to selling the rights.

Side One closes with Adolescent Dream, a love song that sounds more like a funeral dirge for a robot, and Fritz the Blank, one of the few good moments on this album. An instrumental, this interesting exercise brings to mind a mechanized cat gallivanting on an electrified fence. It also supports an already strong hypothesis that Mann should forget his attempts at writing lyrics.

Manfred Mann

Side Two's first track is Stranded, a song which proves that Mann's imitations are not restricted to Styx and Springsteen. Stranded is his answer to Bowie's "Space Oddity," only now the protagonist is not floating in space but is marooned in, of all places, Iowa. The song contains no obvious (or subtle) theme, it merely fails to translate Major Tom's universality into midwest mediocrity.

Hello, I Am Your Heart is another decent piece, displaying some fine guitar finally discernible over the omnipresent synthesizers. Steve Waller's vocals are clear and well-defined; the background heartbeat escapes oppression and fits the original (for once) lyrics. However, two good songs do not an acceptable album make, and Mann quickly proves this with No Guarantee, wherein we are reminded in the midst of a muddled ennumeration of current problems droned at high pitch, that no one takes responsibility for the woes of others. While insurance companies demonstrate this, Mann employs a celestial choir and catastrophe sound effects to do so, giving as his piece of the rock the unmerited promise of "peace of mind." If this contradiction seems confusing, don't turn to the lyric sheet or even the vinyl itself to explain; you'll only come away shaking your head.

The album closes with Heart on the Street, and its mediocrity comparatively shines. Although the lyrics are still enigmatic, the vocals of Willy Finlayson are memorable, and the refrain is catchy. This is the best melody on the album; once again the synthesizers are sufficiently muted to allow the guitar work to be heard.

It's sad that the talent of this band is so thoroughly squashed; it's even sadder that a record label financed this fiasco. But there is an optimistic side: you don't have to listen to it.

Pryor, Wilder Stir Up

By ECHELMEIER YOUNGER

Ingredients for the recipe: mix a neurotic, pessimistic, mean-street black with a serene, optimistic do-gooder and stir. Crazy? Yes.

Sidney Poitier directs a spirited comedy, STIR CRAZY, featuring Richard Pryor, Gene Wilder and Georg Sanford Brown. Together, Pryor and Wilder appear in perilous scenes initiated by a barroom fight which leads to a mistaken-identity bank heist, a corrupt court and prison system and finally, the two of them participate in a convicts' rodeo. Our intent is to watch these two feisty characters worm their way out of this mess.

Pryor portrays an actor and Wilder, a writer, who feel they have reason to leave the Big Apple in search for instant success, only to be found in Hollywood. On their road trip, Pryor and Wilder stop at a local town bar where they encounter a brawl between two rugged men. These men are later discovered as being the real culprits of the bank heist instead of the falsely accused Pryor and Wilder.

The twosome's skills and intellect are continually challenged through ludicrous situations subsequent to the initial melee.

This dynamic duo, Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder, come together in a zany flick to stir us crazy.

Chevy Goes For The Gold

By SHARON WINTERS

Goldie Hawn is a delight in the pleasant comedy, Seems Like Old Times. She plays a multitalented, liberated woman who discovers that her ex-husband still loves her dearly.

Unfortunately, Hawn has remarried and loves her current husband. Charles Grodin is her likeable and loving mate.

The trilogy is made "complete" by bumbling Chevy Chase, ex-husband and perpetual nuisance. Chase is a lovable fool, the man that everyone uses and abuses. He has been, according to the dialogue, convicted of other people's crimes in the past and finds himself again a hunted criminal as the film opens. Yet, Chase manages to take life in stride. He plays the eternal optimist, the innocent, who loses but overcomes.

That Chase manages to be convincing in his forlorn, silly role, is a tribute to his earlier television role on Saturday Night Live. The public is used to seeing the Chase that bumbles his way to success. His role in Old Times is basically type-casting; he plays the character that everyone knows and loves with an ease of style that makes the film work.

The plot of this "odd-ball" comedy is too cute for words. Charles Grodin is so understanding as the new husband that no one can fault him when he finally slugs Chase. Chase returns the gesture. Meanwhile, Hawn attempts to relax and pretend that it all isn't happening.

The movie is an amusing way to spend an evening: no message or reality here. The key-word for Old Times is the cuteness with which the movie is saturated.

Some may be disappointed that the movie has few audible laughs. This is a departure from some of the earlier efforts of Hawn and Chase. The scenerio, the situation, is the crucial element in the film. The absurd situations that the characters find themselves in is the humor of Old Times.

The film has been compared to earlier comedies, ones from several decades ago. To an extent, the comparison is valid. Seems Like Old Times is a screwball comedy that has similarities with its predecessors. But, the differences are more notable than the similiarities.

Hawn plays a woman who has a career and a marriage, both of which are portrayed as working. In earlier versions of the genre, Hepburn and Tracy, for example, played the married couple with careers. Their jobs caused conflict, and hence the plot. In Old Times, the Grodin/Hawn marriage is fine, despite careers. The conflict here comes from outside.

Another aspect of the film is the feminist connotations that were not apparent in earlier films. The woman either was intelligent or feminine. Goldie Hawn is both. As an actress, she has the recognized ability to mold these two "opposites" into an appealing and acceptable form. She can be a good lawyer, a great hostess and she can even cook if she has to.

To a limited extent, Grodin plays a liberated husband. A man who knows who he is; he also knows who he has married. Grodin does not treat his screen wife as an unavoidable hazard, a pretty eccentric. He just gets frustrated because others are in the way so sometimes his relationship with his wife is stifled.

Despite the fact that Hawn's manner of life is unusual, Grodin takes the abnormal situation almost too well. The event that causes him the real difficulty is Chase's arrival to his home.

Chase also plays a character that would be absent in earlier films of this type. He is a crusader, albeit an innocent one, too naive to handle the crises that he ultimately causes. He is the Woodstein who has all the wrong contacts. No one at the outset really believes, without a shadow of doubt, that he is an innocent victim of the crimes that are attributed to him.

The burden is on Chase to prove that he was framed. Further, the budren is on him to make the plot, as well as the film, work. Chase does a decent job at all of these. And he does it while playing a subtler Chase than he has in the past.

Had Chase appeared in a similar film of several decades ago, he probably would have been a down-and-out-executive of the Gig Young mold. Young played the businessman who never made it; and, also, he never got the girl. In this incarnation, Chase is not in the business world as previously mentioned and he doesn't totally lose the girl, despite his miseries.

Old Times is a fairly successful and entertaining resurrection of an old film-form. The movie uses the personalities of its stars to an advantage just as the original screwball comedies did. However, times have changed and so have the social situations. These things have been incorporated into the neo-screwball style with the expected ease that also propels its plot to the proverbial happy ending.

The Life of 'M' During Wartime

By PAUL BERN

The Official Secrets Act by M is one of the newest chapters in the cold war. This new wave group from London makes use of contemporary techniques and an almost primitive beat in a manner that is all their own.

The album begins with Transmission, a radio broadcast with new wave music in the background. M reveals that it is pro-Soviet by saying that the solution to world peace is that the United States "reduce to the extent possible the amount of anti-Soviet literature passed . . .". The broadcast ends with an announcement that "pop music" will be played until the next news bulletin. If the Soviets and singer/songwriter Robin Scott have anything in common, it is that they both have a way of making things sound better than they really are. In light of this, Join the Party takes on its double meaning. A pleasant keyboard, with a soft but moving beat, makes the song easy to listen to even though the lyrics aren't nice to hear. M is adamant about their philosophy that the only way to be alone with the Soviets is to be one of them — after all, "the manifesto is to get up and dance."

Working for the Corporation sounds like an electric version of the Seven Dwarves' "Hiho It's Off to Work We Go". Through this, M continues its euphonious propaganda by making work seem like fun.

Your Country Needs You marks a change in the tone of the album. Less pleasant-sounding that the previous songs, this one gives new meaning to the others. M holds that anyone who believes all of this, really does not understand what is happening. Forboding African drums, and a whispering voice saying that "the carrots are cooked" and "the pigeon has flown", in M'aider create the notion that there is nothing anyone can do about what is to come.

Relax picks up on this almost paranoid feeling that M'aider leaves, however, M returns to the pleasant music with the help of the Dublin Symphony Orchestra. As before, if the music is easy to listen to, then the words are not; vocalist Robin Scott screams that he now knows there is really no difference between Right and Left and consequently cannot relax.

Even though everything is falling apart, nobody is supposed to talk about it. This is "the message of Keep It to Yourself. The fact that the "company doesn't need you, it needs an alibi," could be said of almost any country, Soviet or not. This is M's way of saying that the Soviets are no worse than anyone else.

Much like M'aider and Keep it to Yourself, The Official Secrets Act is definitely in the new-wave genre. The overall impression that this album leaves is that the games that the big wheels play are for real, and there is nothing you can do about it but keep it to yourself or join the party. Writer Robin Scott, percussionist Phillip Gould, and the other members of M have produced a new wave album that definitely deserves merit. The next news bulletin: "The central Soviet daily, Pravda, writes that the Soviet Union will not deviate from its policy of reservist peace . . .".

The Shirts Tie It Up

By STEVE HELMETAG

The New York based band The Shirts buttoned down to put on a lively show of old and new material at Emerald City Saturday night, the group's first venture into the Philadelphia area in nearly a year.

Although it was obvious that the veteran band (which has been together for eight—years) was anxious to show off new songs, the highlights of the show were Pleasure is the Pain and Laugh and Walk Away, two tunes vocalist Annie Golden says are somewhat autobiographical of the band.

In Laugh and Walk Away, from the Street Light Shine album, the band expresses a sort of lack of satisfaction in their careers, yet can live with it: "When it comes down to the facts I just laugh and walk away."

Although appearing very vivacious and at home with the audience, the majority of the concert-goers were either the opening act's, Pretty Poison's, people or Emerald City habituates. Backstage, Golden seemed shy and reserved and spoke only when questions were aimed directly at her. She was disappointed at the mediocre crowd response but didn't let it get the band down.

Golden, who starred in the movie Hair, was asked about a career in film but said only that she would never leave the Shirts because of her intregal part in the live show. Since August the band has been playing live shows on weekends while the rest of the week has been devoted to writing and practicing. Bassist Robert Racioppo explained that before new songs are put together with vocals a dummy tape is made so that Golden can then put her interpretation into them.

When asked to compare the band's old songs to the recent ones, lead guitarist and sometimes vocalist Arthur Lamonica, who can be considered a father figure, said, "One person would write one part and someone else another part and they would be thrown together." Unfortunately, this writing style often results in choppy transitions and seemingly-endless seven minute songs, opposite the band's three minute tunes of today.

The oldest song performed at Emerald City was Poe which was recorded on the Live at CBGB's album, an anthology of some of the better bands to play the famous New York City nightspot in 1975 and 1976. This song is characteristic of early Shirt songs and is probably the best of the breed. With its appealing shout-styled double lead vocal, driving guitars, and pounding drums, this upbeat tune is the ultimate live song.

After enjoying the show and talking to some of the band members I began to think about the future of the Shirts, and I realized one of the biggest problems facing the band right now is age. The band's following is and will stay strong in the New York area but with all members approaching, if not past, thirty years of age, it appears the Shirts are past their prime.

Watercats Gear Toward Nationals

By KYLE GOTHNER

With the addition of Penn State, Syracuse, Fordham, and Princeton to the women's swimming schedule, they have found it impossible to maintain last year's perfect record. However, the women are not aiming for another perfect season, they are aiming for the nationals.

Opening the semester with meets against Ursinus and Pennsylvania, the women extended their record to 3-1. Junior, Tara Baroody was the only triple winner against Ursinus winning the 50 backstroke, 100 individual medley (IM), and 500 free, leading the women to victory with a score of 84-44.

Against Pennsylvania sophomore Rita Edge and junior Mary Maier were both double winners, Edge winning the 100 free and 50 free, and Maier winning the 500 free and 100 IM. It was another easy victory for the women with a score of 87-45.

Syracuse was the next opponent for the women and it proved to be the toughest meet of this early part of the season. Syracuse was the first meet of the season that the women have had any real competition. In order to have beaten Syracuse each swimmer would have had to swim their best times, which they had not been doing so far in order to save their energy.

So far this season Villanova's relay teams have dominated all of their opponents. Coach Franks was expecting a very close meet and felt that it might have even gone down to the final relay, but that was not the case. Syracuse was a very strong team and defeated Villanova by a score of 80-60. Syracuse took first in every relay except for the 200 free which Villanova won with a time of 1:45.

As in the relays, Syracuse took first in almost every event, except for those in which Rita Edge swam. Edge swam her personal best of the season winning three events; 500 free, 200 free and 100 fly.

Freshman Kathleen Rooney turned in an outstanding time for the 50 back swimming at 30.0. The qualifing time for the nationals is 29.8.

The divers were consistant with the swimmers placing second and third but not first. Senior co-captain Mary Jarrett placed second followed by Marcia Gregory.

Since practice began this year everything has been geared towards the nationals. Last year the team placed fourth, being the only Villanova women's team to ever accomplish that at such a high level. Their win-loss re does not matter to the team the individual performances count. They have been hard in der to gain support by having a team qualified and able to att the nationals which are to be h in Michigan, March 12-14.

Swimmers Win

By LARRY GOANOS

"On paper they're better than us," explained Villanova Swimming Team co-captain Bob Baltera after the Watercats had splashed their way to a convincing 74-39 dual meet victory over Syracuse on January 21st. Fortunately for Villanova, the meet took place in the water, not on paper.

Four Watercats turned in the best performances of their career to propell Villanova to its third victory in six meets. These personal marks were set by Dan Ahern in the 200-yard backstroke, Bruce Baltera in the 200-yard butterfly, Bob Ackerman in the 50-yard freestyle and Darell Linder in the 500-yard freestyle. Senior Rob Kownurko was a double winner for Villanova as he placed first in both the 500 and 1,000-yard freestyle events.

"We were really psyched for this meet," continued Baltera," In fact, we all shaved down, which shows how much we wanted to win." When a swimmer "shaves down" it entails removing all body hair from his arms and legs in order to reduce friction and thereby allow for greater speed.

This victory was the first for the 'Cats in the Big East Conference, yet unlike the basketball team which faces each conference foe twice during the regular season, the Watercats will have to wait until the Big East Championships to compete against the other squads. That meet will be held in Storrs, Conn., on March 5-7.

"That's going to be a tough meet," predicted Coach Geisz, "It will be mostly between us and Syracuse. They get real tough during championships."

Diver Paul Clark joined teammate Tod Russell as a qualifier for the NCAA Championships, which are to be held from March 26 to 28 in Austin, Texas.

Profile: Coach Al Severance

By BILL CLARK

When people think of college basketball today, they think of the superstars: Ralph Sampson, Mark Aguirre, Albert King. College basketball means television pacts, publicity, and money. Many of us fail to realize that it was not always that way. No one knows this more than Dr. Alexander Severance.

Severance has been associated with Villanova basketball longer than anyone else. In fact, Severance is sometimes referred to as "Mr. Villanova." His accomplishments certainly reflect that name.

Besides coaching varsity basketball for 25 years (1936-1961), Severance started on the basketball team from 1925-1929. His tenure at Villanova has encompassed many other positions: director of athletics, publicity director, and graduate manager of athletics.

Severance is known to many as "Screaming Al." Oddly enough, this sobriquet comes not from coaching, but from his teaching career at Villanova.

Dr. Severance, a business law professor at Villanova, explains his nickname by saying, "I scream in class to break up the continuity. If people are late for class or don't do their assignments, I yell. Some cute kid named me 'Screaming Al' and the name stuck."

Basketball has changed since his coaching days, Severance claims. "The biggest change in the game is in the personnel," said Severance. "Many years ago, the height of the ballplayers was not as pronounced as it is today."

"In my day, 6 feet 3 inches or 6 feet 4 inches was considered big for a ballplayer. When I coached, having a center at 6 feet 8 inches was a rarity."

According to Severance, the players themselves have also changed over the years. "Back then, we didn't have the prolific scorers like we do today. Now, the game is much more wide open," said Severance.

"It was a heresy for someone to take a 21-foot jumper. The person had better make it or else he would come out of the game."

Severance feels that today's crowds are a major reason for this shift in philosophy. "The crowds today love the running and scoring. The beauty of defense has been lost," said Severance.

Indeed, our view of the game has changed. When we think of the great players of today, we look at the points they score and the flashy plays they make. For Severance, a person's defensive abilities were just as important.

"I had some good defensive ballplayers," said Severance, when asked to look back on some of his better players. "They played head to head and nose to nose. Many of them would definitely hold their own if they played today."

The players Severance coached are not everyday names for most of us. Because people like Paul Arizin, Larry Hennessy, and Bob Schafer are not household names, we don't consider them a match for today's scoring superstars. Try telling that to Severance.

"Paul Arizin was one of the best," said Severance. "He was not only a good athlete, but he also excelled in academics."

Arizin was a novelty in his day because he was the first person to perfect the jump shot, something taken for granted by most of us today. "He was unique with his jump shot," recalls Severance. "It was not utilized much then, but he could really get up there and suspend himself."

"Larry Hennessy was a shooter par excellence. He wasn't a great defensive player, but if he was left open he could kill the opposition. In fact, he reminds me a lot of Tom Sienkiewicz."

1949-50 Villanova Basketball Team. Coach Al Severance's best year at Villanova posting a 25-4 record.

"Another great player was Bobby Schafer. He could really play both ends of the floor. He was not only a great shooter, but he could also drive to the basket," said Severance.

"The personnel I had were really smart operators," added Severance. "They carried out the fundamentals." All three also received All-American honors.

Indeed, the numbers speak well of Severance's job at Villanova. His teams compiled a 416-202 record over his 25 years. The record seems more phenomenal when one considers the disadvantages Severance had in coaching during his time.

"In my day, there were no such things as assistant coaches at Villanova. I coached varsity basketball as well as the freshman team. I had to recruit ballplayers at the same time as coaching," said Severance.

"I virtually had to do all the subsidizing work myself. For a while I was also the athletic director, and even then I didn't have a secretary."

Recruiting college players has become a big-time business. Witness the efforts focused on Pat Ewing, the prized recruit from Massachusetts. Conference play and television appearances all play a part in the recruiting process of college players. Severance can recall what it was like before college basketball received much media exposure.

"Television stimulates players to come to a certain school. Supposedly, John Pinone came to Villanova because of our appearance against Duke in the NCAA playoffs," said Severance. "Back then, college basketball did not have that kind of exposure. I had to recruit the players and sell the institution to them."

Eagles Soar Past Cats

By BOB CONWAY

Six weeks ago the Boston College Eagles came into the Villanova Field House with high hopes. Boston College left the Field House without a notch in the victory column. In the first confrontation of these two teams, Villanova prevailed 74-71. Last Monday, with an in shape John Bagley Boston College avenged their earlier loss by trouncing the tired Cats 73-60.

The biggest difference between the first match-up of these two Big East teams and the second was the play of sensational sophomore guard, John Bagley. Bagley in the first game was neutralized. However, Bagley appeared to be omnipresent in front of a sold out BC arena. Bagley, who came into the game as the Big East's leading scorer did not show signs of slowing down against Villanova. Bagley had 30 points, including 16 of 16 from the charity stripe.

While Bagley was the main gun on offense for BC, he was just another scraper on defense. BC, who improved their record to 13-2, 5-3 in the conference, controlled the tempo of the game from start to finish by employing a fullcourt press. This press caused Nova to turn the ball over on numerous occasions. The Cats record dropped to 12-5, 5-3 in conference play.

Villanova Coach, Rollie Massimino, said, "We were a half step behind every time." Massimino added, "I think we are tired. Granger and Pinone have played every minute but one in the last six games."

Massimino's remarks told the story. While BC Coach Tom Davis had the liberty to use 11 players, Massimino used only eight. The full-court game played by BC just wore down the already tired Villanova players.

Yet, even with Bagley's fine performance and a tough press to crack, Villanova was never completely out of the game. The score at the half was 33-26. The second half though, started slowly. Neither team could manage to change a seven-point lead. The closest Nova came was when Aaron Howard hit back-to-back jumpers to pull within six (49-43), but the Cats could not convert a steal into a basket shortly thereafter. The picture only got bleaker from there.

Stu Granger led the Wildcats in scoring. He had 16 points. Howard had 13 points.

Icecats Extend Streak

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Ice Hockey team collected five out of a possible six points last weekend and extended their undefeated streak to five games. Two victories against Drexel and a tie against the University of Delaware has left the Cats atop the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference with a 11-3-1 record. The Icecats have ten games remaining on their 1981 schedule with three of them slated against arch-rival Delaware.

The most exciting and most important game took place last Friday night in Newark, Del. The Wildcats, minus five regular skaters, had their backs against the wall throughout the game but managed to salvage a 4-4 tie. Icecat leading scorer Chris Mancuso slid home a 20 foot wristshot with a mere 19 seconds remaining in the game for the tie.

"The only thing I could think about was getting the puck on the net. As soon as I got into the zone and within scoring range, I just fired it. I didn't pick a corner, just shot with a prayer," Mancuso explained.

Coach Skip Probst had nothing but praise for his team. "We only had ten skaters and we were dead tired, but the guys wanted to prove that we don't need our big guns to be a good team. When we were down by two goals with five minutes left to play, deep down I thought I was asking a bit much for us to come back, but after John Lammers brought us within one, everyone started to believe. It was without a doubt the best effort of the year."

Villanova had a relatively easy time disposing of the Dragons of Drexel on two different occasions. The Icecats took the first game by a score of 6-3 and the second, 8-3. "Killer" Whitaker led the Cats in the first game pocketing a hat-trick and Mancuso in the second with two goals. Freshman goaltender Don Clark made another strong appearance filling in for the much used Tom Margiotti.

Villanova travels again to Newark tonight for the second of four league games against the Blue Hens. Sunday afternoon at 12:00, the University of Pennsylvania invades the Skatium for the third and final match of the season between the two teams.

Tracksters Streak to Victories

By KERRY LYNCH

"The competition was more important than the time," said Rodney Wilson after taking second place in the 60 yard hurdles. Wilson ran the race in 6.2 seconds, a good early season clocking.

The world class competition at the Philadelphia Track Classic was given special status by Villanovans past and present.

Wilson, who ran against world record holder Reynaldo Nehemiah, said it was "a stiff hurdle race, I knew if I placed well the time would be good." His race with Nehemiah and other hurdling greats Anthony Hancock and Kerry Bethel, demonstrated the talented competition many Wildcats had to face throughout the night. However, they were equal to the task and placed among the top three in each event entered.

The race named after Villanova's veteran track coach, Jumbo Elliott, featured a rookie Villanova team of John Borgese, Jim Adams, Dermot Anderson and Marcus O'Sullivan, pitted against an experienced Georgetown team. Georgetown was just barely edged by Villanova in the Penn Relays. Wildcats Sydney Maree anchored the mile leg against Georgetown's Gregorak who challenged Maree throughout. Gregorak and company were back to do battle but a new Wildcat medley team proved themselves equally competitive.

The seesaw race, with Villanova and Georgetown running well behind an incredible Richmond team, provided some tense moments. Villanova was running second with Georgetown way behind in fifth when Gregorak, an Olympian, took the baton. Before the three-quarter mile leg was over Gregorak had done a little running magic and the Hoyas had traded places with the Wildcats. O'Sullivan took the Wildcat baton for the anchor leg and easily moved into third. A few laps later Villanova was controlling second place again. O'Sullivan's anchor mile was a sensational 4:04:5 and Villanova took second in 9:59. Georgetown was fourth.

Recently the newspapers have called Tony Tufariello "the new Don Paige." As a sophomore he was NCAA champion in the 600 yard run. Off the track because of injuries for most of last year, Tufariello showed Friday night that he is ready for a comeback and maybe even more. Running most of his race in second place, he sprinted at the gun to win the 600 in 1:11:6.

In the next two races Villanova alumni were the stars. Don Paige ('80), applied his famous kick to win the 1000 yard run easily in 2:07:51. Paige holds the world record in this event.

John Hunter, currently a junior, finished a strong and surprising third in the same race.

In the 880, Mark Belger ('78) came from the back of the pack to win the race. He holds the American record for this event.

Sydney Maree took first place in his first mile of the season. His win re-established him after a troubled fall on the cross-country course. Maree moved into the lead early and slowly widened the gap. His rhythmic running appeared never to break stride even during his gun lap sprint as he widened his victory margin to about 15 yards and won in 4:01:88. Ross Donoghue, a recent transfer to Villanova, represented NYAC and placed second to Maree.

The mile relay team of Rodney Wilson, Willie Sydnor, Jim Adams and Carlton Young took early control of their race and moved further ahead on each successive leg to win easily in 3:20:71.

The two mile relay was a repeat performance for two of the runners. Brian O'Keeffe led off but found it hard to get a good position after his start on the outside of the barrel. Kevin Dillon and John Hunter ran the second and third legs respectively and at the final hand-off Villanova and Georgetown were in dead heat for third. It was Gregorak challenging Tufariello with Villanova finally gaining the edge. At the gun Tufariello sprinted and brought the Wildcats in just behind Richmond for the second time.

Tufariello on Track

By KERRY LYNCH

When Anthony Tufariello took his place on the line at the Philadelphia Track Classic, a lot more than 600 yards lay in front of him. After eight months without a race Tuf said — "I want to prove that I can bounce back, that my first two years were not just a fluke."

He won the 600 Friday night and came back later to run an incredible anchor leg on the two mile relay. Tuf looked relaxed throughout his race; his stride smooth and strong. He moved into first just before the gun lap and as his stride got longer and longer so did the victory margin.

When asked just what this win meant to him, Tufariello replied that it was, "just a start to a new season, it brought up my confidence in myself." Tuf sets his indoor goals around the 600. He wants to win it at the Millrose Games and to regain the NCAA title.

Plagued by shin splints later correctly diagnosed as bone spurs, Tuf has missed three seasons. Knowing that good health cannot always be counted on, training and racing begin to take on more importance. In this, his senior year, the determined Tufariello has lots to accomplish. An athlete has to "set priorities and budget time," Tufariello explains that "every minute of training counts."

Working out twice a day and studying enough to maintain a 3.8 average in his major, finance, Tufariello knows what makes a champion. More importantly he is willing to put that out.

Of the 600, Tuf says "there is a lot of strategy involved. I'm much more confident outdoors but the 600 happens to be my best race." There is also the strategy of the race and Tuf knows his strategy. Come March and the NCAA's Tuf plans "to be in the lead at the gun." And it is hard to pass on an indoor track.

Women Up Record

By MICHAEL HEALEY

"We made too many fundamental mistakes on the court today. We had 69 points and still struggled. We should have easily had 80." Do these sound like the words of a coach whose team has just won its fourteenth game of the season? Well, they do if one had a post-game interview with an obviously displeased Harry Perretta, despite his team's 69-59 win over the Providence College Friars.

Coach Perretta's displeasure came after what he felt were "too many mental mistakes which led to turnovers." Indeed the Wildcats did commit a horrendous total of 24 turnovers, and that statistic will have to decrease drastically in order for the squad to compete with their next opponent, Rutgers, on even terms. You see, Rutgers was at last count rated number two, nationally. Obviously then, Villanova can ill afford nearly any mistakes let alone 24 turnovers against the Scarlet Knights.

Against Providence, played before a sparse crowd at the Fieldhouse, the Cats took control early in the game and never relinquished the lead. They led 43-27 at the half, but were outscored 36-26 after the intermission. Had they not committed so many "mental mistakes," they would have surely defeated the Friars by 20.

Lisa Ortlip, who recently broke the women's school rebounding record, was the game's high scorer and rebounder, with 22 points and 10 boards. Lisa now has 979 points and soon will join the select few who have broken the 1,000 point barrier.

This week's Bud Athlete of the Week is Stephanie Vanderslice. Over the past three games Stephanie collected 42 points which included a game high, 16, against Edinboro State. In a Big Five matchup against St. Joe's, Vanderslice pulled down 13 rebounds and added 11 points. In a come-from-behind victory against Fairleigh Dickinson, she had 15 points and 14 rebounds. RA's Question Procedure

By BILL CLARK

Six law students claim that the University did not follow proper procedures in their request to be rehired as resident assistants.

"We claim that certain procedures were not followed," said the Area Coordinator who was not rehired this year.

According to the student, approximately 13 law students were dismissed from the resident assistant program last year. Six of them met with University officials about the incident. "The rest of them didn't feel that it was worth fighting," said the ex-Area Coordinator.

The six students claim they were not reappointed for several reasons. The Area Coordinator claims he was not rehired due to professional differences with Allan Wechsler, the ex-dean of men. "As an Area Coordinator, I had pushed for things like increased security and fire protection.

"I felt that I was treated this way because I asked too many questions. There was a drug ring in Sullivan Hall and one of my resident assistants had a knife pulled on him. We were told by Wechsler not to say anything about it," said the law student.

"I was shocked that there were so many problems not being dealt with," he added.

"The last night of last year, the Dean of Men's office gave me a hard time about the incidents that occurred in Sullivan Hall. Dean Wechsler called me and said he wanted a report that night with the names of the people involved. I told him I could only give the names of some freshmen who were drinking, but I didn't know who was responsible for the damage. Wechsler said that the names didn't matter, as long as there was someone to blame for the incident," said the ex-Area Coordinator.

Another law student who was not rehired claims that this was due to personal reasons. "People in the Dean of Men's office don't like law students," said the ex-resident assistant.

He claims that one reason he was not rehired was a personal remark he made about Matt Christensen, the assistant to the dean of men. "One day at lunch I had made some comment questioning Matt's competence. I was blowing off steam. As it turned out, the thing that caused me to make the remark was wrong."

"I told Matt that I was wrong, and he said that it was okay and that my job was not in danger," said the ex-resident assistant. "But since then, they were ice-cold to me. I figured that if I did my job, they couldn't do anything. Little did I know."

Christensen did acknowledge that law students do not generally make good resident assistants. "Law students are not as enthusiastic because of their heavy work load and the high-pressure type of education they are exposed to. They are unable to give 100 percent of themselves to the resident assistant position," said Christensen.

Christensen also acknowledged that personal statements made by resident assistants are relevant criteria in their evaluations. "A resident assistant must also be supportive of the office, in the sense that if there is a decision made that he doesn't agree with, he must still abide by that decision. They must be willing to talk to us about their differences, rather than form a union among themselves," said Christensen.

According to the ex-Area Coordinator, the six law students met with Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A.,

Three Hit on Lancaster; V.U. Student Hospitalized

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Three people, including one Villanova student, were struck by motorists Saturday, January 31 on Lancaster Avenue near Ithan Avenue.

Villanova sophomore John Burke, 20, was crossing Lancaster Avenue with Ludwinna Jurrison, 19, a student at Harcum Junior College, at about 1:45 p.m. Saturday when they were struck by a 1975 Plymouth Fury driven by Alfred J. McNichol, 52, of Philadelphia. Both were taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital.

According to the Radnor Township Police report on the incident, the pedestrians were on the southwest corner of the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues trying to cross to the north side of Lancaster. The vehicle was eastbound in the curb lane of traffic and had a green light. The report said that McNichol applied the brakes of his car, but had no time to avoid striking the two.

Burke was in guarded condition at Bryn Mawr Hospital earlier this week with major leg injuries.

Jurrison sustained minor injuries and was released from the hospital.

Later that day, at 5:36 p.m., Lorraine Daly, 18, of New York was struck by a 1979 Ford Granada driven by Diane Cosier of Norristown. Daly is a member of a swimming team which had been competing in the fieldhouse.

According to the Radnor police report, Daly told police she is near-sighted and did not see the car approaching as she was crossing from the north to the south side of Lancaster Avenue. She looked to her left and right, saw the traffic light turn red and stepped off the curb without looking to her left again. According to the report, Cosier, who was traveling west on Lancaster Avenue in the first lane of traffic, swerved left to avoid striking Daly, but struck her with the rear right fender of the car.

Daly sustained major injuries, according to the police report, but has been released from Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Two Trailer Trucks Collide on Bridge

By SARA KELLY

An accident between two trucks occurred on the bridge of Route 320 Tuesday afternoon at 1:25 p.m.

Two trucks, one behind the other, were moving north on Route 320 when a southbound car drove down the center of the bridge. "I had to stop fast to prevent hitting the car head-on," said the driver of the first truck, John Parrish, a T. H. Mandy employee. According to Delta Transportation Corp. employee, Ralph Brazze, "I saw the truck in front of me stop, but, because of the rain, I couldn't stop and ran into it."

After being hit by the 18 wheel T.H. Mandy truck the D.T.C. truck was pushed forward into the front wall of the bridge and thus sustained minor damage to the right front section of the truck and more substantial damage to the rear. The T.H. Mandy truck sustained damage to its entire front body, including total loss of headlights and all signals. Both drivers escaped unharmed.

Recently, there has been great concern by students and faculty members regarding the safety of the bridge due to its small width and aluminum siding. A hearing held by the Public Utilities Commission in November discussed the problem of the bridge and its effects on pedestrial crossing and automobile traffic. According to Officer Robert Crawford, of the Radnor Police Force, the bridge is safe provided the cars remain on their respective sides of the road. Said John Parrish, "State roads get a lot of truck traffic so I think its dangerous to have such a small bridge on a major thoroughfare."

Sports Complex Considered

By ANNE SUYDAM and JIM DELORENZO

The possibility of an intramural sports complex is being considered as a priority for the next Board of Trustees meeting this month.

"We are in the process of putting together a package of objectives for a two-phase Covenant Campaign," said Father President John Driscoll. The two-part covenant campaign is a development project, the first phase of which was the Connelly Center. The second phase is now under consideration by the Trustees. The existing maintenance needs must be studied along with the idea of a sports complex, which could become a third phase if not considered a top priority.

"The logical location for a new intramural complex would be as a support to the social and cultural aspects of the Connelly Center," Father John McKenzie, director of planning commented, referring to the empty lot behind the Connelly Center. He feels that the location, near the train tracks, would be too noisy for a classroom or dormitory.

"There will probably be a conservative amount of spectator seating," explained Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics. He said that there would be less chance of spectator sports in order to have more activity space.

Bob Capone, alumni director, said, "There is a lot of support from the Alumni for an intramural and basketball facility." Since the admission of women to the university, intramurals and varsity sports have increased and the facilities to accommodate this number are not adequate, Capone continued. "We have a great deal of maintenance needs on all present buildings but one of the things always needed is a place for kids to participate and to have leisure time."

Once a proposal is considered, according to Father George Riley, vice president for University relations, "a cross section study is done on students, faculty, the inter-college community and the external-college (possible donors) community." One such study, by Marts and Lundy Incorporated, a private firm contracted by the University, was conducted to examine the feasibility of a campaign to construct a sports complex. Sixteen people were interviewed. All are supportive of Villanova but they expressed a concern that the campaign might be too exclusively for athletic facilities.

Capone feels that the University is outstanding in most areas and that such a complex would "tie us in as a first grade university in all aspects."

Austin Offices Slated for Farrell Relocation

By SHARON WINTERS

Villanova is considering a plan to relocate the offices in Austin Hall to the Morris Estate at a projected cost of over one-half million dollars.

Farrell Hall, also known as Dundale, is the site under consideration for the University's offices of development, public relations and alumni affairs.

The projected costs for moving the offices include repairs to the mansion, Farrell, built in 1890. The cost for replacing the coal heating system is expected to be $150,000 and the repairs needed for the roof are estimated to be $47,000. Other costs include: plumbing, $77,300; exterior painting and carpentry, $62,100; interior lighting, $18,800 and other repairs that add to a projected $535,20

The mansion is located on approximately four acres of ground on the west campus.

Out of the projected 38 rooms in Farrell slated for use by the University, four are categorized as bedrooms. One of the bedrooms planned is to be utilized by the vice president of University relations. The other three are to be set aside for use by visiting alumni, Board members, University guests or staff members, in the event of bad weather a staff person may be unable to drive home, for example.

The other 34 rooms are projected for office use, although the plans require additional space for supplies and the like; this space requirement has not been allotted.

If the Austin offices are moved to Farrell, their vacancy will be filled by the department of philosophy, currently located in Vasey.

The current University relation's offices in Austin are considered to be inadequate for both the purposes of maintaining required staff and records. Also, it is felt that the University would be able to attract more support if the offices were located in a less restricted environment.

The estimated cost of renovations for Farrell in fiscal year 1981 is $130,000.

Diplomat Speaks

By DOUGLAS EARL

The Ambassador to the United Nations for Jamaica spoke at the Connelly Center Jan. 30 on the need for "a new" international economic order.

Ambassador Donald Mills said, "a world in which the extremes of affluence and deprivation stand side by side will be an intolerable one for rich and poor."

Commenting on his attendance at the Youth for World Order Conference, Mills said, "Some of the issues that we deal with will not get very far until the people who will have to live in the world face them."

Mills felt that the problems of today will only increase unless there is quick action taken to try to alleviate them. He said that developed and developing nations will both suffer.

Mills said, "Right now there's a greater issue of problems in the world today than there's been in a long time.

"The crisis of inflation. Political problems of all sorts throughout the world. There are those, I included, who feel that there is a quality of perception that is badly needed in this world."

Mills feels the world has changed greatly. He said, "There's a feeling that there is an end of an era. Print is going out of style. There's an electronic and television revolution. Technology, poverty, and the population have grown."

Addressing the build up of the arms race he commented, "The arms race continues to escalate despite the fears of the dangers of WW II. We have not found the means and the wit to convince ourselves of the lunacy of this."

Mills said that no country has a monopoly on world affairs anymore referring to, "The emergence of the third world countries who have gotten their freedom and the emergence of the Soviet Union and China. The power system went through significant changes."

Mills felt that the global community must work together to solve its problems feeling that any differences should be discussed. He said, "If there's a difference, get in a negotiating position where your disagreements are openly known. The purpose of political action is to reconcile."

Mills stressed his belief that the whole world should work together. He said, "Engines of the Western economic system are slowing. The rich part of the world is a diminishing part of the population."

V.U. Receives Grant Towards Renovations

By KIETRYN ZYCHAL

Recently, Villanova University received an $800,000 grant to be used specifically for renovation and improvement of academic facilities.

The grant was made possible by the Glenmede Trust Company and came from the funds of the J. Howard Pew Freedom Trust.

According to Edward A. Moresky, assistant vice-president for development, the Glenmede Trust Company controls over a billion dollars worth of trusts and has allocated $800,000 in grants to Villanova in the recent past.

The Pew grant will be paid in two equal payments over a period of two years.

The renovation projects which will be funded by this trust will be determined by Father President Driscoll and the maintenance department.

Prof Lectures in Poland

By KATHY SCANLON

On a recent trip to Poland, Villanova Professor of Political Science Dr. Jeff Hahn witnessed some of the current social and political problems of the country firsthand.

Dr. Hahn, of Villanova's political science department, was in Poland November 9-16. He was to give lectures on American politics at the University of Lubin and the University of Cracow.

It was coincidental that Dr. Hahn arrived when he did. The people of Poland were waiting for an extremely important decision, due the next day. The decision had to do with a clause that was inserted in the agreement between the worker and the national government. The workers were prepared to strike if the decision went against them.

Hahn was lecturing when the decision came out. It was in favor of the workers position. "The students in the audience broke into applause and hugged each other. It was exciting to be in Poland at that time," said Hahn.

Hahn commented on the current threat of a Soviet invasion in Poland. "It does not seem likely that the Soviet Union will invade. The costs for them far outweight the benefits."

First, in the event of an invasion, Poland would fight back, unlike the Czechs in 1968. They would eventually be defeated, but the Soviets would still lose financially.

Secondly, the Russians hope to arrange a strategic arms limitation agreement with the U.S. through the new administration in Washington. If they invade Poland, there is little chance the agreement will go through.

The Soviet relations with Western Europe are good, and these too would deteriorate in the event of an invasion.

Lastly, the Soviet Union now has troops in China, other parts of the Far East and Afghanistan. If Poland were invaded, extensive numbers of troops would have to be sent there as well and the Soviets just can't afford it.

The Soviet Union would only invade if the unions threatened to overthrow the government or attempted to break away from the Warsaw Pact Organization.

"In short, the Soviet Union doesn't want to invade. As long as the Polish workers don't challenge the formal authority of the PWP (Polish Worker's Party), they will succeed," said Hahn.

The major union, called Solidarity, is lead by Lech Walesa. The members main objection is having to support the expensive habits of the bureaucracy. Poland is in financial debt now and must go through a period of austerity. The union wants the burdens of this austerity to be shared by all members of society, not just the working class.

Dr. Hahn commented that the people were "in remarkably good spirits in their time of tension."

Dr. Hahn finds the future of Poland promising. If the workers succeed "they will change the nature of socialism in that part of the world. The worker's movement is essentially about reforming socialism."

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, in Poland.

Library Conditions Surveyed

By DREW MERRICK

Falvey Memorial Library is rapidly becoming filled to capacity with newly acquired materials.

"I don't know where we are on the list of priorities here at the University, but I do hope we are near the top. The library is rapidly running out of storage space, and something will have to be done about it in the near future," said Rev. Harry A. Cassel, director of the library.

The library, which founded and named in honor of the late Reverend Daniel P. Falvey, has acquired more materials than the original architects had ever thought it would. Added to this problem is the fact that enrollment at the University has increased dramatically in the last ten years.

The total amount of accessioned volumes has more than doubled in the last ten years; from 214,672 in 1968 to 461,600 in 1980. The number of pieces in the audio-visual collection has increased from 97,122 to 296,942; an increase of over 300 percent. "We're going to be forced to start removing desks and chairs to find room for all the equipment," stated Cassel.

Two possibilities are currently being considered to ease the storage problem in the library. They are to build another wing to the library or to build a separate structure near the maintenance building for the sole purpose of storing books and equipment.

At the last University Senate meeting, Senate member Dr. Joseph George said that in his opinion, the University has "badly outgrown" Falvey Library. "The University will have to start taking desks and chairs out of the library unless more storage space is a-bed. The rapidly increasing number of books and periodicals have to be stored somewhere," said George.

"We're going to be forced to start removing desks and chairs to find room for equipment."

Gallery Receives Chagalls

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

The Villanova University Art Gallery, located in the Connelly Center, will be exhibiting two rare lithographs by Marc Chagall, along with a "fascinating series of preparatory states that preceded each (lithograph)," according to Cheryl Leibold, assistant director of the Art Gallery.

The prints entitled, "The Sun Also Rises," feature an oriental potentate embracing a lady of his harem, underneath a red sunset; and "Arabian Nights," which renders the potentate admiring his lady.

The works of art, along with their preliminary states, were donated to this university by Charles C. G. Chaplin of Haverford.

The Connelly Center Cinema will also present a short film on the life of Marc Chagall at 4 p.m. on Friday 16 and 23.

The Department of Art and Art History is also displaying a gift of more than 100 paintings, sculptures and watercolors by artist Frank Stamato. John Castagno, of Philadelphia, donated these.

Brother Richard Cannuli, O.S.A., director of the Art Gallery, feels that "the Main Line has never really had a major college or university gallery with an integrated series of public lectures, hopes to fill this gap in a way that will bring more people into contact with Villanova and its valuable cultural resources." To this end, the Villanova art and art history department, availing itself of a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and cooperating with other colleges, is starting a series of lectures by nationally renowned artists.

Laurie Anderson is the first of these artists to give a presentation in the series. She will give an electronic performance at Rosemont College on February 16 at 8 p.m. in the Lawrence Hall Auditorium.

Hiring Procedure Questioned

about the incident. He said that Deegan told them that there were four objective criteria for the reappointment as resident assistants. "The four criteria he told us were the evaluation of the area coordinator, the student evaluations, an interview with the resident director (Matt Christensen), and an exit interview with the Dean of Men (Allan Wechsler)," said the law student.

The six students claim that these criteria were not followed. The ex-Area Coordinator said that two resident assistants he had positively evaluated were not rehired.

Christensen commented on this by saying, "One of the two law students serving under him (the Area Coordinator) should have been rehired."

The Area Coordinator also claims that he still possesses the student evaluations for the two resident assistants that were law students. "The Dean of Men's office told me to look over them. They never did anything with them," he said.

The ex-resident assistant also claims that student evaluations were not looked at in arriving on a decision. "My student evaluations were good. We were allowed to read them. No one is going to be liked by everyone in the dorm, but on the whole they were very good," he said.

The law students claim that neither Wechsler nor Christensen met with them for an interview at the end of the year.

Deegan defended the University's action with regard to the six law students. "The individual cases varied. Some of them were not doing their job. Others were not given positive evaluations," said Deegan.

The law students met with Dean O'Brien of the Law School about their situation over the summer and at the beginning of the semester last year. "The Dean told us to look at our records and find out if it is a consistent policy of the University not to hire law students as resident assistants," said the ex-Area Coordinator.

"He was afraid that if law students were not hired as resident assistants that it would hurt the law program," he said.

"We met with Deegan and he assured us that there was no policy against hiring law students," he continued. "He asked us to meet individually with Matt Christensen. We felt stronger with all six of us meeting with him at once. That way, if he said anything wrong, there would be all of us there to hear it.

"I continued to call Father Deegan, but he said that he couldn't authorize a group meeting," he continued.

Christensen denied that any request was made to meet with him. "In October, after Father Deegan called me and asked me what I was going to do about some unhappy law students, I said that I would do whatever they wanted," said Christensen.

Both of the law students said that all of the ex-resident assistants requested to see their employment files at the Dean of Men's office.

Christensen said he was unaware of any request by the law students to see their files. "They didn't request to see their files to my knowledge. They would be allowed to see their files," said Christensen.

The law students claim that Dean O'Brien met with Father Deegan two times concerning the matter. "After our first meeting with Deegan, Dean O'Brien met with him. Deegan claimed to him that there was no policy against hiring law students as resident assistants," said the ex-resident assistant.

Deegan also agreed that there is no policy against hiring law students. "We simply look for the best resident assistants possible. We do have law students as resident assistants this year," said Deegan.

"Dean O'Brien thought that we didn't follow the proper procedures, but we did," added Deegan.

Christensen said that there were four law students on the staff this year.

The law students also claim that the University did not give them advance warning of their rehiring decision. The letters notifying the resident assistants of the decision were not mailed until June 30, 1980.

Christensen said, "Our goal is to notify them by the end of the school year. One possible reason for this delay was the fact that Dean Wechsler's mother had passed away in the beginning of June. We would have liked to send the notification earlier," said Christensen.

"When things go bad, they really go bad," added Christensen.

The ex-Area Coordinator claims that he was not notified of his decision until three days before the fall semester. "I feel like this was almost a personal attack," he said.

The ex-Area Coordinator was offered a position as a resident assistant in St. Mary's Hall this year, but he turned this down. "They rehired me as a resident assistant so I wouldn't create a controversy. I turned it down and submitted a letter of resignation. If I was kept under their employment, I would feel loyal to them. I had to leave," he said.

Conference to be Held

By BILL MCKERNAN

The Seventh Annual Conference of Student Affairs Professionals will be held Friday, February 6, in the Connelly Center. The purpose of this meeting, according to its chairman, Father John E. Deegan, O.S.A. is "to meet the changing needs of the student of the 80's."

Attending the conference will be student affairs professionals, graduate students, and professional student personnel from the Southeast Pennsylvania area.

The Conference will consist of two sessions with approximately four workshops in each session. The program begins with registration at 9 a.m. and continues at 10 a.m. with the Keynote address.

Dr. Phyllis Mable, Dean of Student Affairs at Virginia Commonwealth University, will be the keynote speaker. Her topic will be the shift from the liberal arts to career/vocational programs.

The agenda continues with a question and answer period, lunch, and then the start of Session I at 1 p.m.

Some of the special interest topics covered will be: "career development," "residence hall training," "the student consumer," and "the residency of deaf students."

Session II begins at 2:45 p.m. with discussion and workshops involving: "liberal arts marketing," "campus alcohol program," and "evaluating student affairs professionals."

Some of the universities and institutions represented will be: Lock Haven State College, Penn State University, LaSalle College, Millersville State College and Mount Aloysius Junior College.

Deegan is certain the conference will be a success, and stated that he was glad that Villanova was chosen as the site of the meeting. "This will give Villanova recognition," he said. "It will bring professionals to the college campus atmosphere."

How Many More Accidents Will it Take?

Safety Still a Serious Problem

There is also the on-going saga of the safety factors at Villanova. Last year, many students protested campus safety in a rainstorm because they were concerned. The death of a freshman girl crossing the railroad tracks made us realize and care.

The case for the crosswalk over the railroad tracks has continued all year. Last week, many students testified at the PUC hearing discussing the matter.

Many of us, however, fail to remember what caused the case in the beginning. It always seems to take an accident to make us realize there is a problem.

the Villanovan
December 12, 1980

The arguments for campus safety have been heard before. The Villanovan has written in the past about various spots around Villanova which deserve attention. The University is pressing for a crosswalk over the railroad tracks. It seems, though, that nothing ever gets accomplished.

Death, accidents, crashes; whenever someone gets hurt we all think to ourselves that something ought to be done. But it only phases us, and we continue our lives giving it only a passing thought.

Over the past weekend, three people were hit while crossing Lancaster Ave. State and local officials hearing of these incidents seem to think that it is the students' fault: after all, we do not cross at the light; we do not look both ways before we cross; we are not careful enough.

These people, however, do not see cars exceeding the speed limit at the intersection. They do not see cars running the red light. People using this intersection not only see these problems, they must live with them day after day. These recent accidents raise one question; "How long can we live with them?"

A policeman at the scene of one of the accidents reportedly said to a student, "Don't go out there, you'll be next." Apparently Radnor Police also realizes that the corner is dangerous.

The solution to the problem at the corner must be considered. Painting a crosswalk over Lancaster Ave. is obviously not the answer.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and Villanova should investigate long-term answers to this corner. In the meantime, the speed limit on the road could be reduced. Radnor Police could strictly enforce this speed limit and patrol the corner for cars driving through the red light.

On Monday, there was also an accident on the bridge over the railroad tracks on Route 320. The University's case before the Pennsylvania Utility Commission is nearly complete. In their case, the University claimed that the tunnel under the tracks is often impassable, and that the bridge over the tracks is too narrow for pedestrians.

The flooding in the past is certainly proof of the first argument. It should seem obvious that this accident is proof of the second. It will be interesting to see if this accident has any bearing on the PUC decision.

Then again, no one was hurt in the accident. No student was crossing the bridge at the time of the accident, therefore no action is necessary. What more will it take?

Employee Complaint

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this time to publicly bring to light the irrational, unfair, and irreconcilable treatment I received from the inept administrators of the Connelly Center. I was an employee in the Food Services department of the Connelly Center, and the result of my ordeal was my not getting rehired.

On Sunday evening, January 18, the Connelly Center held a meeting for all employees. It just so happens that on that Sunday I was home ill. Not only was I unable to attend the meeting, but I also did not attend any classes on Monday, January 19. Upon my return to campus, I immediately explained my situation to the Assistant Food Services Manager. At this point I thought the problem was cleared up, but on Tuesday when I reported to work, I was told that a doctor's note was a necessity. I had not visited a doctor, yet I still made various attempts to obtain a note. (including a trip to the Villanova Infirmary) But obtaining a note from a doctor which I did not see would be deceitful and wrong in principle, not to mention being virtually impossible.

At this point, I went to visit the Food Services Manager, Gregg Chamra. I thought that a man in his position would be adept in rationally discussing my predicament, but I was terribly mistaken. Instead, I was greeted with doubts concerning my illness and a casual "stop by tomorrow." I stopped by the next day only to hear the same incompetent reply. It was the next day I was told that I was not rehired.

It was surely not my intent to test the system by missing a meeting for which I would have been paid. However the Connelly Center fails to realize this, as well as failing to realize the fact that someone out of their over-manned staff may have been legitimately ill! I am aware of the fact that other employees — even someone who was attending a sporting event in Philadelphia! — did not attend the meeting yet still retained their jobs. Meanwhile, I was victimized after I earnestly and truthfully explained myself.

I enjoyed working, and was a good worker, too. However, I am totally disgusted with the Connelly Center's inability to realize and humanly deal with my situation. Finally, I submitted a formal letter to the Director of the Connelly Center, and heard absolutely nothing in response. This administration leaves much to be desired. This self-acclaimed professional organization proved to me that they are everything but professional.

I would like to thank the Villanovan and its readers for permitting me to openly display my humiliating ordeal with a very incompetent and unprofessional organization.

Sincerely,
Name Withheld

Fraternity Responses

To the Editor:

Contrary to popular opinion, fraternities are not responsible for all the ills of the Campus.

Your reporting of a scurrilous remark that the recent break-in at the Registrar's Office might be a "pledging prank" is offensive. Consider an auto accident story blaming "women drivers", or, indeed, your own story being blamed on the "second floor Dougherty mind-set against fraternities".

Further, would you describe Brother Ruhollah's recent high-spirited activities as "pranks"?

May I suggest a greater sensitivity to sensibilities and the avoidance of stigmatization by stereotype?

Oliver Ludwig, Chemistry
Moderator & Brother of Zeta Rho

P.S. Re the insursion at the Registrar's: my first thought would be not for what is missing but rather for what has been added.

Dear Editor:

Last Friday the Villanovan carried a front page story concerning a break in at the Office of the Registrar. In this article Captain Joseph Cunnane of Villanova Security was quoted as saying that maybe the break-in was some type of "pledging prank." The fact is that at the time of the break-in, not one of Villanova's fraternities were sponsoring any type of pledging at all. Pledging does not start until February 10.

It is most unfortunate that comments such as Captain Cunnane's can give Villanova's Greeks a bad name. In the case of the break-in at the Registrar, it is very obvious that pledging was uninvolved. However this statement illustrates the readiness of some people to accuse the Greeks for everything that goes wrong. It should be noted that many fraternities are involved in public service projects. Fraternities are also at the core of the social life at Villanova.

Since there have been problems with pledging in the past, the fraternities have initiated many reforms. The Office of Student Activities and the Inter-Fraternity Council closely monitor all pledging activities. The Greeks realize that they are not perfect, but they are trying. When there is a problem, the fraternities try to stand up to them and correct them. However, they do not like to be unjustly accused.

Sincerely,
John Jackson,
Inter-Fraternity
Council President

Dear Editor,

This letter is in reference to your article of January 30 "Burglary Occurs In Registrars Office". In the article Captain Joseph Cunnane of security was quoted as attributing the break-in to a "pledging prank". With all due respect to Capt. Cunnane his remark was totally unwarranted as pledging for all fraternities and sororities does not begin until February 10. But what is even more disturbing is the fact that the Captain's comment exemplifies perfectly the general attitude of the administration. It seems that the fraternities are always the first to be blamed whenever something goes wrong and yet are rarely acklnowledged for the good work they do.

The Greek organizations are a great asset to the Villanova community. It would indeed be a great loss if the spirit which makes this group what it is was destroyed by an uncooperative administration. Our "Villanova experience" should be one upon which we can look with fond memories. I see no reason why both sides cannot work together to achieve this common goal.

John Staunton, President

Plaque Stolen

Dear Editor:

For ten years now, a memorial plaque has been exhibited on the central wall panel of the Library Card Catalogue room. It was never nailed down. No one ever thought that it had to be nailed down. It should have been. The plaque is now stolen. The plaque is the Thomas J. Mentzer Memorial Award plaque. In part, it celebrated the contributions made to Villanova by a very unique faculty member, Thomas Mentzer, before he died in a fatal accident in October, 1966. The plaque contained the names of the Mentzer Memorial Award winners during the last ten years. The Award was a very special award because it also celebrated a unique energy in many Villanova students.

The special nature of the Award derived from the special qualities of the men and women identified on the plaque. They were the best in their years at Villanova of a special breed of student. They were the best among that silent minority who gave of themselves selflessly to help the disadvantaged, the crippled, the homeless, the mentally disturbed, and ghetto internee children. St. Edmund's Home, state institutions, center city schools, the National Shut-In Society briefly catalogues some of the places that these students have distinguished themselves and Villanova. The single qualification for nomination was, and still is, that this dignity extended to others be performed voluntarily. The winners, whose names and deeds the plaque memorialized, were the best of our Villanova community quietly in service to humanity. Such service as this, that comes from the bone marrow, cannot be bought or bribed in today's market. It is totally individual, totally private, totally one's own; it celebrates both the person of he who gives and he who receives the charity and the compassion. Their service exhibited one of the few things that our society has left to hope in . . . Christian love. And these gifts have been demeaned by the stupid vulgarity of a petty theft.

It is ironic that the very best energies within our community be insulted by one aspect of the worst energies, the vandal's prankisterism. The motives that drove the Award winners, when contrasted to the motives prompting the thief, defines an almost incalculable polarity between maturity and infantilism. But the irony does one thing. It sets in relief the inestimable value of the grace and charity that all those volunteers to social service bestow, both past and present. Neither theft nor insult can sully the greatness of giving which the Award winners have established as a silent tradition here at Villanova. The thief, or thieves, have sullied themselves. In basic language, they have sinned against their own natures.

What is even more painful is the need before me, now, to apologize to the wife of Thomas Mentzer and to his two daughters, students here, now, at Villanova for the failed respect which the Villanova Community, as community, must endure along with them.

My only plea is that the one who has stolen the plaque will return it as quietly and as surreptitiously as it was taken and that he or she put in four months with a Big Brother, Big Sister program conducted on campus, for the refreshing change.

Sincerely,
Patrick J. Nolan

Library Comment

To the Editor:

"If you want to know how good a college is, spend an hour in its library." Not to see how many books it has or how impressive the facilities are, but to see how people act there. Nothing is so important to the quality of your education as the university library . . . textbooks, classes, professors, buildings, parties and great basketball teams are just accessories to your learning. The library is where serious study begins, where a single book teaches far more than the most brilliant professor can say in a semester, where the world's great minds are available to you.

You are harmed when students chat in Falvey's reading areas — their conversations interfere with your studying, and their rudeness has made VU students unwelcome at many good nearby libraries (including your Law Library.) Who suffers?

You are the victim when students damage or deface library holdings. Instead of spending a few pennies for photocopying, a moron rips five sheets out of a book . . . and the library has to replace the 35 dollar book. Who pays?

You are the loser when someone steals a book: you can't read it; your prof can't use it to improve your class; and instead of adding another title to its collection, the library must buy a replacement (at a much higher price). Who's injured?

Since graduating from Villanova, I've been in many other college libraries. Sadly, in none have so many students been so inconsiderate of others, so ignorant of why a library exists. Connelly Center was built for your relaxation and social life; Falvey is for your studying. Connelly was badly needed, and so now is a new attitude toward the Library. I wish VU students well; therefore I ask you to care about what happens in the library. It largely determines the worth of your degree.

Intramural Apology

Dear Editor:

We, the Brother of Delta Tau Delta, would like to extend our apologies to the Intramural Department. In the past there has been some friction between these two fine organizations. With this new season of basketball dawning upon us, we hope that the lines of communication will be open to dispel any problems before they arise. With the spirit of competition in mind, we look forward to not only a successful season, but a new and successful relationship with the Intramural Department.

Towing Problem

Dear Editor:

In light of the epidemic proportions that towings on campus have reached, I feel compelled to write the following letter in an effort to suggest an alternative to the drastic action that the University takes in alleviating the parking problem.

I must begin by saying that in spite of rules and regulations formulated by this institution (ones that are made in an effort to promote an air of order and to protect the student), the University is not being, rather should not be run for the means of itself as it currently is, but should be run to the benefit of those who support it (both financially and spiritually) the most — the students.

However, just as in the Middle Ages, Villanova University apparently wishes to establish some sort of theocracy; a system whereby they control the social and intellectual aspects of humanity, in addition to the education they are supposedly providing. The only education such a system fosters is one of contempt for a system, its standards and, in general, everything it stands for. But that is not the issue here.

What is at hand is the problem mentioned in the opening paragraph. It is the issue of the inconvience caused by one's car being towed, the inconvenience of a half-hour ride to reclaim a car, the inconvenience of a $35 fine. Which is the worse? Who's to say. We all have time, but after paying tuition, room/board and fees, we do not all have the money. I am not trying to say that it is not inconvient for a faculty member or administrator to find themselves without a parking space. What I am trying to point out is that there is a more judicious way of handling the parking situation. The addition of parking spaces is one (has the University ever considered a faculty parking garage? Outrageous? Maybe, but the space would have to be found or made before it could be implemented. Or maybe the University could establish a system of citing a person with the violation, using it either as a warning that towing will be done on the vehicle in the future or imposing a more reasonable fine (such as ten or 15 dollars).

If the University wishes to hold true to its Christian values (remember forgiveness, patience, understanding, compassion) then it must step back and take a look at the problem at hand with more reason, not with vehemence and contempt.

Name one File

Lennon Again . . .

Dear Editor:

I wish to reply to Michael J. Gormley's letter in the January 30 issue of The Villanovan. First I would like to compliment Mr. Gormley on a valid correction he pointed out in my letter of January 16. I realized after I had submitted my letter that my intention was to communicate. It is essential that one be aware that senseless deaths occur, rather than senseless deaths are essential.

However, Mr. Gormley, you were very mistaken when you accused me of being a hasty judge of people. I am not acquainted with Miss Coyle as you are, and thus have no basis to judge her as an individual. My comments were strictly directed to her response in the "On Campus" section of the December issue of The Villanovan. I do realize Mr. Gormley, that when one is questioned for this segment they do not have an opportunity for any prior preparation to assist them in answering, and thus, must attempt to communicate their views clearly in a short period of time. Of course, some people are better equipped to handle this pressure than others, and if one feels he or she would not like to be subjected to such pressure they are not obligated to respond. In my four years at Villanova I have not come across a response that disturbed me as Miss Coyle's "I didn't think anyone could kill someone in cold blood like that," which prompted me to acknowledge it. I am surely sympathetic to Miss Coyle if she did not adequately convey what she intended, but considering her answer I believe my inference was justified.

Mr. Gormley, I respect your right to judge me on my expression of opinion, but I do believe you overstepped that right with your comment that Miss Coyle probably has a better hold on the real world than I. I do not know you Mr. Gormley, and am therefore curious as to the criterian on which you based that statement. Perhaps in the future you should not be as fast in making the accusation that another is a hasty judge of people when you are guilty of it yourself.

Mr. Gormley, it is commendable that you take the risk of contradicting yourself while rushing to the defense of your friend, yet it leaves me to assume that you are more concerned with Miss Coyle's behalf than she, because as of yet, she has not replied in her own interest. Not intending to belabor this issue, although I do feel strongly about it, I would hope that Miss Coyle is responsible enough to speak for herself and if necessary, set the record straight.

Sincerely,
Anne E. Healy '81

Because of the recent accidents involving students being hit by motorists on Lancaster Avenue, the Villanovan asked students: When crossing Lancaster Avenue, do you use the traffic light on the corner or do you run between cars when there is a clearing in the middle of the road? Is crossing without using the light safe?

"I never use the corner. I just run across, because I don't want to run all the way to the corner. It's not really safe, but it is easier."

Cathy Brinbrauer, Freshman Nursing

"I use the light most of the time. It is safer. The cars come right up to the line where they are supposed to stop and I would rather not run out in front of them."

Douglas McCarthy, Junior History

"It all depends. If the light is my way, I use it, but if not and there is a big opening, I run between traffic. It is not really safe, but I only use it if there is a big opening."

Tom Griffith, Freshman Mechanical Engineering

"I never cross Lancaster, but if I did, I would use the light. It is obviously a problem."

Christine Muller Asst. Program Director, Union

"I run in between traffic. I hate waiting by the light forever, so I run across. It is really dangerous and something should be done."

Carlos Roca, Freshman Finance

"I cross both ways, but with the cars going back and forth all the time, I think we should have a bridge there."

Kathy Kunze, Senior Nursing

"I just run from the parking lot and run across Lancaster. It takes too long to wait for the lights. I've almost been hit a couple of times, but it takes too long to cross at the light."

Chris Macaulay, Senior Accounting

"I try to use the light as much possible. I feel there is a potent problem there, but I really do n see any problem when there are cars coming."

Phil Eagan, Se Marketi

"I use the light, because with so many cars coming, it is dangerous."

Suzanne Jenkins, Sophomor Accountin

"Once I tried to cross without t light, but you could get killed ther so I always try to use the light. I not safe at all to cross against t traffic. You should always use t light."

Skating Fad Rolls

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

It took a change in management and a legal tangle, as well as a major investment and construction job to turn a rather dilapidated ice rink into a glittering new roller skating center all ready to exploit the current boom in roller skating and the proximity of Villanova University.

That is the story behind Radnor Rolls, the area's newest recreational facility, located on the far side of Howard Johnsons in the building formerly called Radnor (ice) Rink.

Radnor Rolls opened just before Christmas, after over a month of ice-skating-to-roller-skating conversion work. The picture it gives you now is a big change from that of a year ago when it was Radnor Rink. Gone is the ice. Gone also are the bleachers, the chicken wire, the chilly climate and the eternal puddles on the cement around the rink. The building is barely recognizable as the same place where the Villanova Ice Cats once played.

The skating floor is now hardwood maple; harder to land on than ice, but the best roller skating surface available. The old glaring fluorescent lights have mostly been replaced with new glaring neon disco-style lights which blink and shift in time to the music played through a vast array of speakers by the D.J. in his center rink soundbooth.

The entire area off the skating floor is carpeted and, for now at least, is very clean. This, apparently, is an important point. Why? P.R. of course!

According to Radnor Rolls manager and part owner Rick Forster, roller skating is getting over a severe image problem. Six to eight years ago, says Forster, roller skating was done in sleazy, dark skating halls where various types of undesirables would hang out.

After the disco craze, though, a lot of acts got cleaned up and roller skating was one of them. What followed was an increase in adult and young adult interest in "roller disco." That triggered a corresponding increase in investment into what certainly looked like a highly lucrative market, and Forster and several others took over the lease to the ice rink in Radnor.

Presto! Radnor Rolls.

It wasn't that easy, however. Seldom do things ever seem to get done in Radnor without the obligatory legal problems. Officials in Radnor, which Forster called "a very political town," objected to the proposed conversion from ice rink to roller rink. The reason was zoning. Forster and his associates emerged successful from that particular morass, but not without stipulations. The new center may not be referred to as a "disco" or "roller disco."

The business clearly has an off-color history to put behind it. Forster thinks that the only way to do that is to sink enough money into building a respectable place, so that even a nervous mother would happily deposit her offspring in it, and spend he did.

The exotic skating floor ran $90,000; the lights and sound system cost another $75,000. In addition, there was extensive interior and exterior redecorating, some of which isn't even finished yet. All told, the price tag for the operation came to almost $500,000. Plainly enough, the endeavour is expected to succeed.

Obviously, a major portion of the target market for Radnor Rolls are Villanova University students, and considerable efforts are being made to attract them. So far the results have been very good.

On Friday, January 23, a Villanova fraternity, LXA, held one of Radnor Rolls' "After Hours Parties." Much to the surprise of the people at Radnor Rolls, a crowd of about 500 turned out. It was an educational experience. If there were any doubts about the advantages of having a roller rink this close to Villanova, they are gone now. Also there will probably be some limit on the size of parties from now on, perhaps 300 people.

Meanwhile, the Villanova Cheerleaders held a party at Radnor Rolls on Monday, February 2,

Draft Registration Stirs Concern

By MIKE GIAMMARCO

The dread of American males has once again cast its shadow over the land. This time around though, the dread has been overshadowed by the quizzical term of registration. From a pamphlet published by the U.S. government, in attempt of clarifying the situation is made:

"There are no plans at this time for a draft. No one has been drafted in the U.S. since 1972. A draft could not begin unless the Congress decides that it is needed. The purpose of registration is to get the names and addresses of men who might be called in the event a draft should become necessary, as in a national emergency. With this file of names and addresses, processing could begin quickly and smoothly."

The enactment of this program has stirred the emotions of qualified males across the U.S. Post office rallies of the sit-in sort, anti-draft propaganda, and even a novel written by a Californian (part II of this article), are reminiscent of the anti-Vietnam movement.

A question arises: "Why worry, it's only precautionary. Isn't it?" Most anti-draft demonstrators deal with that question by saying: Never in the history of the U.S. was a draft not immediately followed by a Congressional declaration of war.

A second argument used by the pro-registration movement: "This isn't a draft, it's only a registration." To provide a counterpoint to this argument, one must delve deeper into the situation.

A recent Congressional subcommittee has found the condition of the American voluntary armed forces to be: "Inadequate, understaffed, under supplied, and not combat ready."

A few statistics also aroused governmental concern: thirty percent of recruits are of the lowest acceptable mental category, and a disproportionate (over 50 percent) amount are minorities. Apparently, the U.S. government has concluded that the voluntary armed forces are not working, despite the multi-million dollar ad campaigns that state, "Be all that you can be!" and "Go Navy!" The nations' defense has deteriorated to a "less than combat ready" state in the opinion of our government leaders.

The roots of this gradual disintegration are planted in the early seventies. Defense budget cutbacks as the result of a peace treaty with the North Vietnamese, left the country with a "defense skeleton crew." The draft was abolished, and a volunteer program was instituted.

In peace time, it is quite typical for the nation to demobolize and substantially lighten its military prowess. Due to the incredible public opposition to the Vietnam war, beaurocrats were driven slightly overboard. Part of Jimmy Carter's 1976 campaign platform included cuts in military spending, which he managed to carry out. This left the nation's defenses in an even more depressed state.

It is certainly unlike Congress to so thoroughly review the state of our defenses, most probably because they are afraid of what they would find.

Other factors escalating the hysteria are the Soviet Union's technological advances, its indisputable military superiority, and recent aggression in the Middle East. The U.S. is losing face while slipping into the number two spot.

At the moment, the government knows where its priorities lie. But the strength of a nation is significantly determined by its ability to cope with the world and its turmoil. Searching for alternative energy sources, and retaining a respect for human rights through diplomatic maneuvers and peaceful negotiations takes time. The U.S. could easily be caught short in the midst of its negotiations. The U.S. government believes that the only realistic way to preserve our national interests is to be ready.

H.O.T. Expands Program

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

There is an organization on campus that is concerned about every student on campus. If you were to get in touch with them, you'd be the most important person to them at the moment. They just want to talk to you and offer help if you need it. Sounds pretty amazing, doesn't it? Well, that's the function of Help on Tap.

They don't try to play Ann Landers, as one might think. As expressed by member Tess Wojcik, "We don't give advice. Our main objective is to help people face and solve their own problems."

The Help on Tap hotline is open from 6 p.m. to midnight each night, and 3 p.m. to midnight on Saturdays.

"It doesn't have to be an earth-shaking situation," mentioned member Jane Dan. "You can call even if you just want to talk. We're great listeners!"

All phone calls are kept strictly confidential.

Every member is a certified "peer counselor." They attended a six week training program run by Marcie Smith of the Delaware County Council of Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

The program consisted of exercises in which they learned to relate to each other and placed them in different telephone situations to prepare them for their work with Help on Tap.

The organization is just starting to expand this semester. Workshops on alcoholism and drug abuse are planned to better prepare the members for all situations they may encounter.

Dave Lauser explained, "Last semester, we were just in the planning stages. Now, we're putting what we learned into effect."

Now there are over forty members manning the phones every night, and attending meetings every Wednesday in the Connelly Center.

All the members work voluntarily, and just recently did their moderator Tess Greaney obtain permission to give one credit for their work in the organization.

If you would like to find out more about Help on Tap, stop by their office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. If you have a problem, or "just want to talk," give them a call at 645-7232. They're all there to "take good care of each other," as their motto expresses so well.

Award Presented

By KIMBERLY HANCHEVER

Richard Lagerveld, a senior psychology major at Villanova University, received the Thomas J. Mentzer award, given to the student who most dedicates him/herself to the service of others. The award carries on the tradition of Thomas J. Mentzer, a man who was devoted to community work in the Philadelphia area.

Lagerveld, throughout his years at Villanova, has served as a volunteer at Haverford State Hospital where he works especially with young men between the ages of 16-20 years, in an effort to rehabilitate them.

He has also worked as a volunteer counselor at Mercy High School in Philadelphia, helping students overcome learning disabilities. Lagerveld comments, "My first problem is to get the 9th grade boys to be relaxed and then I just do my best to keep them on the right tract."

The Thomas J. Mentzer award was initiated by members of the English and history departments in memory of Thomas J. Mentzer, who has been described by James J. Murphy of the English department as a selfless man devoted to the service of disadvantaged persons. Mentzer, a respected member of Villanova's facility, was killed in an automobile accident in 1969.

Contributions funding this award were donated by members of the faculty.

Nominations are welcomed from faculty and students who are aware of prospective nominees, and may be submitted to James J. Murphy or Patrick Nolan of the English department or James N. Bergsma of the history department beginning March 1. The award includes $150 and a plaque.

Situation Reviewed

By BRADD BOXMAN

"The situation with me and my family hasn't changed, despite in general it becomes worse and worse." These were the discouraging words I received in a recent letter from Villanova's adopted refusnik, Sasha Yakir.

It was one year ago at this time that I returned from the Soviet Union after an emotional 10 days that left me physically and spiritually drained. My partner and I had secretly visited with over 45 refusniks (persons who are refused exit visas from the USSR) and heard tales of their harassment by KGB agents ranging from mental torture to physical persecution. One year later the situation for Jews in the Soviet Union hasn't changed and it appears to be getting worse. Before I share with you the most recent letter from Sasha, allow me to update the present refusnik situation in the USSR.

Emigration figures show an alarming 57 percent decrease in the number of Jews granted permission to leave the USSR between 1979 and 1980. 1979 saw 51,600 Jews leave for freedom while in 1980 only 22,000 were granted exit visas. At the same time the number of requests has increased, thereby adding dramatically to the already large number of people waiting to be reunited with relatives.

This sharp decline may be attributed to the severing of diplomatic and economic relations with the Soviet government in response to the Afghanistan invasion that took place one year ago. It may also be attributed to the parochial attitude of the Soviets in trying to prove to the world that no international agreements, such as the review of the Helsinki accords in October, will bind them to any standard of human rights.

In a sense, by arresting the well-known refusnik, Victor Brailovsky on the eve of the Helsinki conference in Madrid, the Soviets were saying, "We will treat our Jews in any manner we so choose, despite our signature on these accords."

Just recently, it has been learned that the Soviets have cracked down on any and all Jewish educational and cultural activities.

Finally, as a description of the personal anguish suffered by many refusniks, I must inform you that a 17-year-old refusnik in Moscow, Shmuel Lanosman, died recently from a rare form of leukemia after repeatedly being denied permission to see advanced medical attention outside of the Soviet Union.

The letter that appears below dated January 3, 1981, is in response to a letter I sent to Sasha by way of two students who have just recently returned from a mission similar to mine. The sweater Sasha mentions is the Villanova sweatshirt we gave to him last year in Moscow. April 23 refers to the date and time we have arranged to speak to each other by phone as an integral part of this year's Free Sasha Day activities. Note that he says that he will be there to receive the call, just as he was last year when the Soviets refused to let our call go through. Finally, his mention of the jeans refers to the gift we sent from Villanova to Sasha via the two students.

Dear Brad d,

How are you? I was really moved by your warm letter. Thank you very much for the fantastic job you are doing trying to help. I'll always be your debtor. I remember your visit very clearly, — it's so pity that you couldn't stay here longer! The sweater is a great help in the cold. When I put it on thoughts of my Philadelphia friends come into my mind and I miss you all!

April 23 is ok, but I think these swines will not let us talk; anyway I'll be there. Lev (Remember him?) is aleady in Israel; maybe you will meet him. Situation with me and my family haven't changed, despite in general it becomes worse and worse.

Thank you again, this time for the jeans. It's 3" large for me, but anyway it perfectly fits my father whose size is exactly 34".

I still hope to see you in Israel, Bradd, although it seems so improbable in the nearest future. Now I'm trying to apply for the permission to go to Brandeis. Maybe it will help, and anyway it will force them to review my case.

Brad I'm looking forward to seeing you.

Take care, brother

Love,
Sasha

On Wednesday, February 25, a group of students will go to Washington, D.C., to lobby on behalf of Sasha and Soviet Jews. 1981-82 Resident Assistant Program

A Resident Assistant is. . .

. . .a student staff member in a university residence hall. A Resident Assistant has a number of job responsibilities which include serving as an advisor to residents and student groups, planning activities, enforcing rules and policies, serving as a resource and referral person, and fulfilling assigned administrative duties. Successful Resident Assistants are highly committed, enthusiastic, individuals with good communication skills. They must be open and flexible as well as demonstrate an ability to work well with many types of people. Resident Assistants are from diverse backgrounds. If this sounds interesting so far, read on!

Eligible Persons. . .

. . .are graduate and professional school students, and undergraduate juniors and seniors. Candidates must be available for the academic year. Prior experience in a university group living environment or a similar experience is desirable.

Remuneration. . .

. . .of the Resident Assistant position is in the form of room and board.

All Interested Students. . .

. . .should attend a Resident Assistant information meeting to obtain information about the position and the selection process. The meetings will be held in living areas on the following dates:

Good Counsel	2nd floor lounge	Mon.	Feb. 16	4:00
Stanford	2nd floor lounge	Mon.	Feb. 16	6:00
Simpson, O'Dwyer, Alumni, St. Rita's living areas	Bryn Mawr Rm Connelly Cen.	Tues.	Feb. 17	4:00

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN

Singin' in the Rain spoofs the glorious days of early Hollywood, when the advent of talkies made new careers and demolished a few old ones. "Just about the best Hollywood musical of all times."

shown in the cinema at 7:30 p.m.

". . . extraordinarily exuberant, always youthful, joyously indestructible. Although it's no longer quite the discovery it once was, it has the freshness of a live performance in the theater, which, I suppose, is another way of saying it seems unique. Singin' in the Rain is an original and I'm at liberate to attempt to analyze it as I would be to take a clock apart. I'm not sure I'd be able to put all the pieces back in the right places. The most important thing is that it works just as well today as it did twenty-three years ago. Maybe better. . . . Stepping Singin' in the Rain has nothing to do with nostalgia or with sentimentality. It is, simply stated, a Hollywood masterpiece."

'Nova Comes Under 'Godspell'

By IRENE KING

Godspell, the well-known musical depicting St. Matthew's gospel, was performed at Villanova by the New Jersey Theatre Ensemble on January 30-31. The long-running Broadway musical, which enacts Matthew's account of Jesus' life within a modern framework complete with allusions to contemporary politics, jargon and humor — is a unique production for each group who performs it. Though the music, lyrics and message remain the same for each show, the external trappings, jokes etc., are subject to change at the performers' discretion. The New Jersey Theatre Ensemble, comprised mainly of high school through college-age actors and actresses, presented their own unique performance of Godspell by revamping some of the humor and comic routines and substituting their own contemporary adaptations. For the audience as a whole, their rendition of Godspell was a success — there was frequent laughter and many smiling faces.

A special feature of the show was Kathi Iannacone, a Villanova sophomore who was a member of the cast and sang By My Side in solo, during Act II. Kathi, a Sheehan resident, is avidly interested in acting and hence became involved with the Theatre Ensemble this summer. Because of her association with the company, she was instrumental in having the ensemble perform at Villanova under the sponsorship coordinator Cindy Segal of the Cultural Arts Committee

Those who tended had the option of viewing only the play on Friday night by purchasing reasonably priced tickets ($20 per couple) for the combination dinner-theatre performance on Saturday evening. While the appealing prospect of a delicious dinner in addition to the show led many people to attend Saturday, they may have unfortunately viewed an inferior performance due to sound difficulties. The cinema reportedly condemned the actor's voices and the music on Friday evening far more clearly than did the Radnor-St. Davids rooms on Saturday.

The audience as a whole seemed to thoroughly enjoy the performance. For a group of professional guild of actors, their age and experience, Godspell was well done. There were many original, clever and funny bits and routines in the musical which were quite effective. For this reason the audience who may have had the opportunity to see the Broadway production when it toured several years ago, this rendition of Godspell may have been a disappointment. At times it seemed that the message of the gospel was lost in the overabundance of jokes and general rowdiness of the performers; it sometimes seemed that making the audience laugh was the primary focus, not communicating the words and philosophy of Jesus Christ in an enjoyable, understandable, down-to-earth fashion — Making the audience laugh might be a secondary advantage or aid to the means of getting the message

Mark Piro in Coffeehouse

By KIM KINGSLAND

Usually, an evening of free entertainment is restricted to television viewers. However, for those who were fortunate enough to be present at St. Rita's Chapel on the evening of January 29th, Mark Piro proved that there are far more enjoyable economical diversions than the tube.

The coffeehouse featured the senior electrical engineering major in a solo act, and the responses of the capacity house strongly suggested that Mark can more than hold his own as an entertainer. Self-taught on mandolin, guitar, and fiddle, Mark expertly picked his way through a repertoire spanning from Dylan to Yes, with some traditional folk included along the way. Overcoming an arbitrarily hissing heating system (to which the star responded, "Take it, radiator!"), Mark proved that one need not be new-waved or rocked out of his socks by monolithic amps to appreciate music and talent.

The high points of the show merely emphasized Mark's immense talent: many were self-written; all impeccably rendered. Delivering his own arrangement of the traditional Is It True What They Say About Dixie?, Mark immediately captured the attention and appreciation of the audience, which remained his for the remainder of the all too short evening. Bromberg's Mississippi Blues, with its evocative strains, was also done justice; additionally, Dave Van Ronk's Nickel-Penny Blues provided Mark the opportunity to combine his guitar expertise with an innate good humor.

However, the true test of the artist is his originality, and Mark aced this trial masterfully with his compositions. Good Man Bad, and Blue Moon, two Piro tunes, shone as stellar moments. The bright, catchy Mandolin Deal was another forum in which Mark was able to communicate his original sense of humor. Finally, the incontrovertible climax of the special show was the self-penned Four Verses and Me and You, an instrumental reminiscent of the finest of guitarists.

Mark, a veteran of several local bands, has his roots in folk; yet, this repertoire of unfamiliar (to most) songs proved refreshing. As he said, "You can get up there and play Neil Young all night, and the audience will be happy. But it's a lot more credible when you can fall back on your bases and create your own contributions." This was certainly accomplished, hallmarking the musician as one of Villanova's most promising talents. While he plans to pursue an engineering career, he has recorded a studio tape which is as impressive as his live per-

Gallagher: Campus Goo

By VICKY PARENTE

Bits of apple and howls of delight flew as Gallagher, the bizarre comedian of Sledge-o-matic fame, brought his wry brand of humor and weird bag of tricks to the Villanova Center for two shows on Monday night sponsored by the Union.

Gallagher groupies who have steeled themselves to sit through many a dismal Mike Douglas and Merv Griffin show just to catch the comic's act were not disappointed since Gallagher incorporated many of his zany props into his shows Monday night door and the Popeil Pocket L each made an appear however, some audience mem were upset that the comi hadn't brought along his Galla doll.

The highlight of the evenin no doubt Gallagher's classic off on the Veg-o-matic mercial, using his own pro Sledge-o-matic. The black-cl comic brought the ominous down on the pie plates conta the apple with deadly accu shouting, "Voila, instant

Build Freedom of Choice

By BILL CLARK

Even in the worst of times, some people always seem capable of profiting. After all, Ronald Reagan used the state of the economy to get elected, oil companies continue to reap profits, and Milton Friedman wrote the best-seller Free to Choose: A Personal Statement.

Friedman's book, co-authored by his wife Rose, has led to a monthly television series and columns in Newsweek magazine. Free to Choose is an attempt to offer the solution to our economic problems. Friedman addresses every problem from over-taxation to education. Instead of proposing new solutions, his book merely rehashes old ideas in a style capable of being understood by the general public.

In fact, one feels like the book is written from the tomb of Adam Smith. Friedman constantly quotes Smith as proof of virtually every major argument he presents. On the first page of the introduction he states, "One set of ideas was embodied in The Wealth of Nations, a masterpiece that established Scotsman Adam Smith as the father of modern economics."

In discussing our societal problems, Friedman seems to blame government for every one. Free to Choose is a well-timed work in the sense that it capitalizes on the general political mood of the country. At some points, in fact, the book begins to sound like a political, rather than economic piece.

Free to Choose is too quick to offer clear-cut solutions and speaks of issues in too simplistic a fashion. Friedman's panaceas begin to sound like a political platform, rather than an economic work capable of standing up to scholarly scrutiny.

Being a Nobel-Prize winning economist, Friedman is certainly qualified to address economic issues. Even though Free to Choose does contain most of his economic views, Friedman is locked in a battle to fill nearly 300 pages. Therefore, Friedman presents many examples which add little or nothing to the reader's understanding.

It is not until page 252 that Friedman presents the core of his economic views; "Inflation is primarily a monetary phenomenon, produced by a more rapid increase in the quantity of money than in output."

A large portion of Free to Choose addresses issues which are beyond Friedman's economic prowess. For instance, he spends one chapter each on discussing solutions to the education system and the housing shortage. Yet, these two issues are more than merely economic.

Friedman's views on the environment are particularly interesting. He proposes a taxation upon environmental violators instead of preventing environmental damage. "Most economists agree that a far better way to control pollution than the present method of specific regulation and supervision is to introduce market discipline by imposing effluent charges. For example, instead of requiring firms to erect specific kinds of waste disposal plants to achieve a specified level of water quality in water discharged into a lake or river, impose a tax of a specified amount per unit of effluent discharged," says Friedman.

If Milton Friedman confines his thoughts to mere economic matters, he is definitely a qualified spokesman. His work is studied at colleges and universities throughout the world. When Friedman extends his thoughts into the political arena, however, his work is as interesting and as thought-provoking as that of any other politician.

Milton Friedman, author of "Free To Choose."

plesauce!" The twinkle in his eye mocked his sensuous tone as he warned, "The Avon Lady may ring your chimes, but me and this hammer just knock — one time."

Don't get me wrong though, Gallagher's act isn't all props and sight gags. On the contrary, he had some pretty good solutions for the problems we face everyday. To get the oil we need from the Arabs he suggested that we should simply bore a hole in the earth and "suck it out from under them." "After all," he reasoned "It's not their oil, they're just closer to it."

Discussing crazy drivers on the road, Gallagher suggested that the first ones we should get rid of are the cops. According to the comic, cops only do two things: go the speed limit — which just slows everybody down, and chase speeders — which increases the number of speeders on the road.

As the grand finale, Gallagher gave the Sledge-o-matic treatment to a huge watermelon. I think that the audience would have preferred it if he had used the hammer on the opening act, Artie Traum.

Making Movies

By AMY MacLACHLAN

A Portrait of Guitarist As A Young Man.

Making Movies, the latest release by Dire Straits, combines delicately refined music with pleasantly "different" vocals. Unlike the thundering energy put out by most of this group's contemporaries, DireStraits has produced a very agreeable adult sound. Mark Knopfler's lead vocals are the trademark this group relies on to distinguish itself from any other band. His voice is capable of arousing gentle feelings but at the same time does not get lost when it must keep up with more powerful backup rhythms.

An interesting addition to the musical background on this album is Roy Bittan, of the E Street Band, on keyboards. His overwhelming talent adds to the delicacy and forms a successful marriage with Knopfler's vocals. Even though the first two albums lacked that something needed to give this band that special push, they seem to have found it with Bittan.

Highlights of Side One include an original interpretation of the classic Romeo and Juliet love affair. The typical boy meets girl, falls in love and loses her. The difference is in the fact that she "falls for chains of silver," and forgets the way they used to be. Knopfler makes the statement very successfully and it is obvious that love is not enough for this Juliet: "Juliet when we made love you used to cry/you said I love you like the stars above I'll love you till I die/and there's a place for us you know the movie song/when you gonna realize it was just that the time was wrong Juliet?"

The FM hit Skateaway, captures the taste of the city with a very optimistic flair. Everyone has always wanted to be this free spirit who skates gracefully around the city with, "no fears alone at night she's sailing through the crowd/ in her ears the phones are tight and the music's playing loud."

Side two begins with Expresso Love. It is a very elaborate conceit comparing a high-class lover to a cup of good coffee. "I don't want no sugar in it.." The music behind the lyrics keep the quick tempo and spotlights Bittan's piano once again.

Solid Rock provides an interesting pun. The music stands out on the album as the only real traditional rock and roll arrangement, while at the same time the lyrics are reminiscent of Harry Belefonte's calipso single, "House built on a rock foundation, it will stand, oh yes." Knopfler sings, "well a house of card/was never built for shock../now two solid rocks two solid blocks/you know they're gonna stick together/I wanna live on solid rock"

To sum up with a general opinion; this is one of THE albums of the year. Buy it without hesitation.

'Ello' Turns The Tower To Jello

Elvis Pumps It Up

By AMY MacLACHLAN

Last Friday night, Elvis Costello and The Attractions performed for a sold-out crowd at the Tower Theater. As an entertainer Costello surrounds himself with an aura of professionalism. Unfortunately, due to his almost overnight success 7 years ago, he lacks that valuable characteristic of humility that makes so many other performers endearing to their audiences. His show lacks the personal touch, but strangely enough, this does not seem to limit his appeal. The rough edges of his youthful arrogance, noted in his earlier behavior, seemed to have been rounded a bit. A barely audible gasp could be detected from the lips of his fans when he uttered those never before heard words, "Thank you."

Costello's show lasted 75 minutes during which he played 25 songs. Where most performers would open with a high energy hit, Costello surprised his audience with a mellow rendition of his little-known Memory, but followed it closely by the more popular Accidents Will Happen. Shortly after he hit his head on the microphone and was forced to halt a song and begin anew, he pounded out a powerful This Year's Girl. Human Touch was followed by the gentle Clowntime Is Over, both off his Get Happy LP.

His repertoire of popular hits was laced with selections from his newly released Trust album. Luxembourg, from Trust, reverberated with the familiar new wave beat but the lyrics were almost totally indecipherable. Other popular selections included: High Fidelity; What's So Funny About Peace, Love and Understanding; and Radio Radio.

After being on stage for less than an hour, he exited the stage and returned shortly with Oliver's Army as his first encore. At this point one could not help wondering if he really meant that he "would rather be anywhere else than here today." He closed his first encore with Watching the Detectives.

The audience was not nearly ready to let him get away, and once again cheered him into returning for a second encore. Elvis was never a conventional entertainer and he reaffirmed this belief when he returned with Glenn Tilbrook of Squeeze and played From a Whisper to a Scream. The crowd was somewhat subdued and the pause between this song and the next lay heavy with tension. It did not last long and the crowd exploded when he began his last tune, Pump It Up. Pausing in the middle to introduce his band, he totally exhausted the hopping fans and when he exited for good at 10:59 the crowd reluctantly let him go.

Sometimes I wish that I could stop you from talking
When I hear the silly things that you say
I think somebody better put out the big light
'Cause I can't stand to see you this way.

across.

Also, a smaller stage cast might have made the performance more effective. It was often difficult to discern exactly which character each actor was portraying.

By simplifying the stage setup, perhaps the plot would seem more cohesive and more readily understandable. Apart from these two criticisms, however, Godspell, true to its reputation, proved to be a moving, enjoyable experience for many of those who had the opportunity to view it.

SQUEEZE

distinctive voice and a flare on the guitar and proves that yes, even new wave artists can strum more than three chords. He bops around on stage in natural response to the musical energy he's creating. The crowd responds similarly. Difford stands almost motionless behind his mike, contributing guitar and bassy, harsh vocals complementing Tilbrook's higher, smoother voice.

Squeeze's repertoire consisted mostly of cuts from their 1980 lp Argy Bargy. They're on Top and If I Didn't Love You (I'd Hate You) were the opening pair that broke the ice. Pulling Mussels from a Shell and Another Nail in my Heart followed shortly and had enthusiasts dancing in the aisles.

The band played hard and tight, producing louder and bolder facsimiles of their FM hits. They jammed hard on Pulling Mussels and Farfies Beat and added encores Misadventure and Goodbye Girl for good measure.

Squeeze distinguished themselves in front of an audience in attendance to see another performer. But that should be no surprise; they are as original and as established as any U.K. band. Next time they're in Philadelphia you can bet it'll be a tough ticket.

Massimino's Recruiting Three Dimensional

By TOM REUSCHE

A letter to the editor in the December 5, 1980 issue of The Villanovan marked my inauspicious literary debut. In my letter, I commented on the recruiting practices of basketball Coach Rollie Massimino. I had noticed that every scholarship player on the basketball team was from outside the Philadelphia area, from which I developed a resolute conclusion that Villanova was not interested in Philadelphia's basketball players. Some people agreed with my conclusion. Coach Massimino was infuriated by my ignorance.

What makes a basketball player recruitable in the eyes of Rollie Massimino? "There are many things we look at," the coach says. "But the number one requisite is what kind of person he is, number two, what kind of athlete he is, and in no particular order, the third criteria has to be his academic prowess."

When Coach Massimino discusses high school prospects, he does not refer to them as recruits, but rather, calls them student-athletes. He feels a deep sense of responsibility for a student-athlete's academics. "One thing we tell the parents we are involved with is that we are going to do everything in our power to make sure their son gets a degree. Academically is where the real winning comes in."

Stewart Granger recalls, "the coach did not only want basketball out of me, but also academics. He told my parents he'd make sure I did all the right things, and go to school."

Coach Massimino has made good on this promise. He stated that in his eight years as Villanova's basketball coach, "every youngster we've had in our basketball program has graduated." Can the PAC-10 universities say that?

An event which weighs heavily in the student-athlete's decision making process is the campus visit. NCAA rules say a player may make 48 hour visits to six interested institutions, which are paid for by the respective universities. I was able to see the itinerary for the fall visit of the country's top high school prospect, Pat Ewing, from Cambridge Rindge & Latin High School in Boston.

Ewing flew in from Boston on the morning of October 31, 1980, and was greeted at the airport by players and aides. His first day campus activities included attending classes with Granger and Dobbs, eating meals with the players, watching a practice, and a social evening with the players.

His second day was highlighted by a tour of Philadelphia, which included stops at the Spectrum and the Palestra. That evening he attended the Sixers-Celtics game, after which he met former Villanova star, Chris Ford. Ewing was scheduled to sleep at the St. David's Inn that night, but Stew and Happy had other plans. Pat slept in their room, and if any of you are familiar with the small cubicles in Sullivan Hall they call dorms, try to imagine seven-foot Pat Ewing sleeping in the same room with Stew and Happy, who are by no means dwarfish themselves.

Unfortunately for Stewart Granger and Villanova, on February 2, Pat Ewing chose to display his talents at Georgetown University, under the direction of Coach John Thompson.

Every basketball program has a different identity, and Villanova's identity is a family concept. This family concept is evident in the team's unique method of determining which prospective student-athletes are chosen to join the team. Coach Massimino explains," every student-athlete coming here meets every player we have . . . and if one of the players comes back and says, we don't want him, he's not like us, we don't recruit him. It doesn't make any difference who he is, we've done this in two or three cases. That's why we have kids who are so compatable."

Stew and Happy strongly identify with the family concept nurtured by Coach Massimino. Citing the coach as the main reason he chose Villanova over such schools as Marquette and Duke, Happy Dobbs said, "It's like a family situation . . . we can go over to Coach Massimino's house anytime we want, to eat, or just talk. Stew added, "The coach and his wife — I treat them like my mother and father. It's like having parents back home, and the coach as another parent here."

Villanova's recent entry into the Big East Conference is seen as a recruiting bonus by Coach Massimino. The Big East gives Coach Rollie Massimino.

Villanova a spin on what the coach calls "The Wheel of Fortune." "In order to get on T.V.," the coach explains, "you have to have a good team. The way you have a good team is to have good players. To get good players, you have to work very hard, to work very hard, you must have financial backing, and once you get the players, you get on T.V." So, it becomes the "Wheel of Fortune."

Some people have accused Coach Massimono of concentrating his recruiting efforts in areas such as Massachusetts, where he was once a high school coach, while ignoring student-athletes from the Philadelphia area. The coach refutes the suggestion. "We have worked hard . . . to get some, including Lonnie McFarlan and Tony Carner, but we recruit them, players recruit them, and the decision has to be made. We would like very much to have a young man from Philadelphia."

Concerning the recruiting for next year, Villanova has already landed a 6-1 point guard from Methuen, Mass., Gary McLain. Coach Massimino would like

Ortlip Scores 1,000th as Wildcats Trounce Owls

By STEPHEN FALLON

The Temple Owls felt the wrath of the Villanova Women's basketball team last Saturday as the Wildcats humiliated the Owls, 104-67 at Temple. The victory raised the Cats record to 15-4 and should have raised a few eyebrows among the "experts" on women's college basketball.

Despite the level of play against tough competition, national recognition has eluded this year's team. "That is because of our early losses," says Lisa Ortlip, "But we still should be in the Top 20." Coach Harry Perretta assumes a more casual position saying, "If we defeat 10th ranked Cheyney State or honorable mention Pitt, as well as win the games we should, we'll be there."

The Wildcats are currently seeded fifth in the Eastern Region. At the end of the season the top eight teams from each region advance to tournament play.

One big reason for the Cats fine season thus far is due to the fine play of junior center Lisa Ortlip. This versatile athlete (she plays volleyball in the fall) scored her 1,000th point against Temple. The assist on this monumental basket came from Karen Hiznay. Hiznay collected her 1,000th point earlier in her career.

Ortlip is enjoying Villanova. She sees the basketball program continuing to get better. "We are doing great this year, and should do even better next year," said Ortlip. The 6 feet 4 inches Ortlip, who was the Philadelphia Women's Big Five MVP last year, has improved her game over last year, and should keep on improving.

The Wildcats feel they can match up with the nationally ranked teams. "After leading third ranked Rutgers for 30 minutes on the road, we became very confident in our ability. A lot of the big teams play selfishly, and if we play our game we can win," says Stephenie Vanderslice. Coach Harry Perretta adds similar sentiments, "We have the ability to stay close with anyone. If it is a close game anything can happen."

The success of the Villanova women's basketball team is three fold. In the words of forward Stephanie Vanderslice, "Harry's discipline, our ability to set the tempo of the game, and a strong team concept which allows everyone to contribute enables us to be a good team." These factors often allow the Wildcats to defeat teams which may have more talent.

The Temple victory was the third Big Five win in as many attempts as the Cats continue their quest for their second consecutive Big Five championship.

Powerlifters to Host States on Sunday

By JERRY VENTRESCA

On Sunday, the state's top collegiate powerlifters will travel to the Field House when Villanova hosts the 1981 Pennsylvania State Collegiate Championships.

This year marks the third year in the past six that Villanova has been the site of the event, including the first state championships to be held in 1976, when Wildcat Head Coach Joe Slabinski "got the ball rolling."

For Villanova, the lifters will be rebounding from a fourth place finish last year in an attempt to claim their third championship. The two previous winning seasons came in 1976 and 1978. Except for seniors Mike Vecchione and captain Brian McKenna, the 1980-81 club consists of all juniors, including one female, Meg Folk, at 114 lbs.

"We should be qualifying a lot of guys (to the nationals)," says Slabinski, in reference to the National Championships at Kutztown on March 19 and 20. Hopefully six will qualify from Villanova, among the 120 lifters to be present here Sunday. Slabinski points out that the powerhouse to be reckoned with Sunday are Kutztown, who finished second in the nation last year, Temple, Lafayette and Villanova.

From Villanova, those competing in the meet are Folk (114), Chris Wakim (123), Dan Capece (132), Matt Durst and Mike Rutkowski (148). Vecchoine (165). Vince Sferra (181), McKenna (198), John Jefferson (242), Joe Lucas (275) and Joe Fleshman (Superheavyweight).

According to International Powerlifting Federation rules, weights used will be in kilos. The smallest kilo plate used in such competition is one and one-quarter kilos, approximately two and one-half pounds. One hundred kilos is equivalent to 220-1/4 pounds.

Two platforms will be used simultaneously and each lifter has one minute to attempt his life once his name is announced. Each lifter has three attempts to each lift, the squat, bench press and deadlift. Then, by a method called the Schwartz Formula, pound for pound the strongest lifter in each weightclass will be determined.

Seven points is awarded to the school for each first place lifter, five for second, three for third, two for fourth and one for fifth.

During the day, Terry Mulroy (class of '71) will be inducted into the Villanova Hall of Fame for his achievements as a powerlifter. At the 132 lb. weightclass, Mulroy is the holder of Villanova's best in ten squat (350), bench press (275) and dead lift (477-1/4).

Trackcats Capture Big Five Title

By KERRY LYNCH

Despite the obvious difficulty of running on a track that resembled a tightrope, the Villanova women's track team successfully defended their Big Five indoor title last Friday at West Chester State College. The tracksters took five firsts but it was their impressive line-up that secured the victory.

Villanova just edged past Temple 40-36-1/2 while the University of Pennsylvania took third.

The Wildcats fared better in the distance events; junior Sue Shea pacing both the mile and two mile. Finishing right behind Sue Shea in the mile was Wildcat newcomer Lisa Maree.

Maree, a transfer from Florida State University, lends depth in the distance events, proving herself with a close second in the mile.

In the two mile, Shea led throughout and lapped every runner on the track. Bev Reilly finished third in the same race.

Sprinting to a victory in the 45 yard dash and for a second in the 440 yard dash, Jennifer Whitfield added eight points to the Wildcat score.

Peggy Stewart cleared five feet and six inches to capture first in the high jump.

Behind for most of the race, Patty Bradley moved into first with two laps left and won the 880 yard run for the Wildcats.

Pucksters Defeated

By TOM PRIOR

Despite a boisterous fan club of [illegible] one-hundred and fifty [illegible] students, the Villanova [illegible] hockey team dropped a 5-1 [illegible] to the university of [illegible] at Newark, Delaware [illegible] Friday night. The defeat [illegible] the Icecats in a deadlock [illegible] with Delaware for first place in [illegible] the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate [illegible] Hockey Conference.

It was a typical Delaware-Villanova game, as hard-hitting and tight checking prevailed. The Hens outshot the Blue Hens 33-[illegible] however, they trailed 2-1 after two periods, thanks to a flashy goal by forward Tom Curran on an assist from Mike Bufano. Surprisingly, this turned out to be the only highlight of the evening for the Cats, as the Blue Hens scored three unanswered goals in the final period to secure the victory. Tom Margietti, the Icecat's league leading goaltender, managed to stop only two of five shots in the final period.

Coach Skip Probst didn't seem worried about his team's lackluster performance. "It was just one of those games when nothing seemed to go on our favor; we outplayed them for two and a half periods, and we even outshot them 35-21 but we just couldn't find the net. I don't regard this as a bad loss."

The Icecats were plagued by eight penalties which prevented them from adjusting to the tempo of the game. Delawares' play was characterized by tight defense and a conservative offense. The Blue Hens, whose roster contains three of the league's leading scorers, quickly capitalized on their few scoring opportunities — five goals on only twenty one shots on goal.

Big Five Remains Unpredictable

By MIKE HEALEY

In the words of the winning coach, "We played one of our steadiest games of the year as far as the team is concerned." Unfortunately for Wildcat fans, those words were spoken by Temple Coach Don Casey and not by Rollie Massimino.

Villanova's record slipped a notch to 12-6 overall and 1-2 in the Big Five, as Temple's Neal Robinson led the Owls to a 71-68 victory before 9,208 frenzied fans at the Palestra. Robinson scored 19 points in what was a brutally physical contest. A total of 38 personal fouls were called, 21 of which were on the Cats. According to Coach Massimino, "We got banged up pretty good."

The Wildcats jumped out to an early 8-2, but from then on, it was all Temple. The Owls led by two at the half, 37-35. An integral part of Temple's success was their ability to cash in on a number of high percentage shots, which were created by the frequent two on one and three on two fast breaks.

Despite the loss, Coach Massimino was generally pleased with his team's performance. "I'm very proud of the kids," he stated, "but the ball just didn't fall our way." Massimino was also satisfied with the play of the game's high scorer and rebounder, John Pinone. Pinone collected 26 points on 9 of 14 shooting from the field, 8 of 10 from the foul line, and added 11 rebounds. The only other Villanova player with double figures was Tom Sinkiewicz, who finished with 16 points.

The outcome of this game proves that if nothing else, the Big Five has not changed — anything can happen on a given night. Freshman Happy Dobbs' first impressions of the Big Five were that, "There's a lot of intensity and all the games are very hard. Even the so-called easy games are tough."

Senior guard Tom Sienkiewicz has similar statements in his retrospective impressions of the Big Five. "Being from Northern Jersey, I didn't hear too much about the Big Five in high school," he said, "but I'm glad I've had the chance to play." Sink also remarked that, "The rivalries and competition have gotten stronger and stronger, and there's a real balance now."

A college basketball fan in Philadelphia can't ask for more: great action, great excitement, great spirit, and great rivalries. All these assets, the Big Five offers. Perhaps the only drawback of the league is that the teams only get one shot at each other per year. Or as Sink so aptly put it, "You have to make the first shot good, because you only have one shot."

Sometimes you get away with more than others, especially when you are playing John Pinone, as Temple center Ken Winter demonstrates above.

Hall of Fame Inducts Former Hoopsters

By LARRY GOANOS

A sell-out crowd was on hand last Saturday night at the Palestra to watch two former Villanova greats get inducted into the Big Five Hall of Fame. Howard Porter and Johnny Jones were honored between games of the St. Joseph's-LaSalle, Villanova-Temple double-header for their outstanding play and overall contributions to the Big Five.

Porter captained the 1970-71 Wildcat squad which went to the NCAA finals before dropping the championship game to U.C.L.A., 68-62. He was selected as an All-American for three straight years, from 1969-71, during which time the team's overall record was 66-16. Porter then went on to play in the NBA from 1971-77 with Chicago, Detroit and New York, before his career was ended by a blood clot in his lungs.

Jones was the captain of the 1968-69 Wildcat squad which rolled up a 21-5 mark before losing to Davidson in the NCAA tournament. An All Big Five player from 1966-69, Jones was also named to the All-East Team in 1968.

When asked what Big Five game stuck out most in their memory, both former Wildcats recalled contests against arch-rival St. Joseph's. "It was the hottest rivalry in town," recollected Porter." In my sophomore year Johnny (Jones) had his glasses broken by a St. Joe's player dur the game. It was so loud and w in here that I couldn't hear mys think, but we won."

Jones was also taken in by t intensity of those match-ups w St. Joseph's. "I'll never forget first game against them in freshman year. This place really going nuts. We beat th twice in that year, which great."

Porter recalled another speci moment in his collegiate caree "It was against Penn. They w ranked No. 2 in the country b they came out and froze the h against us. I figured that if th were No. 2 then we must be No. We went on to beat them almost 50 points."

Wildcat Big-5 Hall-of-Famers Johnny Jones and Howard Porter pause with Dr. Ted Aceto following ceremonies in their honor Saturday night.

Hoyas Down Cats

By PATRICK FLYNN

The Georgetown Hoyas staged a remarkable second-half outburst to overcome a Villanova lead and defeat the Wildcats, 70-54, in an important Big East Conference match-up at McDonough Arena in Washington, D.C., Wednesday night.

The setback ruined the return of Alex Bradley to the Villanova line-up. The senior co-captain, who had been sidelined for five weeks with a broken thumb, entered the game early in the first half and played 23 minutes in his first appearance since the December 28 injury. Bradley came away with nine points and five rebounds.

Georgetown used torrid second-half shooting, combined with an abundance of Villanova turnovers, to deal the Wildcats their third consecutive loss and drop the Cat's record to 12-7, 5-4 in the Big East Conference. All-America candidate Eric "Sleepy" Floyd was the major reason for the Hoya surge, passing in 10 second-half points for a total of 25. Forward Mike Hancock added 10. Mike Mulquin led the Wildcats with 19 points.

After a first-half that featured strong defense and some sloppy offense from both sides, Villanova led 29-28 at the intermission, due mainly to Mulquin's six for seven shooting from the field.

In the second half, the teams jockeyed for position for three and a half minutes before Georgetown took control of the game, using a persistent full-court press to shut down the Wildcats offensively. Fourteen second-half turnovers proved costly for Villanova. The Wildcats finished the game with 25 turnovers, more than double their average figure per game this season.

Also instrumental to the Hoya victory was Georgetown's ability to hold the Villanova backcourt to a mere two points in the second-half. For the game, the Wildcat guards shot just 5-16. Stew Granger suffered a disappointing evening as he was held scoreless and turned the ball over seven times in just 21 minutes of play.

Georgetown shot an amazing 64 percent in the second half to raise their win record to 14-3, sufficient ahead of Villanova into fourth place in the conference with a 4-3 record.

Villanova received a strong performance from John Pinone, who tallied 12 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in the losing effort. The Wildcats will be back in action tomorrow with a contest at the University of Maine before returning to the Fieldhouse Wednesday night for a Big East match-up with Seton Hall.

get four or five new players, in particular a shooting guard to replace Tom Sienkiewics, and a strong power forward to replace Alex Bradley.

What kind of student-athlete does Villanova recruit? "We're looking for good people, as well as good players," says Happy Dobbs, "not one or the other." Members of Villanova's basketball family are the type of people who get involved in community clinics, and give up part of their Christmas vacation to visit the children at the Ben Gamadie School. "That shows the character of our kids," says Bobby Shantleman," and I'm very proud of them."

This week's Budweiser Athlete of the week is swimmer Ted Russell. Russell, Wildcat co-captain, set a new pool record in the 200 freestyle, Saturday against Fordham. His time of 1:43.3 is .6 faster than the previous record. In the last five meets Russell has had six victories. Russell was nominated by the Sports Information Office.

Former RA's Receive Payment

By BILL CLARK

Villanova University has granted "tuition remission" to six law students who were not rehired as resident assistants this year.

In a letter to the six students, acting Dean Gerald Abraham of the Law School said that "university funds" were used to pay for the students' law school tuition for this semester. Each student received $1945 from the University.

The six law students complained to Dean Willard O'Brien of the Law School and Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., claiming that Villanova did not follow proper procedures in their applications to be rehired as resident assistants.

"Dean O'Brien had met with Father Deegan a second time about the incident," said an area coordinator who was not rehired this year. "He told Deegan that he had complete dissatisfaction about the whole situation. He then told us that they had agreed on some sort of tuition remission, but that Father Deegan had to authorize it."

Deegan denied any involvement concerning the tuition remission.

"I told Dean O'Brien that whatever he did was his business," added Deegan. "If he wanted to help those students, that was very nice of him."

Acting Dean Abraham declined comment on the entire matter. "I feel that I have an ethical and legal obligation to keep private any matter concerning any law school student," he said. "I do not feel free to discuss the matter at all."

The law students claim that they tried for some sort of financial aid or loans last semester. "We went to Deegan and asked about the possibility of some sort of loan," said an ex-resident assistant. "He told us that the well was dry."

> "In a sense, Villanova is pleading 'no contest.' They didn't admit that they were wrong, but by giving us these funds, they are admitting we were harmed."
> — an ex area-coordinator

"Dean O'Brien suggested that something should be done about the law students. He asked me if I would mind if he granted the tuition remission to the students," said Deegan.

Matt Christenson, the assistant to the dean of men, also said that he was unaware of the tuition remission. "From what I understand, the money given was not a transfer of funds, it was just a loss of revenue. But I had only heard about the money several weeks ago," said Christenson.

The law students claim that they were not asking for the tuition remission. "We never requested any money from the University," said the ex-area coordinator. "We only requested to see our files and get an explanation of their decision.

"They won't consent to this because they know there is nothing to justify their decision," he added.

The tuition remission was also a surprise to the ex-resident assistant. "I never dreamed that Villanova would come up with that kind of money," he said.

"In a sense, Villanova is pleading 'no contest.' They didn't admit that they were wrong, but by giving us these funds, they are admitting we were harmed," said the ex-area coordinator.

Runner Causes Soviet Boycott

By DAVE COSKEY

In what was termed a protest for human rights, a contingent of Soviet track athletes declined to participate in last week's Milrose games in New York. The turmoil arose when Boston Garnet that senior Sydnee Maree would be allowed to participate in the 5000-meter event.

Maree, a South African resident, has been unable to compete in any International American Athletic Federation sanctioned meet, since many countries refuse to recognize the Republic of South Africa due to its apartheid policy. The irony is that Maree himself is a black, and is not allowed to participate in meets because his country is being punished for discrimination against blacks.

The Soviets' coach and manager approached Howard Schmertz, meet director, shortly before 7 p.m. and asked, "Will a South African be permitted to run in this meet?"

Schmertz explained that Maree married an American citizen, Lisa Rhoden, in December, and was now a permanent citizen and in the process of becoming a naturalized citizen. Therefore, Adrian Paul, president of the IAAF, ruled that Maree was now under the jurisdiction of the American Athletic Congress and therefore could compete.

The Soviets, coming off poor performances against mediocre competition in Kansas City earlier in the week, argued that Maree would be ineligible, "Or our sportsmen will be unable to compete."

"I wonder how they can worry about human rights, and wanted me barred from the competition," said Maree. Schmertz could not understand either and refused to disqualify Maree. The Soviet officials then proceeded to enter the stands in an attempt to persuade the Italian contingent to join their boycott.

"It was no loss; they were slow and out of shape. That's why I didn't want them to begin with," said Schmertz.

The Soviet athletes were part of a package deal for meets in the United States. They competed in five meets while here. According to Schmertz, "All their athletes are out of training now. They didn't send their middle-distance runners. The reason for that is they can be lapped when defeated. Instead, they sent sprinters and hurdlers, who when they lose, do so by only a couple of yards. I told them after this mess that they'll never come back to the Milrose games as long as I'm in charge."

The athletes themselves were unable to comment on their feelings regarding the withdrawal or their feelings about Maree.

"I was hoping this was all over now," said Maree, "but now they made me want to work harder to show them who is really superior."

Maree became eligible to participate in international track events because of his recent wedding to an American citizen.

Student Aid Reduced

By BILL CLARK
AND MARY ANNE GRANGER

The proposed budget cuts by the Reagan administration may have a major impact on financial aid for college students.

"I've just told my staff that in the twenty years I've been here, this is the worst I've seen it," said Vincent Femia, director of financial aid.

"The Basic Grant program is going to be won billion dollars short for next year, and we don't see Congress is going to appropriate this money," said Femia. "We would have the maximum we would be entitled [illegible] to $1900."

"I also think [illegible] Guaranteed Student Loans program is the only [illegible] Loans program that is not going to be cut. I think [illegible] previous borrowers will be available for loans," said Femia.

"The Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency was supposed to inform us of their grants by March 1, but they can't do it. They base their aid on the Basic Grant money, but they simply don't know what that is going to be," added Femia.

Femia said that 65 percent of Villanova's students are on some form of financial aid. "I feel like we will need an extra $250,000 to keep up with our financial aid program," said Femia. The financial aid office currently has a budget of one million dollars.

"If we don't get this money, there will be a lot of unmet need," said Femia.

Femia also said there is little possibility of increased aid from [illegible] increase in private grants for student aid," said Femia.

Femia said that certain groups are pressuring government officials not to cut student aid programs. "The Collegiate Scholarship Service, a group of financial aid officers, are going to be making recommendations to Congress. We are hindered in our efforts because we are not allowed to lobby like other organizations.

"We probably will encourage parents and students to start writing letters to their legislators about it," said Femia.

Femia also said that the proposed cut in Social Security aid to students would hurt financial aid programs. "There won't be any other programs to pick up this aid," said Femia.

Men's Dorm Conditions Worsen

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Several explanations have recently been offered concerning deteriorating living conditions in some men's dorms at Villanova.

The Dean of Men's office and the University maintenance department admit that while renovation is need, it is the steady, alarming increase of vandalism that has created the present conditions. The students who live in the dorms complain that maintenance is responsible for many of the difficulties.

"Fedigan Hall is at the top of the list for renovation," says Acting Dean of Men Tony Martin. "Patchwork by maintenance can't solve the problems. Only cosmetic things can be done. Sullivan is also in need of renovation, especially the bathrooms," he said.

"There have been a lot of student complaints the last few years," Martin said. "I don't know if it's ever been worse. It is an incredible problem," he added.

"There seems to be a disagreement between the students and maintenance. The residents say the problems aren't repaired quickly enough. In most cases, maintenance does the job promptly. A lot can at attributed to abuse instead of wear and tear," according to Marin.

Throughout the academic year, residents of Sullivan have complained of poor maintenance service. When a complaint is filed, it goes to the resident assistant (R.A.) who makes a request for maintenance. The request is checked on later to see if its been tended to. If not, a second request can be filed and the problem brought to the attention of Martin. Recently, a letter of complaint, signed by the R.A.'s and a number of residents of Sullivan was submitted to the maintenance department.

"There is a time when maintenance is slow in responding to a 'legitimate' complaint — we're busy over at Sullivan most of the time," Thomas N. Trucks, director of University maintenance, responded. "Sullivan never was the greatest but since May 9, things have really turned bad," Trucks was referring to the large party that developed on the quad between Sheehan and Sullivan on the final day of last year's examinations. The cost of damages from that party that caused severe flooding in the building amounted to more than $10,000.

This past summer, $6,379 was spent in repairs to Sullivan. The biggest problem remains the condition of the bathrooms. "The problem is delivery of the materials," Trucks explained. "In October, $2000 of cubicle doors were ordered. Between the time they were ordered and delivered in December, 22 additional doors had been broken. It takes two to three months to get those doors," he said.

The bathroom problem at Sullivan is from abuse," continued Trucks. "Water pressure being too low is a legitimate problem for which there is no overnight solution. However, in a week's time 12 brand new showerheads that had been installed were gone. Who would want them?" Trucks asked. "One day we went to do a repair and some guy had removed a showerhead to attach a hose to water his plants," he continued. "When he was finished, he started to walk out with the showerhead in his pocket," he added.

As of January, the maintenance department was $10,000 in the red as a result of the vandalism, according to Trucks. St. Mary's has also had its share of problems. "Someone got the smart idea of flushing down underwear and clothes. This blocked the entire sewer system. Also, whole rolls of toilet paper and paper towels were clogging the system. This almost ruined three boilers. We had to use some Radnor equipment to clear it up. If those boilers had gone, all the residents would have had to be moved for the rest of the year," said Trucks.

"The R.A.'s have got to understand that it takes time," said Joe Dimidio, maintenance supervisor. "We do the work and a week later it needs to be done again," he said.

Dimidio said, in a breakdown of men's dorms needing the most maintenance, Sullivan ranks number one followed by Stanford and St. Mary's. Dimidio was quick to point out that not all dorms hold a critical opinion of maintenance; "Corr sent a thank you note to maintenance for the painting and the other work done."

Villanova has adopted a policy of "men's residence halls breakage fee charges." At the end of the school year, students responsible for damage are charged accordingly and entire wings are sometimes charged the cost of damages. "The kids themselves either admit it or the R.A.'s report it," Trucks explained. "The latest thing is to bend the cubicle doors till the hinges break or knock off the door knobs," he explained.

The 1978-79 report indicated that $28,476.31 was paid by residents in breakage fees. That figure jumped to almost double,

Debate Team Takes Awards at Tournament

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

At their latest tournament at the U.S. Naval Academy, the Villanova Debate Team emerged with two awards for reaching the final rounds. The team has now received trophies at all 12 of the 12 district tournaments attended this season.

Dr. Russell Church Jeff Page Photo

Dr. Russell Church, moderator of the Debate Team has high hopes and great expectations for this year. Debating for Villanova are several two-person teams which have been performing exceptionally well and, according to Church, consistently so, over the course of this season.

Among the most conspicuous of the debate duos are Larry Magitti and Cathy Olanich, who made it to the finals at Navy at the beginning of this month, at George Mason University in mid-January, at James Madison University in November and at William and Mary and Johns Hopkins in October and September.

Arthur Figueiredo is another such performer. Matched with different partners, he attained the finals at the district tournament at Towson State in December as well as at Navy, George Mason, and James Madison.

If these Villanova representatives continue to succeed as they have, Villanova could debate its way as far as the National Debate Tournament at California State in April. Competition is very keen to attend the N.D.T. as only four teams (eight people), will be able to attend from this entire district, which includes schools over all of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and Washington ,D.C.

According to Dr. Church, the Villanova Debate Team has a good chance of sending one of those four top teams that go to the National Tournament from this district. Villanova has yet to send a representative to the National Tournament.

The Villanova Debate Team's chances of reaching the N.D.T. will depend heavily on the results of the five district tournaments that remain in the regular debate season.

Minority Awards Planned

By MARGE BATTISTELLI

The Black Cultural Society of Villanova will host its first annual awards luncheon Saturday, February 14, at 1 p.m. in the Connelly Center.

Diana Pollard of the social action program explained that the awards program culminating Blacks History Week, will honor both present and former Villanova students for achievements in various categories. Distribution will be separated into five categories: Outstanding Alumni Achievement Award for alumni, and present students, Academic Excellence Award, Sportsmanship Award, Service Award and Black Pride Award.

The recipients of the Outstanding Alumni Award are Steven Aringer and Ron Rothwell, both black graduates of Villanova who went on to important positions after graduation. Aringer was a political science major of the class of 1977 and received his master's degree here in 1978. He worked for a few years as assistant director of W. Wilson Goode, Philadelphia's managing director who will be featured at the luncheon. He then went on the become the director of the License and Inspection Post after joining Mayor Bill Green's mayorial campaign.

The second Outstanding Alumni recipient, Ron Rothwell, was also a political science major and graduated in 1973. Rothwell is a solar energy specialist and works for Housing and Urban Development (H.U.D.), but is based in the Chilton Company in Radnor, Pa. His job entails wide United States travel, giving lectures and some television and radio appearances.

The second category of awards is the Academic Excellence Award which will be presented to the two black students with the highest cumulative averages. These students are junior accounting major Jennifer Whitfield and sophomore biology major Carlton Young. Both students have consistently carried a 3.5 average.

The Sportmanship Award will go to two students who, in the words of Pollard, "are not only proficient in their particular area of sports, but exhibit sportsmanlike attitudes at all time both on and off the court." These honored students are sophomore arts major Rodney Wilson of the track team and senior communication arts major David Martin of the football team.

Art Department Sponsors Visit

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

Four highly regarded contemporary artists will be visiting the Villanova area for an artist lecture series. Sponsored by the Villanova department of art and art history, the program will bring many artists of the avant garde here from different sections of the country.

"The series will provide the opportunity to become acquainted with the variety and energy that exists beyond Philadelphia and New York, as well as to experience something of the multiplicity of contemporary art," stated Cheryl Leibold, assistant director of the Connelly Center Art Gallery.

Four artists will appear between mid-February and early April through the cooperation of Villanova, the Philadelphia College of Art, and Rutgers University at Camden.

The lecture series and performances are free and open to the public. A National Endowment for the Arts grant will be used to underwrite the expenses.

The artists will spend one day at each school where there will be workshops and critiques with the arts students, followed by the evening lecture.

Artist Laurie Anderson, who employs modern sound and light technology in her work, will begin the series with an electronic sound and light performance on Monday, Feb. 16 at 8 p.m. in the Lawrence Hall Auditorium at Rosemont College.

Anderson has had several one person installations and exhibits throughout the United States, Canada, and Europe. Many of her conceptual performances involve loudspeakers, light-sensing devices, and invite the viewer to actively participate in the performance.

Following Anderson's visit will be a lecture and presentation by artist Judy Linhares on Tuesday, March 10 at 8 p.m. in Lawrence Hall Auditorium on Rosemont's campus.

Linhares established herself as an artist in San Francisco. She creates intimate paintings of dream-like images which sometimes evoke the supernatural, and which reflect a Latin influence, particularly 19th century Mexican woodcuts. She will speak on her art in particular and on art in the Bay area in general.

Also visiting the area will be artist Jim Nutt who established his reputation in 1966, when he began to show with a group of brash and irreverent Chicago artists who called themselves the "Hairy Who." Nutt was the dean of the Chicago school and consistently the creator of its roughest and most enigmatic images. He will appear on April 2 at 8 p.m. in the Lawrence Hall Auditorium on Rosemont's campus.

Concluding the series will be Winifred Lutz, a sculptor who began her career in Michigan and currently teaches at Yale University. She has employed a variety of media, and for the visit will be working on an outdoor installation on the Camden campus at Rutgers University, with student artists assisting her. She will present an illustrated lecture on April 8, at 8 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema at Villanova.

Student Programs Likely to be Cut

Budget Cuts Prove Unbalanced

Throughout the recent Presidential campaign, Ronald Reagan said that he could cut federal spending without touching actual spending programs. He claimed that "waste and fraud" in government could be eliminated, and therefore government services would remain intact.

It is now nearly one month since Ronald Reagan took office. Already, he has proposed massive cuts in government spending. Instead of attacking the "waste and fraud" like he promised, though, he will surely announce setbacks in many programs.

The Reagan administration claims that everyone will share equally in the burden caused by these budgetary slashes. Everyone in Washington is denying that the budget will be balanced on the backs of the poor and middle class.

One official of the Office of Management and Budget claims that the "truly needy" are those who "would probably not survive" without government benefits. In that sense, the "truly needy" will not be hurt by Reagan's budget cuts. Many people who look to government as a means of bettering themselves, though, will be deprived of this opportunity.

Perhaps it is an oversimplification to state that the Reagan administration is aiding big business at the expense of society. On the other hand, Reagan is proposing to cut food stamps while allowing businessmen tax deductions for "business" lunches. Reagan is proposing that government stop funding synthetic fuels projects, yet no mention is made of cutting the oil depletion allowance, which permits oil companies to enlarge their profits.

Perhaps these issues matter little to us. Then again, if one loo closer, Reagan's budget cuts may prove devastating not only to Villano University, but to Villanova students.

One proposed budget cut is in the area of education. Subsidies for th Arts and Humanities may be cut in half. Even though the effects of such cut are difficult to predict, it certainly will have an effect on colleges an universities, including Villanova. Education costs are already on the ris and a loss in revenue would mean larger tuition increases, as well as cu backs in valuable educational programs.

The other area of particular concern for students is financial a Social Security benefits for college students who are children of retir disabled, or deceased workers will likely be eliminated. Funding for t Basic Grant and Student Loan programs are also likely targets.

Future societal benefits from education are very difficult to measur But, student financial aid has contributed to a fairer distribution of t educational benefits our society has to offer.

Cutting financial aid will not only make it more difficult for colleg and universities to attract qualified students, it will make it more difficu for qualified students to succeed in life.

It is quite unlikely that student organizations in Washington will capable of lobbying effectively in comparison to large corporations a special interest groups. If this is the case, student-related programs will the first to go.

Senate Motion

To the Editor:

On November 21, 1980, the University Senate passed a seemingly harmless resolution. The resolution stated: "Be it resolved by the University Senate that the Student Body President be permitted annually to address the Board of Trustees at their Spring meeting for the purpose of presenting a statement of major Student Body concerns." On the surface this act might appear to have some potential use, but in reality it is dangerous and counterproductive.

Should the President of the Student Body be asking for permission to come before the Board of Trustees? Is this a proper attitude for the representative of the Student body to take? NO, it is not! Endorsing this proposal, by a formal act of the Senate, places Mr. Amoroso, his office, and the entire student body in an inferior position vis-a-vis the Board. Its effect will be to discredit anything he might have to say, and to place the Board in a quasi-administrative role. This will not be in the best interest of the Student Body, and will only serve to strengthen the position of the Administration at the expense of the "Student Government." Mr. Amoroso's proposal may have been well intentioned, but it will have a negative effect on the Student Body.

The Villanova Board of Trustees already is the de facto authority on campus. The November 21st resolution will only serve to give official recognition to this role, and reduce what little influence students now have on University policy. I call on students to petition Senator Amoroso to reverse his motion. A failure to do so will not speak well for his commitment to represent the interests of the Student Body. Perhaps sitting between Dean Clay and Dr. Cleary at Senate meetings has had an adverse effect on Mr. Amoroso's perceptions. I hope not.

Godspell Praise

Dear Editor,

It seems far easier and commonplace to criticize, then to extol. But when the opportunity to praise presents itself, people should, in that same unhesitating manner, make their comments known.

With this in mind, we close to bring the recent production of "GODSPELL" into the "spotlight."

The New Jersey Theatre Ensemble the Villanova Union are to be congratu for providing the students of V.U. w fine occasion to enjoy a "polished" am production of one of Broadway's more beat shows.

It was obvious that the cast was practiced and comfortable with their r Their performance, disregarding the u querable limitations of facilities (e lighting, amplification) and the extr demands of an overly active script, was entertaining and sensitive.

Special mention should go to Villan own Kathi Iannacone for her touching dition of the song "By My Side." credits to Cindi Segal, coordinator of Union's Cultural Arts Committee w was responsible for bringing this duction to Villanova. And, to everyone volved — a job well done!

We hope this is the beginning of a cessful trend of cultural arts events.

A fine performance enjoyed by all!

Political Union

ar Editor:

This is in response to your poor coverage the Political Union Meeting on January First of all your reporter might try using actual names of the people he sup-edly quotes. Secondly, I am the person spoke for the Moderate Party that night, and contrary to your reporting, I spoke against the resolution which called for the condemnation of the ABSCAM operation. Also your reporter failed to note the extremely large number of people who abstained from voting that night. In the future I hope you will cover these meetings in a more professional manner.

Sincerely,

Comments

Dear Editor:

I slept-in and occupied during the St. Tolentine demonstration, marched with head bowed during the death of Student Rights rally, sat in the pike all in protest to a non-listening administration. I was nearly run out of Villanova as a second-semester senior by drummed-up charges. I vowed never to return. But after four years, curiosity drove me to the Spires.

At first glance nothing had changed. The back issues of this paper informed me of the omnipresent maladies: lack of security, budget grumblings, no women's aports coverage. I read with interest the letters which focused on the lack of social activity. I nearly threw up. These were the same gripes of the 70's. I guess nothing has changed. I was a two-term managing editor (of the Villanovan.)

I took a short walk to the Connelly Center expecting it nearly deserted based on the letters I had read. Instead, I found an atmosphere conducive to the bustling student in search of sociability. How can you complain about the social life at Villanova? You should have such pride in this structure. The social deficiency we protested has been solved. Quit bitching. There are still battles to be fought in the areas of security, housing, tuition, and visitation, Don't lose sight of these. But don't cry over something that has been won for you by your predecessors.

Peace

Ronald Reagan's plans to balance the budget and cut federal spending prompted the Villanovan to ask students: Are you concerned about the changes President Reagan may make involving financial aid for students? Do you think this will hurt many students here? How will students at other schools be effected?

"I don't think he should cut ck on students. It would lessen ople's chances for an education well as other opportunities. And those who are not financially ll off . . . their talents could be sted."

Kathy King
Junior Communications

"Yeah . . . because a lot of students who have the brains and don't have the money won't be able to continue their education."

Marci O'Brien
Freshman Liberal Arts

"Definitely, I get financial aid and I'm concerned for next year because I'm going to need as much aid as possible. I think he should cut in other areas as opposed to education.

Kevin Rogers
Junior Accounting

"I think that causes a real problem for those students that really need financial aid . . . The people here won't really be that affected but I can see it really affecting other colleges."

Samme Shea
Junior Communications

"Yes I'm concerned because I've taken out loans for myself already. Because of the high cost of tuition here, some can hardly get by even with the loans. It could cause some people to transfer to cheaper schools."

Mike Fagan
Sophomore Accounting

"Absolutely. It's reprehensible. We are going to go to war when Exxon tells us and Kissinger will light the fuse. They have cut financial aid among other things in order to divert it to the military."

Black Cultural Society Announces Awards

The recipients of the awards of the remaining two categories are, as of yet, unaware that they will be receiving honors. The winners of the Service Award are chosen by a committee made up of faculty and administration members. Recipients will be two students who have "served the University and the community in various ways." The last award, the Black Pride Award, is an award the goes to two students, one male and one female, who both "best exemplify black pride." This award is considered most prestigious because the winners are elected by their fellow students.

All honors will be awarded in the form of plaques bearing the name of the recipient, the award and the Villanova seal.

The awards luncheon this year is a sharp change from the events that have taken place in past years at Villanova to commemorate Black History Week. Pollard explains, "Last year, and in years past, the Black Cultural Society arranged a series of events like art exhibits, films, and lectures. At least one event took place each day for the whole week. Because of this constant flow of events, interest, as well as participation, declined greatly. This year, the Society has planned only two events — the Awards luncheon and a Professional Forum which will take place on Thursday, Feb. 12. By having only two events, the Society can devote much more time and energy to each and make them both first-class productions. Also, it puts more emphasis and generages more interest in them."

Pollard is very optimistic about the popularity of the awards presentation. Also in planned is the that the faculty and student interest is great. Donations, fundraisers and support from the University have helped the make the luncheon a reality.

The award program is also a big step forward for the Black Cultural Society. Pollard feels that it marks a positive turn toward [illegible] awards [illegible] the Black Cultural Society [illegible] this luncheon to the finale the Society and to the support the University. Also involved this effort is an attempt to back those Black students have graduated and gone on high positions. The Outstand Alumni Award is an attempt to this.

RA's Given Tuition Money

"Deegan could have avoided the whole thing by just admitting fault," he added.

Jim McKenna, a resident assistant who was not hired this year, confirmed what was stated by the six law students who were not rehired. According to McKenna, Villanova does not follow proper procedures in its rehiring process.

"When I got a letter at the end of last year saying I would not be rehired, I wrote to Dean Wechsler. In his letter to me, he said I didn't devote enough time to the program.

"All throughout the year, I never had any idea that they weren't pleased with my performance. Matt Christenson had told me I was doing a good job. My area coordinator told me that I was doing a good job. And then, they turned around and did this to me," said McKenna.

"The Dean of Men's office was real petty with the resident assistants. A resident assistant had to spend a lot of time with the area coordinators and at the Dean of Men's office. I felt that it was better to spend time on my floor," said McKenna.

"Their procedures are not the same for everyone. There was one resident assistant last year who was caught by security breaking into Sheehan Hall. If it was anybody else, he would have been released right away, but he was in good with the Dean of Men's office," added McKenna.

"If you ever questioned one of their decisions, it was the end of you," said McKenna.

McKenna also said that he was not notified of the decision not to rehire him until after the deadline announced previously by the Dean of Men's office. "We had received correspondence throughout the year saying we would be notified by May 28. I didn't receive my letter until the beginning of July," said McKenna.

Steering Committee Chosen for Fall '81

By DREW MERRICK

The process of selecting the orientation counselors for next semester's incoming freshmen is currently underway. Matt Mitchell, student chairperson for the new student orientation staff, and Fr. Robert J. Martin, dean of student activities, have recently selected a 13 member steering committee to supervise the entire orientation program.

The process of selecting the steering committee was twofold. The applicants initially had to submit an extensive six-page application. The second and most important aspect of the selection process was the 40-minute interview with both Mitchell and Martin. Such personal qualities as leadership ability, responsibility and familiarity with the orientation process were deciding factors in determining the members of the steering committee. The 13 members will be reporting to campus three weeks before classes open next fall. Each member will be paid $350 for his or her efforts.

Applications for orientation counselor positions will be available in mid-March.

1981-82 Resident Assistant Program

A Resident Assistant is. . .

. . .a student staff member in a university residence hall. A Resident Assistant has a number of job responsibilities which include serving as an advisor to residents and student groups, planning activities, enforcing rules and policies, serving as a resource and referral person, and fulfilling assigned administrative duties. Successful Resident Assistants are highly committed, enthusiastic, individuals with good communication skills. They must be open and flexible as well as demonstrate an ability to work well with many types of people. Resident Assistants are from diverse backgrounds. If this sounds interesting so far, read on!

Eligible Persons. . .

. . .are graduate and professional school students, and undergraduate juniors and seniors. Candidates must be available for the academic year. Prior experience in a university group living environment or a similar experience is desirable.

Remuneration. . .

. . .of the Resident Assistant position is in the form of room and board.

All Interested Students. . .

. . .should attend a Resident Assistant information meeting to obtain information about the position and the selection process. The meetings will be held in living areas on the following dates:

Good Counsel	2nd floor lounge	Mon.	Feb. 16	4:00
Stanford	2nd floor lounge	Mon.	Feb. 16	6:00

Sci-Fi Films Reflect Literature

By KATHI IANNACONE

Wednesday night, February 11, marked the second in a series of lectures provided by the cultural film series, Dr. Margaret Esmonde, professor of English, introduced the effect of literature into science fiction films.

To reinforce some of her thoughts and ideas, Esmonde included slides and a movie within the lecture. The movie, "Stranger Than Science," was a half hour sequence of how science fiction productions came into reality. It was a CBS production narrated by Walter Cronkite. The film included clips from past classic movies such as "2001 A Space Odyssey," "Forbidden Planet," and "Things to Come" — all of which will be shown during the semester as a part of the Science Fiction Movie Series. Esmonde's purpose was to give listeners a real feeling of what she was talking about.

The lecture progressed with the idea that science fiction films began as a bombardment of the science fiction literature. The 1818 "Frankenstein" was the first science fiction novel in which it made use of a mad scientist, coils, and the idea of applying currents to bring a person back to life. "It formulated the theme of a doctor thirsting for the forbidden knowledge in which he cares only of his feelings and nothing of his creation," continued Esmonde. "It set off a trend in writing of science without morals."

As she progressed, the lecture included hits on the progenetors of scientific romance Jules Verne, and H.G. Wells. These men continually supplied moviemakers with themes and ideas, from which the first science fiction movie, "Trip to the Moon," was devised.

Science fiction got its name from an early magazine called "Amazing Stories." It was run by a man named Hugo Gernsback, who oriented the magazine toward the teens. It dominated the idea of predictive powers in two major plots, that of adventure and use of gadgets. "Amazing Stories" was the magazine which gave rise to series such as "Flash Gordon", "Buck Rogers," and ultimately "Star Wars." Esmonde used slides to illustrate covers of past issues.

Esmonde pointed out that, during the second era of literature, science fiction took a more realistic turn towards the adults and now presented the effects of technology. Television series such as "Space Cadet," "Lost in Space" and "Star Trek" began to dominate the screen. Esmonde commented that "the shows' popularity can probably be attributed to the uniqueness and peoples' ability to relate to the characters!"

It was the nuclear war movies of the 50's and 60's that brought a special effects.

Movies such as "Dr. Stranglove," "King Kong," "Godzilla," and the "Beast of Giant Phantome" gave rise to the new technique. Esmonde stated that her "only fear is that science fiction will disintegrate in to nothing but special effects." She further commented, "It may give the literature a bad name."

Considered as the ultimate of old magazines, "Star Wars" encompassed all of the popular themes of fastasy, imagination and love. Esmonde concluded with the relation of this movie to the past, "It fascinates me how science fiction is a visual imagery. In the idea of dramatizing literature the word becomes a symbol, and symbol becomes a creative device for a director to materialize, even so many years later. It's interesting from a philosophical standpoint alone."

W.H.O. Develops International Code

By SALLY LIVINGSTON

"The money required to provide adequate food, water, education, health, and housing for everyone in the world has been estimated at $17 billion a year. It is a huge sum of money . . . about as much as the world spends on arms every two weeks.'

The New Internationalist
January 1980

The Student Peace and Justice Committee is still alive and well on the Villanova campus. We are continuing to keep updated on the Infant Formula Controversy, and the Nestle Boycott. 1981 is an important year for continued awareness of this controversy because the World Health Organization (WHO) is in the process of developing an international code of marketing for baby foods.

This code will be presented to the World Health Assembly in May, 1981. Further information about the current issues can be found at the Center For Concern, open Tuesday and Wednesday, Dougherty Hall, room 208, from 9-5.

This semester we are also studying the issue of nuclear weapons. Anyone who wants to join our study group is welcome. We meet on Wednesday, 7:30 p.m. in the Student Life Office, Dougherty Hall, room 202.

Society Honors Anniversary

By JOHN PACE, JR.

The Villanova Chapter of Tau Beta Pi, the National Engineering Honor Society, will be celebrating its Twentieth Anniversary in the Connelly Center on March 10th. Dinner will be served and new members will be initiated at this time. Some of the original officers of Tau Beta Pi will be invited to attend, as well as the present officers. The president is Candace Nash, a mechanical engineering junior, and the vice-president is Kathy Pezely, who is only the second women to hold that office.

Membership in Tau Beta Pi is extremely competitive. Engineering students who rank in the upper eighth of the junior class or the upper fifth of the senior class are considered for membership.

Dr. Ralph Kollner, of the civil engineering department, is the moderator and advisor of Tau Beta Pi. He is also the man responsible for starting Tau Beta Pi started here at Villanova.
